Love Your Enemies.

Angry looks can do no good,
And blows are death in blindness;
Words are better understood,
If spoken but in kindness.

Simple love far more hath wrought,
Although by childhood muttered,
Than all the battles ever fought,
Or oaths that men have uttered.

Friendship oft would longer last,
And quarrels be prevented,
If little words were let go past—
Forgiven, not resented.

Foolish things are frowns and sneers,
For angry thoughts reveal them;
Rather drown them all in tears,
Than let another feel them.

The Last Leaf.

The years can be compared to the leaves of a book, which contains the history of the world. Each leaf is a separate history, all bound together, by ever rolling time into one great volume. How important to the human race are the things written therein. They reach into eternity; and some of them are recorded in that book, which shall be opened, and out of which we shall be judged, in the last great day. And now the closing lines of another leaf have been written. How necessary that before the last word was recorded, we should have consecrated ourselves anew unto God; and cry, "search, oh God, and see if there be any evil way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." In looking back we find we have much cause to be thankful for the many blessings and mercies which have been showered upon us. God has been very gracious. But when we look into the inner chambers of the heart, what do we find? Have we grown any better in the last year? Has love and faith been increased and strengthened? Has patience had its perfect work? Have we any good works to look back upon? Our best works have been so defiled with sin, that we are constrained to hide our faces, and "cry unclean, unclean." "God be merciful to me a sinner." Eighteen hundred and sixty nine, with all its weight of joy and sorrow is past. It has borne with it the gleeful laughter of innocent children, mingled with the sighs of the aged pilgrim; the moans of the dying, and the expression of joy from the natal chamber. How many have in the last twelve months laid their loved ones in the silent grave! In one house the cradle is empty, in another the arm chair. Mother's room is, oh! so lonely; fathers seat at the table is vacant. He whose voice was raised in thanksgiving for the bounties of life, is with the voiceless dead. How many sinners, in the last year, have been convinced of sin, and cast their convictions aside; some have heeded the "still small voice," and are trying to make their "calling and election sure." How many have tasted the depths of mental anguish, and have been ready to cry out, "my God, why hast thou forsaken me."

Oh! the past year; what has it not seen of agony and sorrow, of poverty and sickness! The bride in her bridal robes, the same in the habiliments of the grave—The young with buoyant hopes and expectations, the same with crushed and bleeding hearts. What has it not seen of human suffering on battle fields, in hospitals, and prisons. No wonder that in passing away it waited, and drenched itself with tears. But Old Year thou hast a brighter, and better side. Joy and gladness have not been wanting in thy history. Thou hast seen united households, when smiling plenty has been a constant guest: where peace and love have reigned. Acts of benevolence, deeds of love, and faith, have been scattered through each month. Farewell, Old Year, thou hast borne us safely to the portals of Eighteen Hundred and Seventy. And now we stand upon the threshold, and with straining vision try to gaze into the New Year.—But how little we can see; it is so dark, we almost fear to enter. We are like a frightened child groping in the dark, for the hand of its father. We feel that we need protection and guidance. May the hand of Jesus lay hold of ours, and guide us all through the coming year. God in mercy has hid the future from us, lest frail humanity should sink, and faint under present and anticipated woes. If some on last New Years day, could have looked into the year that has now just passed every day would have been saddened, through expectation of the great sorrow that was coming upon them. The great secret of happiness is perfect trust in God; full and entire, without one doubt that he will do all things well.—To know no will but his. Let us in the next year try to believe, that God will each day do that which is best, for every one of us. Though we may be sorely afflicted let us remember that our present afflictions work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And that "no affliction for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous; but afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness." And that "he scourges every son whom he receiveth." Judging from Scripture and the past, there are a few things which we can anticipate with some degree of certainty. There shall be "wars and rumors of wars." The sun will rise and set. The four seasons will come and go, each leaving us its peculiar blessing. Seed time and harvest shall not cease upon the earth, unless the earth cease to be. For aught we know, eighteen hundred and seventy may be the year in which the Savior will stand again upon the earth. Who of us can with all sincerity say, "Even so come Lord Jesus?" God prepare us all for that great day. Dear Companion, carry for me, to all the brethren and sisters a very happy New Year. E. WILLIAMS.

That Unruly Member.

It is an acknowledged fact, both by saint and sinner, that the latter is in the "gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity;" living

> "Without one ray of cheering hope,
> Or spark of glimmering day."

It is, therefore, a part of his nature to sin, and he does it openly and willingly. The christian is restricted, and, indeed, strives against sin: but he is not entirely free from the annoyances of a corrupt and degenerate nature; for Paul says: "the flesh lusteth against the spirit," and "when I would do good evil is present with me." Hence the Savior said, "watch and pray." And it is only when we neglect this solemn duty, that satan finds opportunity to thrust temptations into our pathway. For our encouragement Paul has declared that "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." Consequently, through grace, we have power to overcome them; and in conquering we have freed ourselves from the guilt of sin, and we stand acquitted. We are made to rejoice in the God of our salvation; and the greater the temptations, the more joy we realize when carried beyond their reach.

But on the other hand; when we yield, and suffer ourselves to be instruments in the hands of the devil, we are sure to commit an act condemning in its character, or suffer the lips and tongue to utter that which is equally as sinful. And the shame, sorrow, and lacerated conscience is ours. We believe, however, sinful acts are fewer than the transgressions of the tongue. By this little member we become guilty of one of the most lamentable and cruel transgressions, of which, not only our christian profession, but almost the whole human family is guilty: that of speaking evil of one another, backbiting, &c. It is true, the great and the good, in all ages, have borne a share of it, yet that is no reason why we should be guilty of the crime. The poor, ignorant Hottentot, who roams the sandy wastes of Africa, or the Esquimaux, surrounded with perpetual snow and ice, may be excusable, but surely we, who enjoy the privileges and blessings of the Bible, are not.

That inspired volume teaches us again and again to "watch;" it is the language of our divine Master himself: and in the face of it we yield to satanic influences, and strike at the tender chord which binds brother to brother, and sister to sister, as God's dear children.—"These things ought not so to be." The Lord of life and glory says: "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." In committing this evil, the last feeble spark of love is destroyed; for no one will speak evil of another unless animosity, and ill-will rankles within his bosom.

Yet it is very often done without an evil design; nevertheless the crime is done and the individual suffers.—His influence is weakened: and the confidence reposed in him is shaken. By it a good name is sometimes lost, and a good character: a soul robbed of its innocency, and a heart filled with grief and sadness. These are injuries not easily repaired: the wound is deep, the stripes are sore; and like a secret poison, works incurable effects before it is discovered by the sufferer. And it is useless, because we can reap no good to ourselves of it, but often much harm. Labor to sin, and sever the ties which bind our relation to Christ, in order to afflict and grieve a brother! The soul that harbors such guilt may truly be said to be "possessed with the devil," for it is the nature of those accursed spirits to delight in the miseries of men; and till that be cast out, they are fit only to dwell among graves and tombs as did the possessed. Mark 5: 3.

The Bible proclaims against it; reason and judgment teach us better things. And after we have done all the harm and injury in our power, in this respect, what have we gained? Only the dreadful ire and vengeance of Jehovah. And in view of this fact, let us see if one deep, solemn, earnest thought, will not cause a cessation of this growing evil. Whatever may be the motive, whether fame, wealth, or any other cause; it is all lost to us when death lays his icy fingers upon the silvery thread of our existence. And remember, oh poor fallen humanity, that you are going with rapid strides to reap a dusty bed.—Upon every finger-board of life's journey, in unmistakable characters, it is written: "To the grave!" "to the grave!" And though hoary hairs should be permitted to crown our heads, and life's evening shades to gather thick around us; it is only through the tender mercies of God that we have been left to ripen for the tomb, and by secular demonstration, to prove our nearness to judgment.

And let us remember, too, that the victim upon whom our abuse and backbiting falls, is, likewise, going the way of all flesh; and is very likely to be one who already strives with cares and sorrows, and whose daily toil fills up the measure of his days. And after he has borne all our ill-treatment, it may be a solemn privilege of ours to witness his expiring moments: to see his lifeless body wrapped in its winding sheet preparatory to its final resting place. Aye, a body attired for the grave, causes deep and solemn impressions to roll across our minds. Who can look upon the cold, crumbling remains of friend or foe, and if ever he has wronged him, not call to mind wherein he has been unfaithful and unkind?—That mortal flesh had its temptations, its trials and afflictions, with which to contend: its battles were dearly won; and with all we have added to its cares and sorrows. Guilty conscience smites; and God, in thundering tones, calls for justice.

There is no doubt, that many upon whom our rage and slander is vent, have gone to join the glorified millions in heaven, who now make the heavenly arches ring with songs and hallelujahs to the Lamb. Their suffering time is over and they are now vying with angels in the songs of redemption and tribulation. We are spared, spared as living monuments of God's amazing mercy.—Let us then be faithful to the living; and wound not the tender lamb, nor add a furrow to the silvered brow.

Ecumenical.

The above word signifies general; altogether; and was applied to the Church councils of the early christians when every branch or diocese of the church was represented. The first general or ecumenical council assembled at the city of Nice in Bithynia, in June, A. D 325. It is known in history as the council of Nice, and was composed of three hundred and eighteen (318) Bishops, with many other officials. But a few short years before the Christian church had almost suffered extinction. The persecution of Diocletian (A. D. 304) had lain nearly every christian house of worship in ashes; and the humble followers of the meek and lowly Jesus of Nazareth no longer dared meet in their sacred assemblies for public worship. Many had suffered death by cruel tortures: they were roasted over slow fires, lacerated with knives and other sharpened instruments, crucified head downward, thrown into kettles of boiling oil, and tortured with all the devilish ingenuity of Pagan Idolaters. Those who escaped with their lives fled into the deserts; they wandered in mountains and lived in caves and dens of the earth, (Heb. 11: 38); and nowhere in all the domains of the Roman government did a man dare openly avow himself a christian. But now the victories of Constantine the Great, the first Christian Emperor of Rome, (whose conversion according to tradition was miraculous) had called them from their exile and hiding places, and they were met to legislate for the christian world.—Bound together as they were by ties of love, strengthened by suffering, and tempered by persecution; this first council must have been the purest, the wisest, and the best of all the great councils that have since been held. History tells us but little of the proceedings of this council. It was presided over by Constantine. Many heresies that had crept into the church were condemned.—"The Nicene Creed were determined and twenty canons were passed upon by the council." After sitting two months they separated.

The second ecumenical council met at Constantinople, A. D. 381. Judging from its angry debates and stormy session, corruption had already made strong headway in the church. "Gregory of Nazianzus had been elected Bishop of Constantinople, and it was to annul or confirm his election that the second council had been called." Violent disputes and fierce invectives characterized its session. It dissolved July, A D. 381. "The war of controversy had ceased; but the fierce disputes, the bitter invectives; the unchristian violence, and the infamous morals of many of the members of the second council" are still preserved to us by history.

The third council met at Ephesus, in June, A. D. 431. This too like its predecessor is noted for its strife, its angry disputations and the shameful want of decorum among its members. It is evident in this early age of the church that the Bishops and Prelates were actuated by the most selfish motives; self-advancement seems to have been their only object. Hence their angry disputes and violent anathemas, which would to-day put to shame any public assembly. True christianity was to be found only among the poor and humble of the earth; and it was these who kept the truth as it is in Jesus from defilement. The third council grew out of a dispute between two Prelates; and its general character may be inferred from the causes that led to its assembling. After a long session of shameful discord it was dissolved by the Emperor Theodosius.

The fourth council met at Chalcedon, October A. D., 451. "Five hundred Bishops attended, and Senators and Nobles were mingled with the priestly throng to restrain their tumultuous impulses."

The fifth council assembled at Rome A. D. 553.

The sixth and last general council met at Constantinople, A. D. 680. "The Emperor Agatho presided, a band of soldiers enforced good order, and the faith in the infallibility of Papacy was forever shattered by the conviction of Pope Honorious as a heretic." Many other councils were held after this, but they were not general in their character.

About this time the dismemberment of the church took place, and the whole church was never again assembled in council. Although the Roman Catholic Church called the councils that were since assembled Ecumenical, they were not so, as only part of the whole church was assembled. The last of these councils, known as the famous council of Trent, assembled at Trent, A. D. 1545. In 1547 it was transferred to Bologna, and again to Trent. It remained in session until April, 1552, when it was dissolved after a session of seven years.

Two years ago Pope Pius IX, issued a decree calling a council to meet at Rome in December 1869. Every Bishop in the Roman Catholic Church is bound by virtue of his oath of office to obey this decree of the Pope. This is the ecumenical council we hear so much of to-day. Many of the Bishops have already assembled at Rome. It will be opened on the 8th of December by the Pope. That any good will come of it is hard to believe; but let us hope that it will at least condemn the intolerant bigotry of the church of Rome, for in all human probability it will be the last council called by a Pope.

To my Younger Brethren in Christ.

First I will explain whom I mean to address by the term younger Brethren. I turn to 1 Peter 5: 5, where I read, "Ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder." I hope that no christian brother will be "grieved" when we use the term "younger" and "elder brethren." In looking over the above named chapter, I find in the first place that Peter gives an exhortation unto the "elders" in office, for such there were in the church in the apostolic age, and we are glad that there are still such in the christian church, and if we have come to an age when we dare not make mention of the terms "younger" and "elder brethren," without grieving some, we hope to God to prevent us from becoming "self-willed," and of "speaking evil of dignities," by "rebuking elders," and forbidding them to have the "oversight of the flock of God," &c. It is not every brother that is qualified for the office of an "elder," because there are important duties required of such, and God will not hold that man guiltless, who "rebukes an elder"

But I am off the text. In the second place I find that Peter classes the brethren into two classes, as far as age is concerned, and very emphatically tells the younger to submit themselves unto the elder, he does not say elders but elder, meaning the elder brethren. It is true the terms "old" and "young" are not used here, which would be false syntax where two classes only are compared, yet, any unprejudiced mind will at once observe that due reverence must be given to the elder brethren.

I cannot say as I have seen, that it is an evil that I can almost daily see increasing, of making a distinction between the elder and the younger; but I very much fear the evil is more and more increasing, of the younger rebuking the elders, and ceasing to submit themselves unto the elder. We, as the younger, even in worldly matters, often see different to the older ones, but it would be unwise in children to resist their parents' admonition in matters which they understood different, and if children submit themselves unto their parents until they become older, they will then see that their parents saw farther into the future than they. Just so in the church, if we, the younger, would submit ourselves unto the elder, when we see different on some points not plainly set forth in the word of God, we would learn (as numbers have done) that the elder often see further into the future than the younger. If the younger would always have submitted themselves unto the elder, the church would be purer to-day than it is, and mountains of troubles would never have been.

I am yet young in the church, but I was taught to honor old age in the world, and I am taught to do so in the church I feel for the old brethren, and judging the future by the past, I pray not to become old, but that God would prepare us all for the second coming of Christ. I will leave the subject for the present. I could rejoice to hear some warning from my elder brethren on this subject, and I hope they may yet give it. "Wisdom is justified of her children." Read the 244th hymn.—"Look to yourselves, that we lose not the things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward."

Where is Paradise.

On page 731 Vol. 5, of Companion, brother A. S. Chamberlain asks the question: "Where is the Paradise of which the Savior said to the thief: "To-day shalt thou be in paradise with me?" Immediately following the question an answer appears by brother Grabill Meyers. But another question follows in my mind, and that is whether brotherMeyer's answer makes brother Chamberlain any wiser on the subject. Be this as it may, I think the subject is one that will admit of much deep, prayerful, and earnest investigation. It virtually involves the question as to the state of the dead between death and the resurrection, and it indirectly involves the question as to the essentiality of obeying any of the teachings of the gospel any more than the thief did, which was simply to say: "Lord remember me when thou comest in thy kingdom." If, as is generally taught, and too generally believed, the Savior went to Heaven the day he spoke this to the thief, and because the thief repented, as is claimed, in the last hour of his life, while writhing in the very agonies of death, he was also taken immediately to Heaven, then it naturally follows that all others may be saved in the same way, thus virtually setting aside all ordinances of the gospel. Can we accept this view of the case? I, for one, cannot.

The first proposition that I will state in relation to their circumstance, is this:

The Savior that day went someplace, and the thief went with him to wherever that place was. This is plain from the text itself.

Now where was that place, was it Heaven? We say no—Why not? because three days afterwards, he declared to Mary that he had not yet ascended to his Father and her Father.—John 21: 17. If he had not ascended to Heaven three days after the crucifixion where did he go? and where was the Thief with him? have we any light shed on this subject in the testimony of his witnesses? certainly we have in plain and unmistakable language. "Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?" Eph. 4: 9. Mark the emphatic assertion of Paul: "he first descended" before he ascended.—When did he do this? we claim as soon as he died on the cross, "for he was put to death in the body but quickened by the spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." 1 Pet. 3: 18, 19, 20. Here Peter declares that Christ, when he was put to death in the flesh, his spirit went and preached unto the spirits in prison, who were disobedient in the days of Noah. Now where was this prison? It was in the underworld, or as Paul says in the "lower parts of the earth;" and there is where Christ went the day that he said to the thief "to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Nothing can be more plain, when we take these witnesses together.

Well what did he go there for? Why to preach the gospel to them that were dead, that they may be judged as men in the flesh. 1 Pet. 4: 6. From this last testimony of Peter it is clear that these who were preached to by the spirit of Christ, were not in the flesh, but in the spirit; which also contradicts the theory of most commentators who claim that Noah preached through the spirit of Christ; for let it be remembered that the antediluvians were in the flesh when Noah preached to them; but the spirit of Christ preached to their spirits, so that they could justly be judged by the Gospel, the same as men in the flesh.

Let us bear in mind that the Gospel is the criterion by which the world will be judged.—The quick and the dead, that is, those who were dead before the Gospel was preached, or revealed to the world, and a personal manifestation of Christ was necessary to ultimately prepare all for the eternal judgment, and to them that were in the flesh he was manifeshed in the flesh, and to those who were in the spirit he was manifested in the spirit; so that all may be judged alike. Now to my mind it appears, in relation to this thief, that he was standing too near the brink of death, when he applied to the Savior, to make his peace, calling, and election sure, in the day of his flesh, and as the propitious time for the spirits, who like himself, had been disobedient in the flesh, was then to come, he was classed with them, and whatever their opportunity of chance of salvation was to be, was to be his also; hence he was cited to the spirit world, where he was to be with the Savior that day, where the gospel was to be preached to him and the rest of the dead, that they might all be judged as men in the flesh.

Here you might ask, if the opportunity was offered to the thief, is it then not granted to all, as well as to him? We answer no. That opportunity ceased a very short time after it was granted to the thief, when Christ said: "it is finished." Then, and since then, the gospel is revealed to this world, and we need not expect to have it preached to us after death. But we say again, that those who were dead before it was finished had this opportunity granted to them, and the thief along with the rest. Christ died to save the world, past, present, and future, all will have a chance to be saved, but all in their own order; yet all by the same means, the Gospel.

In view of this glorious truth the Prophet David foretold in relation to Christ that his soul should not be left in the underworld, nor his body see corruption. Acts 2. Hence Christ in his glorious triumph declares, through St. John: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore. Amen; And have the keys of death and of hell," (or "the underworld" as the revised version has it.)

In conclusion, a few words about the word Paradise. All the authors I ever consulted give the primary meaning of the word about as Webster does: "a pleasure garden, a park, an enclosure," &c. But when we get hold of one who gives a general comment on the word we find that its meaning is shrouded with more mysteries than any other word in a thousand. It is questionable, by nearly all, whether it is of Hebrew, Chaldaic, or of some other origin. The locality of the place is also a question of much speculation. Some claim it is the Heaven above the skies: some in the sky above the clouds; some locate it above the river Euphrates; others on the Earth, and others under the Earth.—See Smith's Bible Dictionary with his comment on Paradise. But from the circumstances connected with the subject treated above, my own conclusion is that, among other meanings, Paradise is a land of spirits, and hence the glorious habitation of God, or the place of the spirits of just men made perfect is the Paradise of God, Rev. 2: 7; 2 Cor. 12: 4, which are the only places (except in the case of the thief) where the word is used in the New Testament to my knowledge. Both these places evidently refer to a place of spirits, in happiness and glory; but from the various circumstances connected with the word, as it occurs in the case of the thief, I am forced to the conclusion that its meaning is not limited to the upper spirit world, but also refers to the under spirit world, where the Savior and the thief went immediately after the crucifixion and where the thief took his chance with the other spirits who were there before him.

Answer to Brother Chamberlains Query.

Christ said to the penitent thief upon the cross, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." The brother asks, "Where is Paradise? and then says, "I do not think it is in Heaven, or, at least not in the presence of the Father, for Jesus told Mary three days after, that he had not yet ascended to the Father."

With a sense of the fallibility of my own mind; and, therefore, desiring the aid of that Spirit, 'who leads into all truth," I will give a few impressions and deductions, drawn from Scripture, upon this subject.

What the Savior said to the thief was evidently with reference to their souls; for the body of the former was that day to be laid in Joseph's Sepulchre; while that of the latter was very likely deposited in a nameless grave, and this the Redeemer knew full well. What he told Mary, was spoken after the resurrection, and before the ascension, of his now immortal and glorified body to the right hand of the Father; and, was consequently said with reference to that body.

The last words of the dying Redeemer were, "Father, into thy hands I commit my Spirit," (Luke 23: 46.) These words show that his soul, the second person in the Godhead, which, in the garden of Gethsemane, and upon the cross, "had tasted spiritual death for every man," and, which, having been released from that body, in connection with which it had thus vicariously suffered, was re-united to Deity in all his infinite attributes. The "Spirit," of the Son of God therefore, was, during the time intervening between the death and resurrection of his body, in the presence of the Father, and the "to-day" spoken of to the repenting thief, being a part of that time, the conclusion is that Paradise is in Heaven, in the presence of God.

All lexicographers, ancient and modern, define Paradise as a place of bliss. It was the name given to the garden of Eden, the happy temporal home of our first parents, prior to the fall; and, being a type of Heaven, when figuratively used, it denotes the eternal and blissful abode of the righteous. Our Savior tells us of no place of which this can be said, except the mansions in his Father's house.

Stephen, the first martyr, was permitted to have a vision of this glorious paradise before he closed his eyes in death, and he beheld Jesus there, "standing on the right hand of God."—Part of his dying prayer was, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." (Acts 7: 59.) That prayer was no doubt answered, and his ransomed soul immediately ushered into the presence of his adored Redeemer. To suppose his "Spirit" was made to occupy some intermediate state, is to assume that his prayer was unanswered and that Heaven was opened to his longing eyes, in mockery, God's word however vindicates its Author against this; for Stephen was one of those "who were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held;" whose souls the Revelator tells us are beneath the golden altar, that is before the throne of God. (Rev. 6: 9 & 8: 3 & 9: 13.)

Some tell us that if the souls of the righteous enter Heaven, and those of the wicked go to hell immediately after the death of the body, the general judgment is forestalled. Such forget that we "shall receive according to the deeds done in the body," and, that hence, it is but reasonable to suppose final judgment will not be passed, until after soul and body have re-united, subsequent to the resurrection. To remove all doubt upon this point, the words of Jesus come to our aid, "The beggar died and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died and was buried, and in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torments. (Luke 16: 22, 23.) If the soul of the rich man suffers the torments of hell, it is not presuming too much to say the reverse is true of Lazarus; his spirit is enjoying the bliss of Heaven, in the society of Abraham Isaac and Jacob; and of James, Stephen and Paul, and even of the penitent thief who died upon the cross; to whom his agonizing Redeemer said, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise.

If a man who prays, could see all that comes to him every day in answer to prayer, all the things bestowed which he had desired in prayer, and which would not have been conferred on him if he had not prayed, there would no longer be any doubt on the question whether God answers prayer.

"One thing I know."

"One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see."

Brother Henry; This eveniug I was visited by Brother M. and he asked me: "why don't you write for the Companion ?" I answered, "I will write," I opened the Bible, and read John ix; the miraculous healing of the blind man. In the 25 verse he says, in answer to the questions of the Pharisees :—"One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." The corporeal change of this poor blind man, is the spiritual experience of every real christian. He was blind but now he sees. He may know it. It extends to one thing—"One thing I know, that, whereas, I was blind now I see." The christian knows that he has obeyed God's commandments: that he has been faithful in all his ways—that whatever he has found to do he has done, and that he has done it cheerfully and joyfnlly. His heart has been changed, and although he may not be able to point out the precise time or place, where or when it occured, yet he knows that it is so. Who knews precisely when the day begins, yet one thing we know, that the sun is rising; it is dawn, it is day. We know when spring is arrived, yet we cannot fix the exact hour, nor day, nor week, when it will be summer. Whatsoever the combination of circumstances may be that will bring us to Christ, it is enough for us to know that the work has been done, and to acknowledge that He has done it.

One of the principle effects of this happy change is, the taking away all hatred and enmity from our hearts, and instead thereof filling them with kindness, and with love. O, how many beautiful examples of this spirit of kindness we have in the Bible. In the 38th chapter of Jeremiah we find one of these incidents. When the Ethiopian drew the prophet forth with cords he took thence, old cast clouts and old rotten rags to put under his arm holes, under the cords ? He let down this softening for fear that the prophet would be hurt. We should not only relieve but in a spirit of tenderness.—And when called upon for assistance in cases where we must refuse, let it be done in the same spirit. We have seen some refusing with more kindness than others have given; the melting eye, the soothing voice, and plaintive countenance, showed the spirit which was within, and which animated the inner man. Here is the changed man, however it may have come. The cases are different now to what they were of old. What a difference between the conversion of the Jailor, and the opening of the heart of Lydia; and between the revelation of the Savior to Saul of Tarsus, and to cornelius. Yet in all these instances the result was the same. How careful we should be not to disown persons whose experience is different from ours, while they walk as becometh the Gospel.

But with ourselves the case is different. How nice a point for us to prove ourselves, whether we are in the faith, and whether we truly can say: I once was blind but now I see. Mark what confidence this man had. He did not pretend to argue with those learned yet blind sophists. Yet he knew what God had done for him. He could not be mistaken that now he could see.

A christian indeed is not an enthusiast, and he wishes that his religion may appear what it really is: a reasonable service. He that believeth hath the witness in himself. He has received the truth in love. He has felt its power and blessedness. Such a man can be trusted even among infidels. He has a certainty, out of which he can neither be laughed nor reasoned. His heart is established in grace and truth. With him they are not mere notions but principles. It also qualifies a man for dealing with others in divine things. It excites his zeal and enables him to speak with earnestness, because he can speak without doubt. "We have searched it; so it is; hear it, and know thou for thy good." "That which we have seen declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us."—And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his son Jesus Christ. It also strengthens and encourageth in adversity. "I have much" says he "to humble me, but I am not without causes for thankfulness." I know that he has enabled me to see the evil of sin, the beauty of holiness, the worth of his grace. I know I love his salvation, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

For the Companion.

Properties of Salvation.

1st. Salvation is free. It requires no literary qualifications, no conditions—save those contained in the Bible, and easily complied with; and is without money and without price.

2nd. Salvation is extensive. It is prepared before the face of all people, and Jesus gave himself a ransom for all—gentiles, as well as for the house of Israel.

3rd. Salvation is pure. It not only contains pardoning, but sanctifying grace; and is designed to save us from all impurities.

4th. Salvation is perpetual. It will secure us life everlasting, where joy is unspeakable and full of glory; and shall never bring us into condemnation.

The wreath of salvation is justification, adoption, and sanctification. May we all be so happy as to rejoice in the hope, and experience of salvation.

HUMILITY.—I observe God hath chosen the vine, a low plant that creeps upon the helpless wall; of all beasts, the soft and patient lamb; of all birds, the mild and guileless dove. Christ is the rose of the field and the lily of the valley. When God appeared to Moses, it was not in the lofty cedar, nor the sturdy oak, nor the spreading palm, but in a bush, an humble, slender, abject bush. As if he would by these elections check the conceited arrogance of man.—Owen Feltham.

Christian Family Companion

Tyrone City, Pa., Jan. 1, 1870.

Introduction to Volume Six.

Five years ago we wrote our first introduction to the Christian Family Companion. It does not appear to be so long. And yet a great many things have transpired since that time. Then we were in the midst of terrible war, and everything wore an aspect of desolation. It is a wonder that we should have attempted an enterprise of the kind at such a gloomy time. Perhaps "man's extremity was God's opportunity." It appears to have been just the right time.

Five years ago we commenced the first volume as we now do the sixth. Let us go back. A small room on the second story is the office. A Washington hand press is made do the work. An apprentice boy and the editor, by occasional assistance of a mute printer, do the work. Four hundred and eighty papers are printed. The size is eight pages. The types are old and much worn.

To-day we commence the sixth volume. Come with us and see now how we do. We occupy three rooms, and are still cramped. A large cylinder Potter Press, propelled by a two horse power steam engine prints the papers. Four printers are busily employed in setting type, tending press, and folding and packing papers. The size is sixteen pages, and three thousand six hundred papers are issued. The type is mostly new, and the print fair and clear.

It will thus be seen that the hand of progress, success, and improvement has marked our way. For all of this we ought to feel grateful to God who has blessed us, and to our friends who were his willing instruments. Such numerical blessings ought to humble us before God. Whether they have had this tendency is best known to Him who knows our hearts, and who judges righteous judgment.

As we are beginning a new volume, we shall take upon ourself renewed responsibilities and labors, and we desire and invoke not only renewed but increased grace from above.—We pray for such grace, and solicit the prayers of God's people in our behalf.

As for ourself, and for what we can do, we can only resolve; we can try. We have resolved that, by God's help, our part of the labors of the present volume shall be better performed than any heretofore, and that volume six shall excede any of its predecessors in interest and usefulness.

We hope that much of our severe labor has been performed, and that many perplexing and unpleasant duties need not be repeated. Hence we expect to move along smoothly. We do not expect to meet so many storms from within, and hope to be able to aim more frequently at sins without. Nevertheless, wherever sin raises its target, thither our arrow will be drawn. Neither wealth, rank, or age can defend it against the sword of the spirit.

We desire especially during the present volume to direct our energies to the confirmation of the believers, in those truths that are most plainly taught in the Word of Truth, and wield our pen in exposing and confuting the most prevalent and glaring errors in the popular religion of the day; and more especially such as are making efforts to insinuate themselves into the Brotherhood. In this undertaking we trust we shall have the united sympathy and support of our brethren and sisters at least.

Without taking upon ourself any farther restrictions we now enter upon our duties, and offer our readers the result of our labors.

"THE PIOUS YOUTH."

The first number of a Juvenile paper bearing the above title, has been issued at this office. A number have been sent out, and so far as heard from this issue has given the best satisfaction. We are very much in earnest in this work, and the prospects are encouraging.

The subscription price is $1.00.

The Companion and the Pious Youth will be sent one year for $2.25. Subscribers to the Companion may add the Youth at any time during the year for 75cts.

We will also send the Youth and the Phrenological Journal for $3.00, just what the Journal would cost if taken alone. Or the Companion and the Journal for $3.50.

Visits.

Brother Peter S. Myers, of McVeytown, Pa., stopped with us on the 15th ultimo. On the 16th he filled the appointment made for him at our meeting-house near Warriors Mark. As we were very throng we could not accompany him. We spent a few hours in pleasant and we hope profitable conversation.

Brother John R. Denlinger, one of our first patrons, of Dayton, Ohio, stood with us over night, on the 22nd ult., while on his way to visit his afflicted mother, residing in Lancaster county.

The above notices should have appeared in No. 50, of last volume but were hurried out.

Brethren J. S. Flory, of West Virginia, and Daniel D. Sell, of Missouri, are now (Dec. 30th) with us, of whom we shall have more to say in our next.

The Prospects.

Our actual circulation for Volume six is yet undecided. We can only judge from appearances. The prospects are encouraging. Everywhere, where the agents have all reported there has been an increase, some 10, some 50, and some 100 per cent.—There is a general complaint of the scarcity of money, as one of the obstacles in the way of obtaining subscribers. We hope our friends will not relax their energies until every proper effort has been made, and all have had the opportunity to subscribe.

Brother Daniel Trump of Melrose, Ills., would receive it as a favor if some brother would give him the address of brother Elijah Showalter who moved from West Salem, Ohio, to somewhere in Michigan.

We learn through several of our correspondents that brother Heyser and his wife, of Georgia, are on a visit to Montgomery county and Philadelphia. Should be pleased to have them come up this way.

Answers to Correspondents.

GEORGE LINT. We have made inquiry about the book you have ordered, and are credibly informed that it is an infidel production; intended for a slur upon christianity. As we do not wish to disseminate the works of skeptics, we do, therefore, most respectfully decline making any effort to put you in possession of the book.

We suppose when you know what the book is, you will not desire to have it.

LEWIS KIMMEL. You can take seventy-five cents from any subscriber to the Companion, as full subscription to the Pious Youth, either for themselves or to be sent to a friend. And vice versa, those who are taking the Youth may have the Companion at $1.25. There is only one right way and that is to use all alike.

JACOB MACK. D. M. Holsinger's address is Duncansville, Blair Co., Pa.

MATTHIAS SWIHART. Do not know whether your article on "Hope" has been received, and we have not time to look after it. If it ever comes under our notice, it will receive the same attention as any other composition.

JACOB BAHR. Your subscription is paid to 7–16, and Israel Davis' to the end of volume five and has received his last number.

JACOB GOTWALS. At present there are poor prospects for me to go away from home to preach. Will do my best to come to Green Tree, before long.

JOHN BARNHART. You have paid to No. 8, Vol. 6, according to our books.

WM. HOLSINGER. The money you sent was received and placed to your credit. Why it was not acknowledged we do not know.

PHILEMON HOFFERT. We will send you the Pious Youth six months for your trouble. Will that be right?

WM. H. BAILEY. We sent you two plain Sheep Hymn Books on the 20th of September last. We suppose the books had been previously sent, and the order neglected to be cancelled. If you can sell them it will be all right.

An Imposter.

A man of red complexion, sandy hair, wearing a long beard "marred" at the "corners"; of stature about 5 feet 8 or 10 inches; speaks the German language fluently; boasts of literary attainments, and says he can converse in seven different languages; takes up an English publication and reads it, translating it as rapidly as he can ordinarily speak; is well acquainted with the Brethren in various sections; represents himself as PAUL KURTZ, son of brother Henry Kurtz, of Columbiana, Ohio; says he is in partnership with James Quinter, of Ohio, and immensely rich, being a joint owner of a Woolen Factory, Gristmill, and other real estate in Elkhart county, Indiana, has been traveling through Indiana county, Pa., on the ostensible business of making collections of some large sums of money from different persons. He represents himself as a brother. He has lost two fingers (the middle and small) of the left hand. His real business is as yet shrouded in mystery to us; but he is a grand imposter as has been verified by one of the undersigned who went to see and be convinced that he is not brother Kurtz.

SERIES OF MEETINGS.

At the Spring Run Meeting House, Miffin Co. Pa., two miles from McVeytown, commencing on the evening of the 15th ult., January, and continue one week or more.—We expect elders John Wise, Graybill Myers and others. We extend a hearty invitation to ministers and members to be with us.

The brethren in the Lewistown Branch Day Valley Meeting-House, also contemplate a meeting to commence on the 8th, and continue until one begins. They expect the ministering brethren and others to visit them. Lewistown Station is the stopping place.

JOSEPH R HANAWALT.

McVeytown, Pa

Southern Ind. District Meeting.

The Brethren in the Southern District of Indiana will hold their district meeting, the Lord willing, in the Raccoon Creek congregation, Montgomery county, five miles south-west of Ladoga, in the Brethren's meeting-house, on Thursday the 13th day of January, 1870.

Ladoga, on the New Albany and Michigan City Railroad, will be the stopping point for brethren coming by railroad. By order of the Church.

Gleanings from Subscribers.

The Companion is a light to my path through this dark world.

GEO. RENNER

I would be very much lost without the Companion. If you start the Youth I will be a subscriber to it too.

ELIZA BRANT

A worthy brother says: "Some say they cannot get time to read the Bible if they take the Companion, and conclude not to take it this year, and read the Bible. This looks a little plausible, but it is to be feared that there are other motives not so good as this, as they are generally the ablest to pay for it, and I fear the Bible will not be read more in 1870 than it was in the past year.

As a general thing the members in moderate circumstances subscribe more readily than the wealthy. I especially remember one sister who makes her living by hard labor, who, every fall, as soon as the announcement is made that I am taking subscribers for the Companion, will come forward and subscribe, and she will always pay in good time without being craved for it. She has also subscribed for the Pious Youth, without being solicited."

I saw a copy of the Companion one Sabbath day at the house of a brother, and I thought it was a very interesting paper for a family to read. So I thought I would subscribe for it and I want you, if you please, to send it right along.

HENRY R KEAY

I see no reason why we all who feel zealous of the "Truth as it is in Christ Jesus" should not be as much interested in reading the same in the "Companion" as to hear it preached by the living minister, yet judging by the fact that so small a proportion of those who throng our places of worship, are willing to subscribe for the paper, the above seems not to be the case. Perhaps they are so impressed with the idea of a "free" Gospel that they stumble at the price of a year's subscription, not remembering that the "laborer is worthy of his hire," and that we should "help bear one another's burdens and thus fulfil the law of Christ." May the Lord bless you in your labors to promote the welfare of his creatures.

We have been reading the Companion for some time and would not do without it for all it costs. I will take the Youth too.

PETER GAULT.

I am doing all that I can to get subscribers for the Companion. I think I am working in a good cause. The percentage you allow to the agents, I will distribute among the subscribers as an inducement, and if I can get the blank filled at that rate I will consider myself well paid.

A. PEARSALL.

I am not tired of the Companion yet. I still want it continued. It is a welcome guest to us. When it comes we are all glad for the wholesome food it brings for the mind.

JACOB FRIEDLY.

The Companion is well thought of in our family. We all feel interested to read it. I, for my part, think that the Companion should be in every family in the Brotherhood.

DAVID SHEAFFER.

I have been reading the Companion for nearly three years, and have come to the conclusion that I cannot do without it. A. B. HERSHBERGER.

I have been taking the Companion for one year, and feel more like taking it now than I did at first, for in it I find good and wholesome reading, which I think every brother and sister ought to read, and try to live up to the same. JOHN ARNOLD.

Brother David Workman, writing from Sublimity, Oregon, says: We have no preaching by the Brethren, and as there are so many calls in the Atlantic States for ministers to attend, we have no hope of getting a preacher to come out and preach for us, otherwise I would ask you to send us one. So we must be content with our lot.

It must be very lonely indeed where we have not the opportunity of meeting with the church of our choice in the capacity of public worship. We were impressively minded of this when reading the above in substance from brother Workman. In many places where the brethren have the opportunity of attending meetings almost every Sabbath, some of them become very negligent about attending, and many have to be occasionally reminded of their duty. Their actions prove that they do not know what a blessed privilege they enjoy. It is to be presumed that brother Workman, and others similarly circumstanced, would appreciate it.

Brother Workman, you need not be discouraged, but be zealously engaged in your Master's work. Look forward to the time when you will have a Church established in that part of God's moral heritage, and labor and pray for the same end, and the Lord will come to your aid and crown your labor with succes. Believe that the Lord has need of you just where you are, and with the talent committed to your care. Stand firm upon the pillar of truth, and have your light of christian uprightness ever shining brightly, that your opposers may be ashamed when they behold your chaste walk and good conversation. Be not too ready to combat with opponents, nor try to out-wit them; but try to win them, "he that winneth souls is wise." Let yourself be known to the brethren occasionally through the Companion. Give some account of your country religiously, morally, and otherwise. May be the Lord is preparing some brother to fill just such a field as your's is.

"The cause is God's and must prevail
In spite of all its foes."

J. A. SELL.

Brother I. N. Crosswait of Macomb, Ill., after doing what he could to circulate the Companion, says: "I do think that all who are able should support our periodicals. If they don't like all that is in them, they would do well to remember that all things here are imperfect, and all men liable to err. May the Lord guide us all in the way of truth."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Notes of Travel

J. S. FLORY.

LIMA, Ohio, }
Dec 11th, 1869. }

I think I last wrote while enjoying the hospitality of the home of Elder Jacob Miller, Portage Prairie, Ind. On the evening of the 1st inst. had meeting in the Brethren's meeting house near brother Miller's. Next day was taken on my way to South Bend by sister Davenport (widowed daughter of Elder J Miller). Tarried until night with brother D. B. Sturgis and Wm. Fiory, who are partners in the medical profession, and seemingly doing a good business at that point. At night had meeting in the brick school house near brother C. Wenger's, with whom we tarried until next evening, and under his roof we were kindly cared for. Meeting again at the school house, after which we hurried to the depot, and in company with Elder D. B. Sturgis, took the train at 9 o'clock at night for Goshen. Arrived there at 10.20. Lodged with brother Welsh, where we were met next day by brother D. Berkey and taken to his home. At night attended meeting in the Brethren's meeting house near Elder Jacob Berkey's. Went home with brother Levi Weaver, who next day, 5th, took me with him to attend a meeting in the Brethren's meeting house at Oak Grove; dined with brother David Hostetler, accompanied brother Weaver home, and at night to the meeting house again near J. Berkey's. A large turnout and much interest seemingly manifested at that point. Shared the hospitality of the home and family of brother Berkey until next day, at 10 o'clock, when we had another session of worship at the meeting house. After the services one was added to the body by baptism. It will be remembered that this is the point where the A. M. was held in 1868.

This Church exhibits a working spirit and living zeal for the cause, under the care of Elder Jacob Berkey and others. They have regular meetings every Thursday night throughout the winter season, which is a commendable feature and doubtless worthy of imitation. At that point I separated from brother Sturgis, whose company thus far was truly pleasant; and was taken a distance of 12 miles by brother David Berkey, whose kindness will long be remembered by me, and I trust forever by God, who is able to bless every kind hand and act of love. Meeting at night in the Methodist meeting house in Milford; good turnout of hearers. Lodged with brother Jesse Calvert and enjoyed the kindness of the family. Next morning went to Warsaw, took the Express train at 12 o'clock, arrived at this point at 4, where we heard encouraging news from home. Truly the Lord has been good to me and mine. Was met at the depot by brother Daniel Brower who took me to his home and kindly cared for me. Two meetings next day, in Sugar Grove meeting-house; met some old friends and relatives and many kind brethren and sisters. Lodged with brother Daniel Miller. Two meetings next day in Methodist meeting-house near Brother Samuel Nehers. Brother Jacob B. Miller, took me home with him and next day was so kind as to take me to Brother Samuel Chamber's. At night meeting near by in a schoolhouse. Next morning, the 11th, Brother Chambers brought me to this point where I am now awaiting the train. The church over which Elder D. Brower has the charge seems to be in a prosperous condition and it is hoped will mantain its integrity and fidelity to the ancient landmarks. Where love, humility, and true zeal predominates the cause must prosper. My next point is Covington, Ohio.

Brother Henry: A little Church news may not be out of place. I left home on the 10th day of October to attend meeting in Kanawha, Putnam and Lincoln counties, by myself. Attended ten meetings and baptized several. I believe if the Brethren would preach in the above named counties that much good would be the result. This was the first preaching ever heard of the Brethren in those counties, and the interest manifested was exceedingly good. Some exclaimed and said that the hill was filled or footed. It is 100 miles from where I live to the farthest neighborhood in which I preached, and it may be that some of the Brethren from Ohio can come and preach for the people in those counties. If so, I would say that the steamboats run within 7 miles of the meeting ground. If any of our brother preachers can come, they will come by way of Kanawha River up to Coals Mouth; then up Coal River to the Upper Falls. Inquire for Sparriel Meadows, or brother Perry A. Fisher. If any of the brethren contemplate coming they can write to Sparriel Meadows, or to Perry A. Fisher, Upper Falls of Coal, Kanawha county, West Virginia.

I here returned home and found all well. Thank the Lord for his mercy. The Church is in a prospering condition again here in Raleigh county. I expect to baptize several, next Lord's day, no preventing Providence. They still come over from the Campbellites, and Baptist Churches, and we are persecuted by them severely, on every side. But we are not discouraged, by no means. The more they persecute us, the more members we get out of their Church. My labors are very arduous. May the Lord send more laborers into his vineyard, to help build up zion. Brethren pray for us. To my ministering brethren I would say, a visit from any of you would be acceptable But above all, be faithful and do all the good you can to the saving of souls. Farewell.

WILLIAM H. BAILEY.

Raleigh, Wt. Va.

Letter to Brother Andrew Cost.

Dear Brother: Having read your letter in the Companion, and knowing you as well as I do, it has touched my most tender sympathy for you; and being in possession of a good share of love for the Brethren, which the Holy Scriptures so beautifully set forth to us, (and which I think you also are in full possession of, from the tone of your letter) I am moved to address you through the Companion.

In your letter you say if you could know of but one short prayer of your brethren and sisters, going up to the Father of all blessings for you, you should be raised again. For your encouragement then, I can most certainly assure you of one heartfelt prayer going up for you to-night, asking for the Holy Spirit to rest upon you in all its fulness. Although I am a weak one, and feel like crying unworthy from morn till night; yet I can but venture to a throne of grace, knowing that my Father's ears are ever open to his children's call. He says, "ask and ye shall receive." Now what more can I say to cheer your drooping spirits? I can but point you to the Lamb of God, that same "Savior" who has said, "He that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." The apostle Paul at one time said: "Oh! wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this body of death." No one but Christ is able; he is acquainted with all our griefs. Then do not feel discouraged. Do not fall by the way; lose not your reward! Oh! let us be careful that no man take our crown,

"For if we hold out faithful
A crown of life he'll give."

Oh! happy thought, to be welcomed to that Heavenly Feast, to sit down to the supper of the Lamb. Methinks I can almost lift the veil and see the saints how great their joy; can almost hear them sing the song that man redeemed alone can sing.

"Oh! land of rest, for thee I sigh."

May the good Lord accompany these few lines with his blessing.

Yours in sincerity,

RUHAMA RILEY.

Philadelphia.

Brother Henry: I will give you a short history of my visit to Minnesota On the evening of the 2nd of November I took the cars for Ft Wayne, where I met brother S Stump Thence to Chicago. Early on the morning of the 3rd took the cars for La Crois, where we landed at about 12 o'clock in the night, where we took the steamer. On the morning of the 4th, about 10 o'clock we were on our way up the Mississippi, and at about 1 o'clock we landed on Minnesota soil. Took the cars, in a few minutes we were on our way for Faribault, in Rice County Here we staid till the 5th, when brother Oblinger met us and took us across the country 14 miles to his house, where we were kindly received and comfortably entertained. On Saturday evening, 6th, we commenced preaching, in a country where the Brethren never had preached, and but very few people know anything about the Church, only what the few members (2 brethren and 1 sister) that had moved there from my old District in Indiana had taught them. We continued our meeting 14 days. Good attendance and very good attention. We believe the Lord was with us, and blessed our labors. We baptized 7 persons, 3 sisters and 4 brethren. One man who had said if the Brethren would preach forty years they could not convince him. We had one Church meeting, and organized the little band. Brother Samuel Oblinger was chosen to the word, and brother Sylvester Duran to office of visit. On the evening of the 17th we held a communion, which was indeed a happy season. When the services were concluded, we took the parting hand, which seemed a sorrowful parting; tears flowing freely, not only from members but others; and the cry was, come again. Brethren and sisters pray for them, that the Lord may enable them to go on in the way of the Lord.

On the 18th, at 3 o'clock in the morning we left brother Oblinger's for Faribault, where we took the cars for St. Paul, and Minneapolis. On the 19th we started for Mower Co, Minnesota. Arrived at LeRoy about 12 o'clock in the night. The next day (20th) we were conveyed to a Mr. Bell's, in the country, where we were kindly received. Word was sent out for preaching on Sunday and Sunday night. Here the people knew nothing about the Brethren. Preached twice. After preaching we were invited to stay and preach for them a week or two, or come back and preach for them.

Brethren, why is it that the Brethren do not make a stronger effort to preach the Gospel where they have not yet preached, seeing they could do much good? There are many who love to hear the Gospel in its purity, who do not hear it. So, then, brethren, be up and doing; there is truly a great responsibility resting on the Church in regard to preaching the Gospel to a dying world.

On Monday 22nd we started for Waterloo, Blackhawk Co., Iowa. Arrived in Waterloo about 12 o'clock in the night of the 23rd. Staid at a hotel, not knowing of the Brethren there. On the morning of the 24th we found some of the Brethren living in town, who received us kindly into their houses, and we once more felt ourselves at home. As they had not received our letter, there was no appointment. In the afternoon we were conveyed to brother Ellis Bugbley's, where appointments were made for preaching, for Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights, and Sunday and night. On Friday evening a brother came from Marshall Co., to convey us to their congregation. The Brethren here not willing for both of us to leave, on Saturday morning, 30th, I bade them farewell, went with the brother in a sled a distance of 42 miles, where I landed with my brother in the flesh, who is the housekeeper of this and other branches. Here I met a number of old acquaintances, whom I had not seen for many years. Had meeting from Sunday morning till Wednesday evening. We had good order and good attention at all our meetings. May the Lord add his blessing to our labors, and bless all our hearers.

On Friday morning, 3rd Dec., about 3 o'clock we left Marshalltown for home. On Sunday morning 2 o'clock, 5th of December, I landed at my brother-in-laws, J. Garber's, in Miami Co., Ind., where I met most of my children, anxiously awaiting my arrival, to weep with them over the dead body of my loving wife, who had been dead two days and two nights. O, what a meeting this was. When I had laid up such a store of news, which was only for a bosom friend. She had been anxiously awaiting my return to unfold her treasure to me, but alas! alas! she could speak no more. O! brethren and sisters, you can only imagine. Pray for me, dear brethren and sisters.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

Peru, Ind.

Brother Editor; In conformity with the request of many brethren and friends I will give a short sketch of my late visit to the "far West."

I left my home on 1st of November last, and on the third day landed at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Thence, in pursuit of a friend some distance northward, I was led through the district of our brethren at Dry Creek, where I was pressed upon to detain a little in the labor of the word; after attending two meetings, and a wedding, with the brethren, in company with Elder Jacob Waters, I was conducted by the brethren to the vicinity of my cousin, who accompanied me to brother Samuel Long's in Benton co., who is somewhat isolated in the Benton county branch, but full of hospitality and love. From thence by accidental conveyance, I made my way to Norway where I took the train to Bell Plains, Iowa. Thence by Pacific express, in company with M. C. Fisher, who, unlike some previous pretenders, proved to be a true friend, and accompanied me as far as his home, Gillmore Station, on the Union Pacific R. R. Nebraska. In an hour more I set my feet in the town of Freemont, where, by politeness of G. W. Dorsey, Real Estate Agent, I was led to find our aged brother, Hiram Hoff, who suffered much privation and affliction in the late war in Virginia, because of his faith, and in the days of his hoary hairs is a devoted sentinel in the little church of Fontinelle. He informed me of an appointed Council Meeting two days after, and pressed upon me to stay, informing me that brother Samuel Garver was expected. At the appointed time the brethren from North Bend, and from Fontinell arrived, but brother Garver failed for causes not yet learned. In the absence of an Elder the Church proceeded to transact such business as we could, but the main business of the meeting was postponed. We held a few meetings in the Courthouse in Fremont. On the following day, when we were assembled for preaching, brother Washington Wiland, of Shelby Co., Iowa, who had been summoned to assist brother Garver, arrived and participated in the services. Thence to Adel, Dallas Co., Iowa, where I found several families late from Illinois, who had bought land in the vicinity and were hopefully awaiting the time of possession. Here I met brother Christian Long, and learned they had organized a church a few days previous, and had established regular preaching in various places. I was then conducted to Dallas Centre, a new town on the Des Moines Valley R. R., where many of those brethren are expecting to live. Was much pleased with the locality of their choice. Thence, as best I could, with much privation, by Rail Road, by stage, and by livery, until I arrived with the brethren in Apanoose County. The elder is an uncle to my wife. My visit here has heretofore been noted in your columns. I then proceeded to Fairfield, Jefferson Co., in quest of some kindred and found they resided a distance toward the North. I then sought conveyance with some farmers who had been at market, and on the way out found the most of my company to be of the universal salvation belief. After some conversation I was inquired of for my faith and the reason for the same, which I gave as simply as I could. They expressed that was just the doctrine they were wanting to hear from, and earnestly solicited that I should stop and preach. After much prevailing I consented and they procured "The Church of God" meeting-house, and influenced out a large and respectable audience who waited attentively, whilst we labored to show the great necessity of all men being reduced by humility and babe-like simplicity to the feet of Jesus, willing only to learn of him and to act in accordance with his precept and command, and from thence to be elevated by the Holy Spirit, to that exalted degree that the children of men so much desire and hope for. A general satisfaction seemed to pervade the minds of the people, and we were made to hope that some bread was "cast upon the waters." This was near Germanville, Jefferson Co., Iowa. I then proceeded to Illinois City, Ill., to see brother Samuel Beaty and sister, and other kindred, who are outside the bounds of any district of the Brethren, and have not the advantage of any preaching or regular intercourse with the Church. We, of course, labored with them, and although we had a mixed audience composed of Mormons, Universalists, Methodists and others, the best of attention was given, and a general satisfaction was manifest. I then went to Burrettsville, White Co., Indiana, and visited my brethren and friends there, and assisted at a few meetings. Sojourned about that point for a week, and then in company with my young friend, Wm. Hood, I returned home

It is but due here to state that all the Brethren every place I visited manifested that love to the cause and to one another that sufficiently marks the children of Christ. In the course of my trip I learned of many churches newly organized and a general progress of the Brotherhood, but many districts are still much in want of ministerial aid; and that the exertions of the Brethren are by no means coping with other denominations in the mission. On this subject I shall try to write my views, suggested mainly from my observations during my trip, and offer through your columns hereafter. GEO HANAWALT

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to be all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

On the 3rd of December, 1869, CHRISTENA GARDNER, aged 62 years, 1 month, and 13 days. The subject of our notice was the sister of our well known friend Ludwick Gardner, at whose house she died She was one of those persons that was deprived of a sound mind, and could hardly speak so as to be understood, but she is now gone to the spirit world, where we hope she can have her full share of enjoyment. Funeral discourse by the writer.

D. D. HORNER.

Of Palsy, after suffering 4 days, in the Maiden Creek congregation, Berks Co. Pa,, sister ELIZABETH HARTMAN, widow of the late deacon Valentine Hartman, deceased. Aged 73 years and 13 days. The occasion was improved by Elder John Zug, from Psalms 9 : 10.

D. B. KLEIN.

In Shade Creek branch, Somerset Co. Pa., December 6th, 1869, sister SARAH HOFFMAN; aged 25 years, 5 months, and 7 days. She leaves a kind husband and 4 young children to mourn their loss of an affectionate wife and kind mother. Funeral services by Elder Joseph Berkey, Jacob Holsopple and the writer, from John 5 : 24—59.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset Co., Pa., December 18th, 1869, (supposed) of dropsy of chest, sister CAROLINE FIKE, consort of Samuel R. Fike, aged 30 years, 5 months, and 16 days. On the 20th her remains were conveyed to the burial ground, followed by a large concourse of friends and neighbors, but none seemed to feel the loss so much as the weeping husband, with his two little children. Occasion improved by the writer and brother Jonathan Kelso, from 2nd Tim. 4 : 6—8. C. G. LINT.

Of Scarlet Fever, in Manor branch, Indiana Co., Pa., Dec. 3rd, 1869, LOTTIE: and Dec. 8th, 1869, RUSSEL L., children of brother Hezekiah F. and sister Rhoda BURKEYPILE; aged respectively 7 years, 10 months, and 23 days, and 5 years, 9 months, and 9 days. Funeral discourse on Sabbath the 12th, by the writer, assisted by D. Ober and L. Fry, from Matth. 18; 1—5. and Col. 3. 1—4.

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE,
LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW
UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the powers that be, to give it the most unqualified praise, and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois.

THE
Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political Journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum

VOLUME VI. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, JAN. 11, 1870. NUMBER 2.

Selected by KATIE KEEFER.

Love not the World.

Oh! love not the world;
Heed not its pleasures;
The earth "shall perish,"
With all its treasures;
Its pomp and its vanities soon will be o'er,
The place that now knows you shall know you no more.

Seek Jesus the Lord,
Cling to him ever,
When once joined to Christ
No power can sever.
He died for you, lives for you, and in his love
Will give you "a place" in the Mansion's above.

He is your best friend,
Trust in no other;
He sticketh even Closer than a brother.
Earthly friends will forsake you, Jesus will never;
His friendship will last forever and ever.

Earth's kingdoms shall fall,
(Greatest and strongest)
Earth's days shall end,
Brightest and longest.
But Christ's glorious kingdom will never decay,
There'll ne'er be an end to eternity's day.

Then love not the world
Or aught it contains;
Heed not its losses,
Loathe not its gains,
With the heart's loyalty fix on the Lamb that was slain;
To live will be Christ, and to die will be gain.

Lay Members Preaching.

Jacob Lehr, in Companion Vol. 5, page 557, asks, "Is any brother who is not elected by the Church as a preacher, doing right, at times when the regular preacher fails to fill the appointment, if he speaks to the congregation. Or is it better to leave the time pass unimproved, until the regular time?"

The above came under our notice some time ago, and the present affords an opportunity of giving a brief reply. My understanding of the scripture is, that no one has any right to administer the word, but those who are solemnly installed into the office by the Church, as was Matthias. See Acts first chapter. When our Lawgiver was here, he would say, "go preach my word; freely ye have received freely give"; but when he departed, he gave instructions how to carry on his great work, to the end of the world. God always works through means. Moses, the meek man of God, was "brought up in the house of Pharaoh's daughter, until he became a man. He went out among his brethren to look on their burdens, and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his brethren. He looked this way, and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian and hid him in the sand. In this case Moses was not called by the Lord to relieve his brethren. He went on his own strength, and what did he accomplish for his act? He dwelt in the land of Midian for the space of 40 years. Then the Lord called him, go, and I will be with you. Moses began to make excuses. He was slow of speech, and a heavy tongue, &c. I will prepare thee a spokesman: go, and I the Lord will be with thee." Then the chosen of the Lord are the ones that are to preach God's word; but in case the minister should not fill one of his appointments, the time should by no means pass in silence, or unimproved. Cannot the brethren and the congregation be edified by singing the sweet songs of Zion; by mingling their voices in prayer for themselves, their ministers who are absent, and all men, as Paul gave direction to his son Timothy and others. We all have access to the mercy-seat. We who live in the far West had many such meetings, as brother J. L. alludes to; and we always made them profitable by the above means. Although we had no one to preach for us, or for the Lord to us, from a small band organized in 1866, there is now a flourishing church, with her ministers and deacons. I will submit this answer to brother J. L., and the readers of the Companion.

Life.

What a precious boon is life, how sweet it is. How man will strive to save his life temporal. Yet how unwilling he is to seek Eternal life, when it is within the reach of all; for all that will may come to Christ and live. Be not only made kings and priests unto God, but the Apostle John tells us we shall be like him. Why, O, why not turn, sinner, and live? Christ is inviting you by his word, by his servants, by his providences. He is saying "come unto me and I will give you rest." Why do you not come to Jesus and live; live eternally? Do you think you are too great a sinner to come yet? You will never be any better out of Christ. Or are you waiting until some other time? Beware, God has said: "my spirit shall not always strive with man;" besides, ere the rising of to-morrow's sun you may be in eternity, and then if unprepared! think of the solemnity of the great judgment day; of that day when the sun shall be darkened, and the moon turn unto blood. When the great men of the earth shall run to and fro, calling upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the face of him that sits upon the throne, and the wrath of the Lamb. O, pause, and consider, before it is too late! Think upon that little word, ever; a small word, yet how full of meaning. A drop of water is a part of the ocean; a grain of sand a part of the earth, yet ten thousand times ten thousand years, is comparatively no part of it[illegible]. Now, O sinner, how will you spend this [illegible] life? In happiness or misery?

Midnight Thoughts.

"Silence how dread! darkness how profound!" This is the last night of the old year; soon the sacred moments will be gone; one hour more, and Sixty Nine will be with the past. This morning we saw the sun rise for the last time in the old year; the moon in her crescent-like form retreating just before his resplendent beams, waning with the old waning year. This eve we saw him sink to his rest in a cloudless sky, and leaving behind him the old year We no more will see him rise or set in the old year, if we see him it will be in a new year, for the old is gone. The thought comes up in the mind, how many souls has this year carried into the world of spirits, and the bodies into the dreamless land of forgetfulness? If we may credit statements made by careful observation of the statistics of mortality, it is ten millions twenty-six thousand, or one every moment. Fearful mortality! man is truly like a summer flower that swaps in the morning breeze, and his life "as vapor that appeareth for a little season and then vanisheth away." And now in the hour that limits the time between the old year and new, one soul passes from time every moment, and every time the lever of the watch strikes the heart-strings of some poor mortal breaks in death, and when its silent moments are all numbered, three thousand six hundred more souls will be in the confines of eternity. How many are now apparently near their latter end? Within the circle of which I have to-day heard, my memory tells of three. Will they live to see the new year coming up? No: one at least is almost gone; two more trembling on the brink, and for aught we know their feet are now touching the turbid waters, & the "boatman," cold, waiting to dip the silent oars and hoist the sails so silvery white, to carry them over the silent deep.

It's now within a very few minutes of midnight's holy hour: how solemn its sacred stillness! What at this hour are the sons of men doing? Some sleeping unconsciously, as if the old year were not just now slipping through the portals of time! Only a few rods from me the silent attendants are watching at the couch of the afflicted waiting to perform the offices of affection to those in deep distress; not more than a few miles distant another scene is portrayed to the startled vision of men, and the gaze of angels. Here death holds his state; one who a few days ago was to all appearance in no danger, is now in death's cold embrace asleep, and the wakers tread noislessly, or sing the mournful requiem of the departed, while the hearts of the widow and orphans are heavy with sorrow, thinking of the lot that's now to be theirs; left to the cold charities of an unthinking world.

Tread silently for the old year in its greatness is now gone to the past? Watch carefully where he lies in state! New Year, be silent, thy dead predecessor is greater than thou! How many of us will see the end of Seventy? How many of my readers will be in that number? how many will lie slumbering in the dust? Think of this gentle reader, young or old! In the year that's just now gone, how many have gone with it in your immedi[illegible]vicinity? Look and see. Though I am young, in the past year I have heard of many younger who are gone. Then let us ask ourselves the question: will I live another year? I may. Will I die ere it has passed away? Yes I may. Others have died in the past year, I may in this. Am I ready for my change? The judge stands at the door; what's written in hose volumes that he bears. I'm afraid a dark account of moments wasted; of privileges abused; of Sabbaths profaned; of prayer neglected; of the house of God not frequented in its opportunities; of a soul undone. The soul cries, dread messenger turn back; let me have another year, let me prepare to meet my God; have mercy this once more. Let me live! let me have time to repent. Dear reader, is this your condition? If it is, before the golden moments of this year are gone, seize the glittering prize; secure a mansion at the Father's right hand, so if the judge come he may bear the book of life with your name enrolled on its fair pages.

Beginning the Year.

Preserved by the mercy of a good God through the past year, we have been brought safely into the commencement of another new-year. The year 1869 has passed into eternity, with a full and complete record of all our doings, whether they have been good or evil. It therefore becomes us to pause a few moments, in serious reflections. Let us one and all at the beginning of this year enter into an examination—ask ourselves the question—"how have I spent the past year ?" what progress have I made in divine life? how have I improved my talent? Let us remember that another year of our life is gone, and we have all its actions to account for, every one of which is registered in heaven, either, "for or against us." What then have we done for the cause of our blessed Master? What sins have been committed and repented of, what have been the leading objects of our desires and pursuits?—are the most important questions that can, and ought possibly to occupy our minds at the commencement of a newyear. If we have already professed Christ, can we honestly say that we have been striving to adorn our Christian profession by an upright walk, and a holy conversation. Have we endeavored as much as lieth in us, to live peaceably with all men?" Romans 12 :18. Has the last year seen us steadily and consistenly pursuing this course? If it has, then the year's record, registered in heaven, will be for us, GOOD. We shall have the answer of a good conscience and it shall be well, with us.

But your unworthy brother feels to confess, in, looking back upon the past year, and after thus carefully examining himself, with the faithful one of old, "For that which I do, I allow not: for what I would, that do I not: but what I hate that do I." "Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me, for I know that in me, (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing, for to will is present, with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." For continues he, "the good that I would, I do not, but the evil, which I would not, that I do." Romans 7 : 15 to 13.

This perhaps will be, after a careful examination, the true, heart-felt confession of many of my brethren and sisters. But if we find that much of the time of the past year has been misspent, what is to be done. Shall we remain idle throughout this year? No: let us double our diligence; let us firmly resolve that this year shall, with the help and blessing of God, be more devoted to the advancement of the cause of Christ, and the good of our never dying souls. Be not, "I beseech you" of them that draw back to perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul.

We have experienced in the past year innumerable blessing, from the ever merciful hand of our God, for which we should feel very thankful. He has given to many of us the comforts of life, and the enjoyment of health, peace, and prosperity. He has spared our unprofitable lives to the beginning of another year, that we may be better prepared to meet him.

But to some it has been a year of sorrow, long to be remembered. Loved ones have been taken away by the cold hand of death. When we look back upon the year that is past how many have fallen on the right, and on the left; some without a moment's warning, while others have laid on beds of sickness, pain and suffering. How many, who at this time last year, had as fair a prospect of surviving to its close as we had, are now in the still, cold grave! Why, indeed should be the inquiry, are we thus favored? are we better than others? No, in no wise. It is God's mercy that we are not consumed. Many are now celebrating the commencement of this new-year, with mirth and festivity, without one thought that before its close they may be in eternity; yea, an eternity of misery or happiness! How solemn, how awful is the thought! O, let us ever remember that we are hastening to an eternal world. One year after another is hurrying us on with an incessant course to that state which admits of no change—of no alteration. If we have improved the time, we may well rejoice that another year, or another portion of our pilgrimage is over, "and now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."

But if there is the least doubt of this happy issue—if our lamps are not burning—if we hesitate to adopt the language of the Apostle and say, "we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." It surely becomes us, instead of eagerly joining in the amusements of the passing season, to attend to the solemn exhortation given by the prophet Haggai "Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, consider your ways." 1: 5. But before I close, I feel to warn the reader, who is still living carelessly and unconcerned, about his or her eternal peace and happiness. If during the past year, you have lived thoughtlessly, and have had neither God nor religion in your mind, have formed no holy resolutions, no pious vow, as to the new year, is this year to be like the last, a year of thoughtlessness and folly? Is God to be again dishonored—the Savior again crucified afresh—the Holy Spirit again resisted—prayer and worship again neglected! Be warned against persisting in this folly; suppose God should swear in his wrath that time to you should be no longer; suppose the word should go forth, as it has in the year that is past to many of your friends and acquaintances: "this year shalt thou die." Think what must, in that case, be your future doom. Dying, as you have lived, in sin, you must inherit the wages of sin, which is eternal death; not having confessed your Savior before men, you could not expect him to confess, and own you at that great and coming day, when all nations shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Being the servant of satan, you must with satan reap the fruits of your wickedness. Thus God has declared and thus it shall be though the whole world be in league not to believe or regard it, it is plainly declared in the word of God, that, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die"—"To be carnally minded is death"—"without holiness no man shall see the Lord." I might speak smooth things, I might say "Peace: Peace:" but were I to do so, I should only deceive you, for "there is no peace saith my God to the wicked."—Turn not, I pray you, a deaf ear to these important truths, and do not make light of a subject which has to do with your everlasting interests, or you will "Mourn at the last, and say, how have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof. And have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that instructed me." Proverbs 5; 11, 12, 13.

And to you my brethren and sisters, I do most heartily wish that the blessings of God may rest upon you throughout the year on which you have just entered. I do most sincerely hope, that it may indeed be a happy year to you all—that you may be happy as individuals, happy as families, and above all, I do most earnestly desire, that this may be a happy year in a religious sense—that all who are already walking in the ways of the Lord, may continue to walk therein, and be happy in well doing; and that many, who are near and dear to us by the ties of nature, and are still out of the ark of safety, may be brought into the fold, and their sins purged out by the blood of a crucified redeemer. Then indeed will it be, in the highest and best sense a happy year; and then, too, will you be prepared for all those events which may happen in it, but which at present are wrapt in darkness. If prosperity shine upon you, you will enjoy it with a higher relish; if adversity or other afflictions be you lot, you will bear it with patience: if death be your appointed doom, you will be ready, "and to die will then be gain." Wherefore then my brethren and sisters, let us give heed to the admonition given by the apostle James, "lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness and receive with meekness the ingrafted word, which is able to save your souls." 1: 21.

Preach to Save and Sow to Reap.

"The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." 2 Tim. 2: 24, 25.

Being but a "babe in Christ," I will not attempt to expand all the ideas involved in the above text; much less would I presume to instruct those who have been commissioned by the Church to bear the "sword of the spirit," and to build up the waste places in Zion. I shall try, however, to be guided by the sentiment, and language of the dear old Apostle; and if anything is penned that is erroneous, or that gives pain to the heart of any brother or minister, the writer is quite willing to be taught more perfectly in the ways of the Lord, and is willing, moreover, to be considered as one of the "weak" disciples of the blessed Master, if not denied the comforting assurance that the offended one is a lover of his Bible, and must, therefore, remember the divine injunction, "bear with the weak."

I desire to notice a few things in connection with the manner in which some of our ministering brethren present the truth to their congregation,—not for the purpose of finding fault with our dear brethren, but in the hope of doing a little good in the cause of that dear Savior who has died that all—not a select few—might have life and that more abundantly.

There was a time when a special class of people could look upon the rest of mankind with disdain even as dogs—and dogs in those days, we believe, were regarded with much less respect than they are at present. That time has passed. The self-righteous Pharisee has been taught that God is no respecter of persons—that justification awaits the poor publican who can only smite his breast and say, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Since Peter's vision on the housetop, the Jew dares not look upon the Gentile as something "common or unclean," for God, the source of all purity, has cleansed him in that fountain, which, though opened up in the house of David, is free to all who wish to bathe in its lovely waters. When Christ was raised upon Mount Calvary as Moses raised the serpent in the wilderness, he drew all men after him, and as they turned their bewildered gaze upon that wonderful sight, were healed—healed of that disease which disobedience had entailed upon the race, and which could be imprisoned in the grave of no victim other than the Son of the eternal God. Oh! what must be the value of the soul, when such a price must be paid for its redemption. For such souls Christ died, such souls you and I and all men have in possession, and, in the sight of God, we believe all are equally valuable. How careful then should the minister be not to offend his hearers by presenting the truth in such a manner as to wound their feelings, and to create in their minds a deep-seated prejudice against that, which, if presented in another way, would be received with joy and embalmed in the heart as something most sacred and precious.

But to be more practical and to the point.—Some brethren stick too much to one thing.—But some brother may ask, "How do you know what is, or is not too much of one thing?" Bear with me dear brother, I do not wish to criticize any one harshly, but I do wish to speak a word for my blessed Master, and if one must be left undone I prefer that it shall not be the better.—But to proceed. Is there not too much of one thing, when the majorpart of a congregation becomes disgusted with that "one thing?" &, moreover, become pre-hardened, as it were, against everything the speaker may afterwards present? But it may be said, "we should not preach to please the people." Certainly the primary object should not be merely to please, but to profit—we however suspect that there is such a thing as profiting a congregating and pleasing them at the same time. We know that the latter can be accomplished without the former, but it is doubtful whether the former can be done successfully without the latter. The preacher who seeks popularity as his goal, has, no doubt, his reward, but there is no reason, we think, why the true minister, the saints comforter, the sinner's friend, everybody's servant—there can be no good reason why such a man should not be popular, especially with all honest, well-meaning, people, and more especially still with all who belong to the "household of faith." Then what must the matter be, when we discover an absence of popularity in all these particulars? Oh! we think that when this is the case it bespeaks a sad state of affairs for the good of precious souls, and for the growth and prosperity of the Church. Why should this be so? One reason we think has been cited. Too much stress is laid upon some portion of the sacred writings—very often doctrines not held, or not made prominent by other bodies of Christian believers, who by hearing themselves denounced so often are led to assume an attitude of defense; and when this is done the eloquence of a Cicero can hardly force conviction on the heart, or bend the "stubborn will." Should there not be more entreaty, more persuasion, and not so much denunciation. Will not a kind warning or an earnest appeal sink deeper into an open, unbiased heart than a harsh reproof will or can sink into a heart steeled against the truth? Kindness is a weapon that will conquer when all other weapons fail. Men can not be coerced into measures by the Christian minister, and no good can result from an attempt to do so. The servant of God must not strive.—Can there not be, nay, is there not much preaching that resembles strife. For example, when the minister can not preach unless he singles out some real or imaginary individual in his audience, and then makes said person the butt of his remarks—remarks that too often manifest the spirit of the debater, the man fond of strife and controversy, rather than the skill of the logician, or the zeal of a man earnestly dedicated to the saving of souls and the spread of the glorious Gospel of peace. Repetition may serve to give emphasis if skilfully made, but when not thus made it weakens the assertion rather than strengthens it, and begets a kind of contempt for both the speaker and the thing spoken.—The dignity of truth is lost with much protesting.

A Call to Conversion.

Dear friends; God hath a voice that will make you hear. Though he entreat you to hear the voice of his Gospel, he will make you hear the voice of his condemning sentence, without entreaty. We cannot make you believe against your will, but God will make you feel against your will.

But let us hear what reason you have, why you will not believe this word of God, which tells us that the wicked must be converted, or condemned. I know your reason; it is because that you judge it unlikely that God should be so unmerciful; you think it cruelty to damn men everlastingly for so small a thing as a sinful life. And this leads us to the second thing which is to justify the equity of God in his laws and judgments.

And first, I think you will not deny that it is most suitable to an immortal soul to be ruled by laws that promise an immortal reward, and threaten an endless punishment. Otherwise the law should not be suited to the nature of the subject, who will not be fully ruled by any lower means than the hopes or fears of everlasting things, as it is in cases of temporal punishment. If a law were now made that the most heinous crimes shall be punished with a hundred years captivity, this might be of some efficacy, as being equal to our lives. But if there had been no other penalties before the flood, when men lived eight or nine hundred years, it would not have been sufficient, because men would know that they might have so many hundred years impunity afterward. So it is in our present case.

2. I suppose that you will confess, that the promise of an endless and inconceivable glory is not so unsuitable to the wisdom of God, or the case of man: and why then should you not think so of the threatening of an endless and unspeakable misery.

3. When you find it in the word of God that so it is, and it will be, do you think yourself fit to contradict this word? Will you call your Maker to the bar, and examine his works upon the occasion of falsehood? Will you sit upon him and judge him by the law of your conceit? Are you wiser, and better, and more righteous than he? Must the God of heaven come to school to you to learn wisdom! Must infinite wisdom learn of folly, and infinite goodness be corrected by a sinner that cannot keep himself an hour clean? Must the Almighty stand at the bar of a worm? O horrid arrogancy of senseless dust! shall ever mole, or clods, or dunghill, accuse the sun of darkness, and undertake to illuminate the world! Where were you when the Almighty made the laws, that he did not call you to his council! Surely he made them before you were born, without desiring your advice; and you came into the world too late to reverse them, if you could have done so great a work. You should have stepped out of your nothingness and have contradicted Christ when he was on earth, or Moses before him, or have saved Adam and his sinful progeny from the threatning death, that so there might have been no need of Christ. And what if God withdraw his patience and sustaining power, and let you drop into ruin while you are quarreling with his word, will you then believe that there is a hell.

4 If sin be such an evil that it requireth the death of Christ for its expiation, no wonder if it deserve our everlasting misery.

5. And if the sin of the devil deserved an endless torment, why not also the sin of man?

6. And methinks you should perceive that it is not possible for the best of men, much less for the wicked to be competent judges of the desert of sin. Alas we are both blind and partial. You can never know fully the desert of sin, till you fully know the evil of sin; and you can never fully know the evil of sin, till you fully know, 1st. The excellency of the soul which it deformeth. 2nd. And the excellency of holiness which it obliterates. 3rd. The reason and excellency of the law which it violates. 4th. The excellency of the glory which it despises. 5th. The excellency and office of reason which it treadeth down. 6th. No, nor till you know the infinite excellency, almightiness and holiness of that God against whom it is commited. When you fully know all these, you shall fully know the desert of sin. Besides, you know that the offender is too partial to judge the law, or the proceeding of his judge. We judge by feeling which blinds our reason, we see, in common worldly things, that most men think the cause is right which is their own, and that all is wrong that is done against them; and let the most wise or just impartial friends persuade them to the contrary, and it is all in vain. There are few children but think the father is unmerciful, or dealeth hardly with them if he whip them.—There is scarce the vilest wretch but thinketh the church doth wrong him if they excommunicate him: or scarce a thief or murderer that is hanged, but would accuse the law and judge of cruelty, if that serve their turn.

7. Can you think that an unholy soul is fit for heaven? Alas, they cannot love God here, nor do him any service which he can accept.—They are contrary to God.they loathe that which he most loveth, and love that which he abhoreth. They are incapable of that imperfect communion with him which his saints here partake of. How then can they live in that perfect love of him, and full delight and communion with him, which is the blessedness of heaven? you do not accuse yourself of unmercifulness, if you make not your enemy your bosom counsellor; or if you take not your swine to bed and board with you; no, nor if you take away his life though he never sinned; and yet you will blame the absolute Lord, the most wise and gracious sovereign of the world, if he condemn the unconverted to perpetual misery.

There will be Peace in Heaven.

"There is nothing true but Heaven,"

Says the Poet. Another says:

"This world is but a fleeting show.
For man's illusion given."

How transient our stay here at best! How cold, and chilling the frosts of the unfriendly, and the ungodly, where no shining sun of Gospel day. When the home of the poor pensioner of Jesus is coming in full view, how the Spirit cheers and gladdens the weary limbs of the dying pilgrim! We are all fond of a comfortable home, a well provisioned garner, and the better part is our dearly beloved friend whose "kind words can never die," who every now and then pay us cheering visits, and whose smiles tell much of the joys of the contented. "Godliness and contentment are great gain, having the promise of the life that now is and also of that which is to come." My dear brethren, young and old, can we not dispense with our jarrings, our many ill-tempered words, our clamor, debate, and all of the carnal animosities? O dear ones, think of heaven! One of our countrymen used to say: "When angry count ten before you speak." Good advice. We would suggest: think of Jesus and heaven, for there is nothing true but heaven. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath. When angry, sin not." One reason why heaven is true, is, because it is called the abode of the blest," and "the Throne of God Almighty." One apostle says: "Let God be true and every man a liar." This is giving to God all the glory, dominion and power. David is said to have heard thrice "that power belongeth unto God." So it should be with his people. "The power of God unto salvation" is the ground of the apostles' boasting. For says he, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first & also to the Greek. Thus my brethren in Christ, let us be more content in our vocation, more forebearing, more submissive to the "Holy Ghost which worketh within us both to will and to do of his good pleasure, if we abide in the vine and the word of his promise. Let then our speech betray us not.

Come then, wise, and unwise, rich and poor, high and low, and bow at the feet of King Emmanuel and let us join in one accord to chant his praises as the angels. They cry, "holy, holy, Lord, God omnipotent." Were we to cry out from the depth of our poor souls: "Lord speak, for thy servant heareth," we should not keep up variance and sore displeasure unto our dear fellow watchmen, unto the churches.—Let us keep the word of truth and ourselves from idols of every kind, for they are increasing at an alarming rate!

Giving offence is very easy to do, but some offences go to judgment. "In this world they will come, but woe unto him by whom they come." Let us pray for peace within the walls of Zion. Let us keep peace at home, and throughout the realm of love, so that we may dwell in the realms of eternal bliss. May God hasten the day when rancor and disputings may never more come; and this will we do if God permit.

Grace and blessing unto them who are sanctified in Jesus Christ.

The Great Roll-call.

Dear brethren sisters, and all readers of the Companion; my mind is pressed while reading the spiritual droppings of the pen of others, to the great day of accounts which we surely all think of more or less; to the great roll-call when congregated worlds shall be assembled, and the general assises commence. Methinks I can view the order through the spiritual eye, when Gabriel's trump shall sound so loud as to wake the dead. Then the great call commences, for they will be coming forth all around. Why the very earth will be flooded with the rising dead, and the seas will drift her countless millions to the shore. And now the great assembly has gathered and the great roll book is opened! Oh! what anxious hearts, for this is the book of life and if our names are not found in this great roll-book we know the solemn realities. Methinks we will all be standing out side of the gates of the city, while the great Judge is standing in the door and calling out the names just as the Angel registered them, and as the name is called we see them stepping in. Oh! how anxious we will be to hear our names called, and step in through the gates into the city, where many of our loved ones have gone before. Think you not, dear reader, if we will be so happy as to get in, we will stop in hearing of the sweet music and wait for loved ones to come; for the roll is fast running down and each name leaves the no less and still the crowd is large and they will be getting anxious and crowding closer up, so they may hear every name that is called. For it is awful to think any should be so unfortunate as to miss their entrance into the city of our God. When we read the last two chapters of Rev., O how it pictures the scene. Why it makes every true heart thrill to think of those poor souls still on the bleak mountains of sin and folly. Oh for faith to give a substance to the unseen realities of the heavenly Jerusalem. We could dwell on the grandeur, and beauty, and bliss of the happy state here described, till we almost could sing with the Psalmist:

"Oh that I had wings like a dove,
For then would I fly away
And be at rest."

"Are we yet aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Oh has he not preached peace to those who are afar off, and also to us who are nigh, for through his spirit we have access to the Father. Can we meet the Lord in peace, or will we be like Israel of old, when they came to meet the Lord on mount Sinai? Oh; you, brethren you who stand ministering in the same capacity as Moses, be firm, be urgent in the matter; making ready for the coming of the Lord. Let none have occasion to say to you: why you did not tell us the coming of the Lord would be so terrifying.—Oh! if you had told us the trumpet of the Lord would be so loud, and still become louder and louder as the approaching Judge comes nearer and nearer, we might have been constrained to wash our garments, and have our peace made, and our names registered. Oh, why did you not take me by the hand and say come, come out from among those who fear not God?

How our minds do wander when we contemplate over the perfect law of the Lord. While I am trying to write, some passing thoughts concerning the great roll-call at the coming of the Lord, have carried my mind away into the past ages of the world. When the great revolting armies were in contest, it was necessary to have roll-call every morning and evening, in order to see if there were any who might have deserted the ranks, & if any name was called & no one to respond present, how soon he was marked a deserter, for which the penalty was the forfeit of his pay, and often his life. But what is the contrast here; one is having the name called and not present, to answer to it, while the other is present but not having the name called. How many will miss having their names called! We think there will be many, but I desire and pray that none may be so unfortunate. We have now come nigh to a close, in drawing this picture, as we fear our first contribution is being rather lengthy. The roll-call has now been closed, and the doors are shut. Many will knock and say, "Lord open to us;" but he will only say, "I never knew you, depart ye workers of iniquity." Oh the waiting! The golden moments are past, our days of grace ended, our kind friends have all entered, and those in despair are only waiting the closing scene, which will be death and hell, cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death. Oh, blessed Savior, give us grace to accept thy gracious invitations, then shall we gladly welcome thy coming, and say, from the bottom of our hearts, even so, come Lord Jesus.

Comments on a Paragraph in "Child's Treasury."

"Does Christ, the blessed Savior, come to Children?"

"Yes, he does. The apostle Peter says, 'the promise is unto you, and your children"

"How does he come to children?"

"By baptism."

"Does it make any difference whether a child is baptized or not?"

"Yes; it makes a great difference. Paul says, "that they are baptized into Christ," (Rom. 6: 3; Gal. 3: 27) Before baptism they are not in Christ."

I read and meditated, and then read again, the above paragraph. And then the idea was suggested to me, is it possible that I cannot see the drift of the above interrogations. I at last came to the conclusion it must have infant baptism as well as infant membership in view.—So I thought of trying its merits.

"Does Christ, the blessed Savior, come to children?" Yes he does; who ever disputed the above. Where is that christian body that says he did not. True the Baptist fraternity are looked upon by the infant sprinklers as being guilty of this crime, but we, as a general rule, examine more closely into these things than is desirable by the advocates of that doctrine. We don't deny that Christ came for the children as well as for the older ones, but we do fail to see the law as given by the inspired penman by which infants are to govern themselves, &c. And we are surprised to see a man who writes for children attach an answer to a query like the one first on the list. The promise is unto you, and your children. The promise of what? That Christ will come to little children? This is certainly what the author would have us to understand. By reading the foregoing verse we notice that Peter perhaps never thought of little babies, but had in view those who REPENT, BELIEVE, and are BAPTIZED. How many babies were ever known to have exercised themselves in the above?

The next interrogation is bringing the matter more to the point which was most deeply impressed upon the writer's mind.

"How does he come to children?" Answer: "by BAPTISM." How much would this answer have relieved my mind, in relation to baby sprinkling, if the author had given us chapter and verse; but as to that he is silent, and for the very best of reason, there is neither to be found in the Holy Bible, in all that John the Baptist says, and that Christ and the Apostles say of Baptism and its subjects; not one word directly nor indirectly of baby sprinkling.

We are sometimes cited to the following chapters and verses for proof of Infant Sprinkling: Matth 19: 13, 14, 15; Mark 10: 13—16; Luke 18: 15—17. These would suffice so far as number is concerned; and are enough to satisfy a people who have a catechism for a guide, but a strict Bible reader will say it certainly can have no more reference to baby sprinkling than to annihilation. The above passages of Scripture tell us that Christ the blessed Redeemer did come to children, and also tells us how he came; namely: with a BLESSING, and a promise that "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Think for a moment and you can see certainly the difference between the teachings of Matthew, Mark and Luke, and the answer above given by the writer of the paragraph quoted.

"Does it make any difference whether a child is baptized or not?"

"Yes, it makes a great difference."

This answer is backed up with chapter and verse, so we may not have much trouble to learn the difference between a baptized and an unbaptized baby. We shall at once look up the Scripture, (Rom. 6: 3;

"Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?"

Who can see a difference or an indifference in baptized or unbaptized babies in the above. Let us see what the apostle does say: "So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ." So many of us babies as were baptized? is this what the apostle means? If so, then I can see a difference; but unless it can be shown that the apostle Paul and the Roman Brethren were infants when baptized into Christ, it falls to the ground. We know of a certainty that Paul was a man and led a band of unprincipled men to persecute a religious people, unto whose number he was afterwards added by faith, confession, and baptism.

Here it may be said, Paul was circumcised. So he was; but was he circumcised into Christ, or baptized into Christ? the former made him a lawful member of the Jewish polity. The apostle Paul looked upon circumcision as a fleshly right (and not a spiritual) see Phil 3: 4. On the other hand we are taught that baptism, according to Christ, partakes of a spiritual nature. See St. John 3: 2. And they being baptized according to this rule, were made members of the body of Christ, in spirit, and consequently were baptized into Jesus Christ, and into his death; and then we say with Paul, in verse 4, same chapter: Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."

By this we learn that a new life begins as soon as we are baptized. We see this set forth in the baptism of the Eunuch, of Paul, and all others who were sincere confessors.

Who ever saw a change in a baby directly after its baptism, either in conduct or in conversation? Can you perceive any difference in a baptized or an unbaptized infant? And from the fact that there is no change wrought in an infant by baptism, I conclude they were not baptized into Christ.

And again we notice that all who had one baptism had one faith also. Examine the records of the Bible upon this matter. How is it with baby sprinkling. Subjects and mode are the same. They are all baptized when little children, and by sprinkling. Into Christ? The sequel will show. We wait until these babies grow up. We hear one say, I was baptized to the Catholic, and another to the Lutheran, and others to some other faith. Does this seem as though they had been baptized into Christ. They can say, "one baptism, many god-fathers, and many faiths." Because of these clashings, and the utter silence of the Bible, we don't receive such a dogma. So I conclude when Paul said "as many of us," he had reference to such characters as those that Peter preached to on the day of Pentecost; as many as believed were baptized." Infants are out of the question.

The next verse cited to is the 27th verse of the 3rd chapter of Gallatians; "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Who cannot now see the difference of baptized or unbaptized infants? Before baptism we are not in Christ, consequently the infants not baptized are also out of Christ.

This comes about as near establishing the last answer to the query in the paragraph as any can expect it to be proven. In the 26th verse we have the word 'CHILDREN,' and in the 27th verse we have the pronoun YE,—"as have been," &c. We shall now quote at length verse 26: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." If the apostle would have said, "by baptism in Christ Jesus," how much better it would answer the purpose of infant sprinkling.

Verse 27th. "For as many of you (who had faith in Christ) as were baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." The following verse shows clearly who Paul had in view. Verse 28th. "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—How strange that Paul did not add infants, male, female, nor babies. Then we could all again see the difference. But Paul is no better than the friends of infant sprinklers say we baptists are. He let the poor little lambs out in the cold. They must consider him a ruthless Paul.

In looking up the Scriptures in relation to the interrogation put in the paragraph, we notice no scriptural difference whatever. By watching their conduct as they grow up side by side, even there we see no difference.—The baptized conduct themselves about as badly as the unbaptized. And unless they repent and become converted, they will have to take their portion with the unconverted and unbaptized. In this there is no difference. I can find no difference anywhere. If there is any it is that the unbaptized are not as liable of being brought under the ordinances of men, and of being bound down to the creeds or isms. His mind can act more freely, and can therefore enter upon the threshold of religion untrammeled, being a free agent, making choice and practicing a faith, nucleus of which he can boast as being laid by himself, and is, therefore, not following the faith of a Sponsor, Priest, or Church.

I shall close with my convictions strengthened that the unbaptized have the best advantage, when taking the future into consideration. He is not as liable of setting down upon the lees. He knows that he is a sinner and that something must be done; while on the other hand, those who claim to have been immersed into Christ by sprinkling, are so very apt to rest their whole religion upon an order which can only be found in the writings of uninspired men, and not in the Bible. "The Stool o' Do-Nothing."

As we were considering for an explanation to the above phrase quite common among the brethren, we were made to answer what kind of a place "the stool of do-nothing" is, and we came to the conclusion it is somewhat like the state of Utopia, which is only imaginary and is nowhere. So it appears with the above named stool; there is no such place, nor any such thing as doing nothing. A man may sit by his fire-side, fold his hands and take his ease, and yet at the same time he is not doing nothing. "The stool of do-nothing" is no strange term, it is an expression not unfrequently used in writing and in speaking, although it has no existence. When a brother does not go to meeting regularly, it does not prove that he is doing nothing: neither does it prove that he is a new creature in Christ Jesus if he attend meeting regularly—thousands of unregenerate people manifest great zeal for their church and are regular in their devotions, though they have never passed from death to life. When a brother endures severe trials of temptation: when he is sorrowing under great tribulation: when he is chastened by the rod of affliction: when he is slandered and all manner of evil is spoken against him falsely, if even by false brethren, and because he does not push to have it proved, but tries to bear it patiently, and if he even sits down seven days and opens not his mouth to speak, like Job and his comforters, does by no means prove that he is doing nothing. And if under the said trying circumstances a brother is not in meeting regularly, it is no proof that he has fallen away, or is standing among the foolish virgins. And if even there be a few falling away from time to time, it is still no proof of the nearness of Christ's coming as some would indicate—that was always so, even when Christ was yet on earth, and in the apostles days, that some fell away. But we have other signs, especially one, whereby we discern the signs of the times: it is namely, the transformation of darkness into what appears to be light. So great is this delusion in our day that if it were possible the very elect would be deceived. Some brethren think when Christ comes there will be no faith found on the earth but that notion is either a weakness or a delusion; for if there is no faith on the earth when he comes—who, I ask, who shall be changed to meet the Lord in the air? If some shall be changed to meet him in the air, there must certainly be some faith found on the earth at that time.

Again it is a question whether Elders and deacons always do their duty toward those who fall away: whether instead of helping to bear the infirmities of the weak, and encouraging the disconsolate, they do not too often give occasion to the adversary; and thus, instead of recovering that which is gone astray, help to confuse and to scatter.

Some brethren go to meeting regularly, they live of the preaching, they visit the more respectable members, they succeed and prosper in worldly affairs, they have a smooth way of getting through the world, they give honor and receive honor, they do not read the scriptures much, they have no word of exhortation, they have no family worship, they do not get the Companion and yet they are mostly ready to encourage and support their meetings. I do not say that such members are sitting on the 'stool of do nothing," because I do not believe there is such a place, but I really doubt whether they have done the most needful things.

A Few More.

Quite a number of our agents say at the close of their letters: "I expect to get a few more names." We hope the may get not only a few but a great many more. We have now just arrived at the best time to solicit subscribers. So we trust the work will not yet be relinquished. Announce it, or have it announced at every suitable opportunity that you are getting up a club of subscribers for a religious paper, and invite the people to subscribe. Not only the members but the friends of the Brethren and their children should be solicited to take the paper. Much good may be done in this way, as the people will be instructed in the ways of truth, as well as receive exhortations to duty. We look, therefore, for many additions to your lists, and will be prepared to supply you with the first numbers of the year at least a month or longer.

Our Prospectus and Envelope.

We had printed for the accommodation of our agents and friends, a neat prospectus, or blank list, ruled and headed, which we enclosed in an envelope, with our name and address plainly printed thereon. These were sent out with No. 44. Heretofore we attended to that duty ourself, but this year, being exceedingly busy, we committed the work to the brother who addressed the papers, instructing him to send one to every name that was marked agent, and in the absence of any such mark, to the first name on the list. In addition to this we ordered one to be sent in every "single package," that is, where just one paper goes to a postoffice and is put up in a wrapper by itself.

It now appears that this duty was very indifferently performed, as would appear from the fact that a number of our working friends, who were plainly indicated on our books, were not served. In some instances it made no difference, as the persons who did receive them handed them over to the proper person, and a few others took the business into hand and did quite well. Others informed us of the neglect, and were supplied. In consequence of having printed and sent out the above conveniences so abundantly we expected to receive but few letters in other than our own envelopes, and therefore think it strange that more than half our letters have written addresses. Now we hope we will not be suffered to lose patronage by this neglect. We are still prepared and willing to supply all who have not been supplied, if we are informed who has been slighted. As our friends are working for our interests we desire to accommodate them in the best way we can, and assure them that they will suffer no intentional neglect from ourself.

Praying for the Pope.

The programme for the week of special prayer, for the benefit of the Pope and his flock, drawn up by a Committee composed of the Church of England, Methodist, Presbyterian, and others, contains in its items for Monday the following: "That they may be blessed with true saving grace, and delivered from all human error." Just think if God should hear their prayer, and deliver the Pope "from all human error." What would then become of infant sprinkling, for which the Romish Church is the only infallible authority? They ought make sprinkling an exception, or include themselves in the prayer.

Back Numbers.

We can supply several hundred new subscribers with back numbers for several weeks yet, having prepared ourself for a large increase. Hope we shall not be disappointed. It is not yet too late to get the full volume. Send on your orders, friends.

Debate on Immersion.

The retail price of the above work has been reduced from $1.15 to 75 cts. The publishers desire to dispose of the books as rapidly as possible, as they expect to lose money on them. We hope our brethren will make an effort to introduce the book. Every family ought to have a copy. We will send a copy prepaid for 75 cts. To those who will exert themselves to sell them we will make a liberal reduction when 25 or more copies are ordered.

Brother Holsinger:—There is a subscriber at this place that don't understand why it is that he has to pay postage on his paper, and as there may be more like him (but I think they are few) perhaps it would be well to say something in the Companion on the subject.

JOSEPH ZAHN.

The postage on the Companion is twenty cents (20 cts) a year, everywhere in the United States except in the county where it is published.—No one ought to expect that the mails can be carried over this vast country, and thousands of Post Offices kept open for our accommodation, all for nothing.—EDITOR.

Gleanings from Subscribers.

"By hard work I got one subscriber for you. We have a great many brethren about here, but they cannot afford to take the Companion; yet some of them can afford to have grand furniture, and fine clothing, take political papers, and find time to read them.

The Companion is a very welcome visitor in our family. We cannot think of doing without it, as we live all alone, and do not enjoy the privilege of meeting, and greeting our dear brethren. We wish to call the attention of any ministering brother who may think of moving west, to our country. We have a fine country, healthy climate, and a large field of labor open. We desire that some ministering brother might come and settle here and sow the good seed of the kingdom."

LEWIS LEREW.

Gilmore, Neb.

"As I am well stricken in years, having been 75 years in this troublesome world, and having had a stroke of Palsy, partly disabling my right arm, and affecting the whole system, and being poor, I cannot raise the means of taking any paper. I think well of your paper, with the exception of a few things." (Name omitted)

We will send you the paper and perhaps some kind brother or sister will pay for it. If not, what you have already done, with what you may yet do for us will make it all right on your part. EDITOR.

Brother Daniel Summy, of Pleasant Valley, Ill., says he has met with a a sad bereavement. His companion took sick on the 23rd of September, and died on the 29th of October, 1869. Her age was 60 years, 7 months, & 19 days. She was taken into the Church in Somerset Co., in 1832. Brother Daniel farther says he would like to have the Companion but is hardly able to pay for it, as his health is not good, and he is unable to work much. He is very lonesome, does not get to meeting often, and thinks he could enjoy himself reading the Companion.

"I must send my name alone for the Companion, as there are but few brethren living in this locality, and some of them (I am sorry to say) would rather pay for some novel journal for their children to read, than for a periodical that might be a help to the salvation of their souls." * * *

We withhold the name of the author of the above to avoid personal reflections, and allow our readers to make the application of the severe charge it contains, like the disciples of old, "Is it I, and another, Is it I," and then do as the proverb teaches: "If anyone speaks evil of you, think if he has any truth on his side: If so reform thyself."

"We have again been blessed with life and health to see another Christmas, while many of our fellow beings have gone to their long home, to reap the rewards of their labors here on earth. We acknowledged that it is all the mercy of our Heavenly Father that we are still spared to enjoy the pleasure of reading good news from the brethren and sisters, that comes to us through the Companion, and still wish to have your paper sent to us.

We would like to see a copy of the Pious Youth; we will be likely to send for it if it is interesting to the children. We wish to get all the good books and papers we can to encourage the children to read."

Brother Holsinger: By request I will try and give you an item of Church news, hoping it may be interesting to those who feel an interest in their Master's cause. Our Love-feast came off on the 16th and 17th of Oct. last. We had good order and good attention to the word preached. A number were added to the Church by baptism, and many more favorably impressed.

We have our council meetings quarterly, and we think it has a good effect in promoting love and harmony which is so desirable among the children of God. It also gives the young converts a good opportunity to learn the gospel order of keeping house.

Advance Apology.

It is possible that in making up the new lists, which required much labor, and some very critical, we may have committed some errors. We trust that no such errors will occur; but if we shall be informed, we will in every instance endeavor to make right that can be made right.

An Original Number.

This number of the Companion has all been written from manuscript, and is all original matter, even the poetry on last page. All the selections, with some other matter were crowded out.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Notes of Travel.

J. S. FLORY.

Left Lima, Ohio, on the morning of the 11th of Dec., for Covington, where I arrived at 2.30 P. M. Was met at the depot by brother Shelenberger, M. D., and taken to his home. Had preaching at night in the Brethen's new meeting-house in Covington; enjoyed the hospitality of brother Shelenberger and family for the night. Next morning brother S. Mohler took me in his carriage to Stillwater congregation. Had two meetings in the Brethren's meeting-house. All night with broth J. Mohler. Next morning brother S. Mohler took me to Newton; had two meetings in Brethren's meeting-house. All night with brother S. Mohler. Next day meeting at the stone meeting-house; funeral of brother John Rubert preached. After meeting parted with many kind brethren and sisters, and was conveyed by brother S. Murry to Elder Wm. Cassels, Dark Co., Ohio. Two meetings in the Brethren's meeting-house next day. Visited my old associate, brother Isaac Coal; passed the night with brother John Nisewander, who next morning took me to Elder A. Deatrick's branch, Montgomery Co. Two meetings same day; visited cousin Noah Flory. Passed the night with brother J. Warner—meeting again next day in the meeting-house. Went to see sister Rebecca Cool, who was lying sick at broth Brumbaugh's, and then went home with brother Deatrick. At night passed a few hours pleasantly at the house of brother A. Koontz, who married a cousin and former associate of mine. Next morning went to meeting at the upper meeting-house in Elder Nead's branch. Home with Elder A Flory, with whom I remained until next morning, when I was conveyed by a son of brother Garber's to brother Wampler's from whence I went to the lower meeting-house. Two meetings at said point. All night with brother Wm. Keplinger, who next morning kindly volunteered to take me to Dayton, which point I left at 6 in the evening, being the 20th of December, for Pa. Arrived at Pittsburg at 4 next morning, and at Conemaugh at 10 A. M. At the station met brother C. P. L. Roberts who took me to his house in town; meeting at night in the Union meeting-house. Next morning in company with brother Roberts was taken to Johnstown, where I took a look at the Rolling Mills of the Cambria Iron Company, probably the most extensive in the United States. Thence we went to brother Benj. Benshoof's; meeting at night nearby in Brethren's meeting-house. All night with brother Benshoof. Meeting again at same point next day; dined with brother John Strayer, who took me at night to the "Horner meeting-house." Good turn out. Home with brother Samuel Brallier at whose house next day we met with Elder Samuel Lidy, of Indiana Co., Pa. Meeting at night in the Methodist meeting-house; went home with brother Wm. Byers, who next morning, Christmas, conveyed me to the Horner meeting-house again, to a church meeting of the Brethren. Met with Elder Stutsman, of Conemaugh branch, and Elder Berkey of an adjoining branch. Brethren held a choice for two speakers, and ordained to the Bishop's office, brother Solomon Benshoof, and brother Samuel Brallier. Elder Stutsman intends moving to Iowa in the Spring. The choice for minister fell on brother C. P. L. Roberts, and a brother that was absent whose name was not made known. This congregation is large and seemingly zealous for the good cause. They earnestly solicit visits from ministering brethren traveling that way. They are ready at any time to convey brethren from R. R. Stations to place of meetings. Prompt attention will be given to letters addressed to Elder Solomon Benshoof or Elder Samuel Brallier, Johnstown, Cambria Co., Pa.

Had meeting on Christmas night in the same meeting-house; went home with brother Stephen Hildebrand, and enjoyed the kindness of his family for the night. Next morning crossed the valley and had meeting on the ridge east of Conemaugh in the Brethren's meeting-house. Went home with brother Roberts; meeting again in the Union meeting-house. Next day took the train at 5 A. M. for Altoona; thence on the branch road to Newry; arrived at brother Daniel Sell's at 11 A. M. Met with brother D. Sell of Mo., who is on a visit to his father. Meeting at night near by in a schoolhouse; also met with Elder D. M. Holsinger; passed the night with him at brother Sell's. Next day two meetings at Brethren's meeting-house near brother J. D. Brumbaugh's with whom we dined. All night at brother R. McFarland's who next morning early sent us on our way to the station near by; took the train at 6 A. M. Arrived at Tyrone at 8 A. M. Met brother J. A. Sell at the depot, who escorted us to the office of the Companion where we met brother Holsinger busily engaged in the duties of the office. Had the pleasure of forming an acquaintance with his kind family. At 3 P. M. left in company with brother D. Sell for Warriors Mark. Meeting at night in the Brethren's meeting-house. All night with brother E. Nearhoof. Meeting again next day at 10 A. M., after which brother D. Sell left for home. Meeting again at night. Had the privilege of forming the acquaintance of Elder Jacob Beck and family, and spending a few hours pleasantly with them at their home. At night went home with brother D. Goodman who kindly cared for me until next day at 11 A. M., when he volunteered to take me to the R. R. Station, and at 1.29 P. M. I was again in Tyrone. Meeting at night in the room secured for public worship by brother Holsinger. This morning I leave for James Creek congregation.

Brother D. D. Sell's Report.

I will say for the satisfaction of many of my friends and Brethren in North West Missouri, and elsewhere, that I left Clinton Co., Mo., on the vening of the 13th of December. Arrived at my old home in Blair Co., Penna., on the 16th. Enjoyed good health on the trip, but had a rainy time of it. From the time I left Quincy, Ills., it rained till I came to Altoona, Pa. I enjoyed myself at the dear old home as well as I had anticipated. Owing to bad weather, I rested about a week. On the 26th a series of meetings commenced in the old mother church at Duncansville. I tried to preach to my old friends and neighbors from the language of Cornelius to Peter: "thou hast well done that thou hast come," &c, Acts 10: 33. On the evening of the same day I had the pleasure of hearing my brother, James A. Sell, preach to us from the first part of Matt. 17, which afforded me pleasure beyond that I can express. Monday 27th, I had the pleasure of meeting our much esteemed brother, J. S. Flory. He preached on the evening of the 27th, and 28th and evening, with interest, and we trust with profit.

29th I accompanied him to Tyrone, or Warrior's Mark branch. Had an evening meeting in the Brethren's meeting-house. Here it fell our lot to preach, which we tried to do to a very attentive congregation. Our prayer is that it might be as bread cast upon the waters. To-day, 30th, we met at the same place. Brother Flory spoke from John 2nd chapter, 1 & 2 verses. After meeting to-day I left brother Flory and came to Tyrone, and now I am sitting at the editor's table, writing these few lines. I saw the one side of the first number of the Companion, for the new year, printed. We learned many things while here, of the troubles incumbent upon an editor. Surely, Brethren, he needs your assistance, to make the Companion what you all desire it should be We assure all its readers that we would not take his place at double the present price of it; and when I look around through the office and see how many copies of the Pious Youth are here on his hands, I am prompted to say to you that the work is a good one, and would urge brethren to send their dollars and let the Youth be sent to one of your children. It will encourage them to read useful reading, instead of novels, which will ruin any one who will lust after such poison to the soul. One poem in the first number of the Youth: "Beautiful Snow," is alone worth almost one dollar.

I leave here in the morning for Duncansville, where there is an appointment for me on Saturday eve next.

More anon.

Continued Report of Visit to Michigan.

GOSHEN, IND. }
Dec. 18, 1869. }

On the evening that brother Wenger left us, we had one meeting. 17th, held a Church meeting, and the same evening, a Communion meeting. After the service, held a choice for one speaker. The lot fell on Jacob Kepner. Also one visit member: George Kepner. Next morning, 18th, we were taken by brother Jacob Kepner to Charlotte, Eaton, Co. Took the train for Nashville. There met by brother Isaac Smith. Had an evening meeting. From there were taken by brother Smith to Woodland Center. Found the members all well and in good spirits. Held an evening meeting in the school-house.

Nov. 19, were conveyed by the brethren to brother D. B. Woods.—Found him sick, not able to be about the house, but still held our council meeting in his house, which was well attended by the members. Held a choice for a speaker. The lot fell upon Josiah Winey. From there we were taken by brother Emanuel Kime to his house, some 12 miles distant. Had an evening meeting in Kent, Co.

20th, Being Sunday; in the forenoon we attended a Mennonite meeting. Their Bishop rose up, made a few remarks, and requested me to speak in the German language. The congregation being all able to understand it except my co-laborer, D. B. Sturgis.

Had a meeting at 2. o'clock in the afternoon. Large attendance; preaching in the German language.

Same evening had a meeting at Fosters school-house. Met a very large congregation, which ended our labors in Michigan.

21st. We were taken by brother Jesse Blough to Lowell; there took the train for Grand Rapids, but the snow being so deep that the cars were delayed, we were two hours too late for the Pigeon train. Stopped over night at Grand Rapids.

22nd. Six o'clock took the train for White Pigeon, snow being so very deep, that all trains were behind time, but still got home that night at 11 o'clock, found all well, for which unmerited favor we feel to thank God.

If any brethren should feel like visiting the brethren in Michigan they will find brother Jacob Kepner, 7 miles north east from Charlotte, Eaton, Co.; brother Isaac Smith, 6 miles north of Nashville, Barry Co.; brother D. M. Wood, 7 miles West from Hastings, and one mile north from Carlton Center, in Barry Co.; and brother Emanuel Kime and Jesse Blough, 7 miles south east from Lowell, Kent Co.

JACOB BERKEY.
D. B. STURGIS.

Brother Holsinger: The brethren at Dodgertown have, through the mercies of a kind God, been permitted to have another season of rejoicing. Brethren Davis Yonce of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, and Geo. Cripe, of Washing branch, in this (Kosciusko) county, were with us, and held forth to the dying world the great truths of the Bible, in a very impressive manner. Two of our dear young friends waded with brother Cripe into the cold stream and were baptized "for (not because of) the remission of sins," and were made to rejoice, inasmuch as they have now within them the evidence that they are God-favored children, as it were, from Death unto Life and Immortality. O may they ever stand fast to the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free. May our dear Father give them grace sufficient to withstand the storms of temptation which they will have to encounter. Dear brethren; will you not pray the Lord that these lambs of the fold may nevermore be entangled with the yoke of bondage? O, will you not ask him to work mightily upon the hearts of those who have been made to feel the bondage of sin, and make them willing to throw off the heavy yoke, and begin to wear the easy yoke of Jesus Christ our Lord? Wake up, dear brethren, and be lively in your Master's service.

Letter from Oregon.

LA GRAND, OREGON. }
June 27th 1869. }

F. P. LŒHR;

Dear brother; I received your very kind letter about two weeks ago. I was very glad to hear from you and to learn that you were still in the land and amongst the living, and blessed with a reasonable portion of health. Your kind advice was thankfully received, and I hope to be profited thereby, I know that we all need a little refreshing now and then, in order that we may prosper in this life, in things pertaining to life immortal. We are living here in this beautiful valley, away out west, among the mountains; and as a community are scarcely six years old. We have a number of denominations fully represented. They have their appointments for preaching throughout this valley, and not this valley only, but all through the west and mines of California, Oregon, Idaho, Mon-and from 7 to 20 miles in width; settled with people from all parts of the world. There are five towns or villages; 5 large grist mills, 6 saw-mills, quite a number of school houses. La Grand has a very fine church owned by the Methodist Episcopal church. We have a beautiful mild climate in summer, generally good deal of snow in winter, and a very healthy country; splendid water and timber, and land can be bought cheap, or had by setting on it; provisions and goods of all kinds cheap as elsewhere. Stock of all kinds brings good prices. Times rather dull in general, owing to the scarcity of water to work the mines, although there is a great deal of gold taken out this year. The crops here are rather short this season. There are a great many emigrants coming to this country this summer. We have a good prospect for a branch rail road through this valley, to run from Salt Lake to Puget Sound on the Pacific coast. It is already surveyed and the probability is that it will be built within the next three years. At present we are four hundred miles from rail road. We have a daily line of stage running from the Columbia River to Salt Lake, making the trip of 500 miles in five days. We are all in good health, hoping this little missive will find you and your family all in the enjoyment of good health, the best of God's blessings. We always acknowledge our heavenly Father as our Benefactor and Preserver, and try to thank him for all things that we receive at his hands. With an assurance that he fulfils all his promises we ask him for what we need. May the grace and ever blessed spirit rest and abide with you and us all and all God's Israel elsewhere, is the prayer of your unworthy brother and pupil.

I. W. DICKEY.

Dec. 16th, 1868.

Brother Henry: the above from the eldest son of Elias Dickey, of Ashland, Ohio, was received sometime ago, and to-day fell into my hands again, and I thought it might be interesting to the readers of the Companion to hear the bleatings of the lambs of the flock. Oh how many there are of such! So I send the same, with a little more of my scribbling, which was done in my lonely situation, not being able to perform physical labor.

F. P. LOEHR.

A Letter to Daniel and Nancy Studabaker.

My dearly beloved brother and sister in Christ: I wrote to you once before, and never got an answer, and never heard anything from you except what brother Wolf wrote in the Companion, that he was at your place. I think that you have the same to contend with that I have, for we are surrounded by all kind of people, and we have a great work to perform, and many trials and temptations to endure, but we have the assurance in God's word, that we are not tempted above what we are able to bear. So let us not shrink from our duty or forget to pray one for another, and pray the Lord that he may strengthen us that we may not get weary in well-doing, but that we may hold out faithful to our end.

I had the pleasure of once more visiting our old homestead, some time ago, and my thoughts wandered back to childhood days. Well do I remember the time when father, mother, brothers and sisters, fourteen of a family, surrounded the table and enjoyed the good fruits of the earth.—But where are they now. There are only two living in the county, a brother and a sister. Father and mother, and two of the sisters are gone to their reward, and the rest are scattered from Pennsylvania to California, and we cannot expect to come together in this world again, but if we put our trust in God and keep his commandments, we have the promise to meet again where we shall never part, where all tears will be wiped from our eyes. So let us more earnestly contend for the truth which is the word of God, and obey it.

While I was there, I also visited the little graveyard, where many of the friends are sleeping silently, till the time when they must be changed and come forth to meet their God.—But how true is the saying of the poet,

"The dead forgotten lie."

This was evident from the briars and thorns that have been allowed to grow over the graves before me, and I have to think if they were to rise from their graves while I was standing there, I would have to blush with shame for the neglect their graves had received. And how many graveyards do we see neglected! I fear it is wrong in the sight of God. I gave orders to have it cleaned, and I hope those living near will attend to it hereafter.

The friends were all well and so are we. I remain your brother,

NOAH B. BLAUGH.

Proposed Visit.

Brother Holsinger: Brother J. D. Trostle and myself intend to start on a visit of love to our brethren as follows:

On the evening of the 3rd of Feb., we will be with the brethren in Middletown Valley, at Grossnickle's; also on the morning of the 4th. In the evening (4th) in the Beaver Creek congregation, remaining till noon of the 6th. In the evening (6th) at Antietam, remaining until noon of the 9th. Evening of 9th in Falling Spring congregation, remaining until morning of the 11th. With the brethren at Back Creek on the evening of the 11th, remaining until noon of the 13th. Evening of the 13th at Welsh Run or Broadfording congregation, remaining until noon of the 15th; thence to the Manor congregation same evening, remaining until the morning of the 17th. This will we do if the Lord permits. Not knowing the addresses of all the brethren we take this method of informing them, and hope that none of our dear brethren will judge or condemn us for so doing. Nay we all labor for the good of souls in the cause of our Master. We want an interest in the prayers of our brethren.

Graybill Myers' Report.

TYRONE, PA.)
Jan. 6th, 1870.)

Returned so far toward home safely, from our visit to Montgomery county, Pa. Held meetings as follows:

Commencing at Norristown, four meetings, in the new meeting-house, built by the Brethren, and which was dedicated on Saturday evening by the first meeting. The brethren living in Norristown wish to have the Brotherhood informed that they are now ready for meetings, inviting the ministers, and members to stop with them. Both languages are acceptable. Then we went to Skippack; held 3 meetings at Gotwals. Thence to Coventry, Chester Co.; had 4 meetings. This is the congregation where John Price resided, known by the Brotherhood 50 years ago. Thence to Mingo, another branch of the Indian Creek Church; had 5 meetings. Thence to Indian Creek, where the Church was first organized, known as the Indian Creek Church. Three meetings at this place. Thence to Springfield, another branch of the Indian Creek Church, Lehigh Co.; had 4 meetings. Thence to Hatfield, another branch of the same Church; had 5 meetings. Four meetings were held in Bethlehem, the place where the Moravians first settled. From that field to the city of Philadelphia; had one meeting there. These meetings were all attended with interest. Brother John W. Brumbaugh was my traveling companion on this mission of love. Our thanks to God, for the kindness shown to us by the brethren and sisters, during the mission. May God grant, though absented from one another in body, that we may remain united in spirit.

Farewell brethren, farewell, sisters,
Till we all shall meet again.

Proposed Visit.

I propose to pay a visit to Germantown, where the first Church of the Brethren was organized. I expect to leave home on Thursday, the 3rd of February, and go to Lancaster City the first day. The 4th to Philadelphia, and the 5th to Germantown. Commence meeting on the evening of the 5th at Germantown. Brother Riner will meet me there on Monday, the 7th. Brother John H. Umstead expected to be with us at the time.

This will we do if God permit.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Ervin Creek congregation, Dunn Co., Wisconsin, November 5th, 1869, son of J. J. and Lucinda BAILEY; aged 2 years, 8 months, and 5 days.

The child was riding in the wagon with its father, and was standing in the front end of the wagon box, when the father lashed one of the horses, causing it to kick, and striking the little boy upon the head, and fractured the skull so that the brain came out. In this condition he lived three weeks to the hour. Funeral services by brother John Pipinger and others. Hymn Moving. Two columns of obituaries crowded out.

THE BEST IN THE WORLD!

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

$1,500 Cash. For 1870. $1,500 Cash.

A Valuable Premium for All.

This splendidly illustrated weekly Journal of Popular Science, Mechanics, Inventions, Engineering, Chemistry, Architecture, Agriculture and the kindred arts, entered its Twenty Fifth Year on the first of January, having a circulation far exceeding that of any similar journal now published.

The Editorial Department of the Scientific American is very ably conducted, and some of the most popular writers in this country and Europe are contributors. Every number has 16 imperial pages, embellished with fine Engravings of Machinery, New Inventions, Tools for the Workshop, Farm and Household, Engineering Works, Dwelling Houses, Public Buildings.

A journal of so much intrinsic value, at the low price of $3 a year ought to have, in this thriving country, a Million Readers.

Whoever reads the Scientific American is entertained and instructed, without being bothered with hard words or dry details.

TO INVENTORS AND MECHANICS

this journal is of special value, as it contains a weekly report of all patents issued at Washington, with copious notices of the leading American and European Inventions. The Publishers of the Scientific American are the most extensive Patent Solicitors in the world, and have unequalled facilities for gathering a complete knowledge of the progress of Invention and Discovery throughout the world: and with a view to mark the quarter of a century, during which this journal has held the first place in Scientific and Mechanical Literature, the Publishers will issue on January first the large and splendid Steel Engraving by John Sartain of Philadelphia, entitled:

"Men of Progress—American Inventors," the plate costing nearly $4,000 to engrave, and contains nineteen likenesses of illustrious American Inventors. It is a superb work of art.

Single pictures, printed on heavy paper, will be sold at $10, but any one subscribing for the Scientific American the paper will be sent for one year, together with a copy of the engraving, on receipt of $10. The picture is also offered as a premium for clubs of subscribers.

$1,500 CASH PRIZES.

In addition to the above premium, the Publishers will pay $1,500 in Cash Prizes for lists of subscribers sent in by February 10, 1870. Persons who want to compete for these prizes, should send at once for prospectus and blanks for names.

Terms of Scientific American, one year $3.00; six months $1.50; four months $1.00. To clubs of 10 and upwards, terms $2.50 per annum. Specimen copies sent free. Address the Publishers MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

How to get Patents.—A pamphlet of Patent Laws and instruction to Inventors sent free.

There who are prejudiced against anything would know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and relief is always what we it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 59, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full consecration to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all necessity for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political Journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Love.

Love is the sweetest bud that blows,
  Its beauty never dies ;
On earth among the saints it grows,
  And ripens in the skies.

Pure glowing red and spotless white
  Its perfect colors are ;
In Jesus all its sweets unite
  And looks divinely fair.

The finest flower that ever blowed,
  Opened on Calvary's tree ;
When Jesus' blood so freely flowed
  For love of worthless me.

Its deepest hew, its richest smell
  No mortal sense could bear ;
Nor could the world or angels tell
  How bright its colors are.

Earth could not hold so rich a flower
  Nor half its beauty show,
Nor could the world and satan's power
  Confine its sweets below.

On Canaan's banks supremely fair
  This flower of wonder blooms ;
Transplanted to its native air,
  And all the shores perfumes.

But not to Canaan's shores confined ;
  The seeds that from it blow
Take root within the human mind
  And scents the church below.

And soon on yonder bank above
  Shall every blossom here
Appear a full ripe flower of love,
  Like him transplanted there.

For the Companion.

Perilous Times.

"This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good. Traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God ; having a form of godliness but denying t e powers thereof ; from such turn away." 2 Timothy 3 : 1—5.

Dear brethren ; through the kind mercies of God, I for the first time take up my pen to address you through the Companion. Though I am a weak and unworthy servant of Christ, I feel the great responsibility that is resting upon me as a minister of the gospel. I feel that it is my duty as a watchman to raise the alarm when I see danger, and I surely think that these are dangerous times. From the language which I have quoted at the head of this article we can see what is to be in the last times. Whether we are in the last times or not we may know only by the things which the Prophets, Christ and the Apostles have predicted should come in the last times. We only need to look around us and we can see whether this prediction of Paul has been fulfilled or not, and we are reluctantly forced to answer in the affirmative. When we look at the condition and character of the Church as it appears to-day, we certainly see a wide contrast in the appearance of its members now and the discipline by which they are to be governed. It is getting to be a very popular thing to be a Church member, or at least in the majority of the Churches, so much so that almost all the great men of the day belong to some Church ; and yet if we may judge by their daily walk and conduct, we would not suppose that they were members of a church. We see them engaging in all the worldly strife that is likely to bring them any gain. Yes, we see these specimens of what should be meek and lowly Christians, contending with an ardent zeal for what they call the fundamental principles of Christianity. They will even call you selfish and call your profession into question if you do not unite with them in their worship. You ask them what they call the fundamental principles of Christianity, and they will tell you, that if you believe that Jesus is the Christ the son of the living God you have the fundamental principles of christianity within you. "These little outside ordinances," they say," "don't amount to anything." If the heart is right, all is right. But let us not be deceived, for God is not mocked. We know that if the heart is right, that there will be no nonessentials found among the commandments of the New Testament, though though they be ever so small and simple. The truly converted soul cannot view them as nonessentials ; but is ready and willing to follow the foot-prints of the Savior, which he has left on the earth. We need not be deceived about these things. Christ says : "by their fruits shall ye know them." And Paul says : "if any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his."

But let us examine ourselves, and see if we too are not degenerating as well as others. I am afraid, brethren, if we look inside of our own Church that we can see things which ought not so to be. O, brethren, because iniquity abounds does not our love wax cold. Christ says in the 13th chapter of John : "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you ; that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my Disciples, if ye have love one to another." Paul compares the Church to a human body, and we all know what our own nature is. If a member of our body becomes diseased the whole body suffers with it. And we will leave nothing untried till we find a remedy. There is nothing that we possess on earth that we hold so dear that we would not give it to have the diseased member male whole. Is this the case in the Church? I fear that it is not. If it were the case we would seldom see a member of the Church withdraw, or have to be expelled. Yet how often we hear brethren talk about brethren, who have probably made a misstep, instead of going to that member and talking to him, and manifesting that brotherly love that should characterize every christian professor. By this means we might save many a poor soul, who by our neglect and indifference will probably become a prey to satan. O, Brethren! every one of us, lay members as well as ministers, have a heavy responsibility resting upon us. It is every one's duty to look after the spiritual welfare of others; and whenever we feel that the brethren and sisters are no benefit to our spiritual welfare, and that we are under no obligations to the Church, then we can rest assured that we are in the enemy's country, and the sooner we look to God for help the better.

Restoration of the Jews.

RESPONSE TO BROTHER HECKLER.

Had I not supposed I was included among the sisters mentioned in his article I would not have undertaken to answer him. Therefore, those who are of the same opinion will please excuse me for answering first; but you can still bring in your evidence. The more evidence the clearer the case. Brother H. wants us to show him where we learn that a man of sin, or antichrist, will make a league with the Jews and cause them to return and build Jerusalem. Now if we knew to what part he wants information, whether to their leader, or the return of the Jews, we could answer him with less trouble. I should hardly suppose he would want any information, aside from his Bible, concerning the latter. It is true the prophets do not tell us just in so many words, but take them all together and peruse them carefully, and I cannot see how any one can fail of coming to the conclusion that the Jews will return and rebuild their ancient city. I know there are some that believe that all their return was accomplished at their return from the Babylonish captivity; but this will not hold good; it has no foundation.

We know that the ten tribes were taken away some time before Judah and Benjamin were taken captives to Babylon, and then there were but a few of the two tribes, a small colony, under the guidance of Zarababel, who were permitted by Cyrus to return and rebuild the temple. But the wealthier and more numerous part of the nation remained beyond Euphrates, where they had settled. And what hindrance did these that returned meet with by that mixed people, that Esarhaddan had sent to occupy Samaria after he had carried away the ten tribes. How they scorned them in building the walls of the city. "If a fox go up he will break down their stone wall." Even after Ezra and Nehemiah were permitted to bring in new colonies to engage in the work of building, they wrought with one hand in the work and with the other they held a weapon. This comes far short of the glorious promises that are yet in store for them. But it is useless to say much about this feeble return. And I do not suppose that any one that has read the prophets carefully will come to the conclusion that that was the only return they had in view. Read the last five chapters of Zechariah, and all the prophets are full of their return after they will have been scattered among all nations.

And now I must say a few words concerning their leader. There certainly will be some one at the head of this return, and one, too, that will work deceitfully; but who he is, or what he will be composed of, I will not undertake to say. God has many ways to bring his purposes to pass, but generally takes man for an instrument to accomplish his design. The prophet Zechariah in the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth chapters speaks of Israel restored in unbelief, under the auspices of "the Idol shepherd;" then besieged by all nations, and at last driven to a bitter mourning for their sins, and a true hearted return to God in Christ. Now to the same effect are the words of Daniel. In the eighth chapter we read of a vision, in which the angel Gabriel addresses the prophet, saying, "Behold I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation. When the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up, and through his policy shall come craft to prosper in his hand, and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by peace shall destroy many. He shall also stand up against the prince of princes, but he shall be broken without hands." And in the eleventh chapter of the same prophet we are carried through a course of events from the time of the Medes and Persians until the reign of a certain king, a vile person, who will make a league with Daniel, (people) and after the league made with him he will work deceitfully. "He shall enter peaceable even upon the fattest places of the provinces, and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his father's fathers. This king shall do according to his will, and shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of Gods, and shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished, for that that is determined shall be done." Thus Paul and Daniel agree accurately. They both present to us a man of sin to be revealed in "the last times." A man claiming for himself the honor due to the Almighty. This, no doubt, will be the false Messiah of the Jews. But they will then discover their error, the covenant will be broken and the day of Jacob's trouble be revealed. God, by the hand of Antichrist, will have gathered them into Jerusalem, and be about to blow upon them the fire of his wrath and melt them in the midst thereof.

But the distress will be effectual. The spirit of grace and supplication will be poured out upon them. Thus will the remnant of Israel be brought to repentance, and be permitted at the very advent itself, to look upon him whom they pierced and obtain life through his name.—And then shall that wicked one be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his coming. "For Tophet is ordained of old; yea for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood: the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone doth kindle it." Isaiah 30: 33.

And this wicked one is none other than the beast of the Revelation, that had gathered the kings of the earth and their armies together to make war against him that sat on the horse and against his army; but the beast was taken and with him the false prophet; these both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone —

And that old serpent which is the devil is cast into the bottomless pit, where he will have to remain until a thousand years are fulfilled. And then, and not till then, will the millennium dispensation commence.

Now I believe that the present dispensation will not close until the millennium dispensation commences. But if any one can convince me that there can be a space between the close of one dispensation and the commencement of another, I will willingly yield. The law and the prophets were until John; then the present dispensation commenced, and from that time the gospel is preached unto us. I know there are some, and perhaps the greater part, that believe that the gentile time will be fulfilled, when the dead saints are raised, and the living changed, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, but there certainly will be some time between then and the conversion of the Jews; but how long the Lord will remain in the air with his collected saints we are not informed, but it will be a bloody time. Now I do not wish any one to depend on what I have written, but let them read for themselves, and if they can come to any other conclusion let us hear from them.

Temper and Passion.

ADVANTAGES OF CHEERFULNESS AND CONTENTMENT.

It is not enough for the preservation of health, that our bodies are properly nourished, that we are fitly clothed, that we take exercise, and enjoy rest, that we are cleanly in our persons, and live in open and airy situations. The good effects of these are in danger of being quite done away with, if our temper and passions be not properly regulated. It is useless to make a good meal of fit and nourishing diet, unless the mind is quiet and composed after it. A sally of passion, or a fit of sulkiness, spoils the digestion, and we had better have gone without food. But it is not after we have taken food alone, that passion and bad temper may injure us; we cannot even eat if we yield to them. We lose our appetite, the stomach gets disordered, and the most delicate meal is looked at with loathing and disgust; so that unless the temper be serene and cheerful, we eat without an appetite; what we take we cannot digest, and food does more harm than good.

A happy-minded, amiable child is one of the most beautiful and lovable things that God has given to us, to soften our hearts, and to call into play our best affections. We may all be happy if we will. When we have grown old enough to be taught these things, we shall, if we have any regard for our health and comfort, never indulge in bursts of violent passion, in fits of anger, or in sullenness. To do so, is to commit the greatest folly of which we are capable. We can enjoy nothing when our hearts are filled with bad thoughts; because as our internal feelings or disposition are bright or gloomy so does everything around us appear. If then we are cheerful and contented, all nature smiles with us; the air seems more balmy, the sky more clear, the grass has a brighter green, the trees have a richer foliage, the flowers a more fragrant smell, the birds sing more sweetly, and the sun, and moon and stars all appear brighter. We take our food with relish and whatever it may be, it pleases us. We feel better for it, stronger and livelier, and fit for exertion.

Now what happens to us if we are all ill-tempered and discontented? Why, there is not anything which can please us. We quarrel with our food, with our dress, with our amusements, with our companions, and with ourselves. Nothing comes right for us; the weather is either too hot or too cold, too dry or too damp. Neither sun, nor moon, nor stars have any beauty; the fields are barren, the flowers lustreless, and the birds silent. We move about like some evil spirit, neither loving nor beloved by anything. Besides robbing ourselves of comfort and health, and becoming hateful to ourselves and to all around us by passion and bad temper, we also unfit ourselves for performing our private and public duties. The passionate man—and the passionate child leads to the passionate man—is not fit to mingle in society. He is always making himself enemies, and giving pain to his friends and family. Nor is this all; every one who indulges in bad temper, and gives way to morose and sour feelings, sets a mischievous example to all around him, spreads a baneful influence over the whole range of his connections. The affections become weakened; confidence is destroyed, health is injured, nervous and painful diseases are created, and comfort and happiness are banished from his dwelling.

To a man of this miserable disposition, the troubles which all must expect to go through in this life, become so many sources of torment; and all the common evils of life are changed into misfortunes. Whilst the cheerful and thankful man passes his days in happiness as we are able to enjoy, the other is gloomy and dissatisfied, and makes his home cheerless. His countenance is clouded, and his gait sluggish; his body loses its healthy tone, and his mind is incapable of receiving those impressions from the external world which our bountiful Creator has sent to minister to our health and pleasure.

Always bear in mind, therefore, that if you want to preserve health you must be good tempered; that if you would enjoy the beauties of nature, and comforts of life, you must be good tempered; that if you would be useful to yourself, and to others, you must be good tempered; and that if you desire to show yourself worthy of the blessings which Almighty God showers down upon you, you must be content, good tempered and thankful.

Therefore you see how very necessary it is to be content, good tempered, and thankful.

It is of the deepest moment that we walk with a sincere, honest, upright heart before God. If evil be practiced, or labored and connived at, the channel of communication between our souls and God (for the time being) will be cut off. It is all-important to remember this. Infirmities and weakness will cleave to us as long as we remain in the body, but this is a different thing from willingly allowing evil. I must be able, with a true, honest, upright heart, to look my heavenly Father in the face and say, "Here I am, blessed Lord; do with me as thou will."—George Muller.

The late Dr. Bethune wrote to his Consistory these memorable words: "We can never despair of a Church that puts the cause of mercy first, and itself second." Again he says, "I would as soon try to cultivate a farm without rain, as a Church without benevolence," and, "I hate to be economical with the Bread of Life."

Paradise.

As there appeared a query in volume 5 Companion, No. 47, page 731, asking "Where is paradise? the place where the thief on the cross went to." And, as a short answer by Elder Grabill Meyers, was not so satisfactory as desirable, we have made this subject a matter of investigation, though we have not referred to any commentary but merely to the scriptures, and we will try by the grace of God to write something about it. In the first place we cannot find that the word paradise appears at all at any place in the Old Testament writings before the Babylonish captivity, or so long as the Hebrew language prevailed among the Jews. In Genesis 2: 8, we read that the Lord planted a garden eastward in Eden; and we further read that the Lord put the man whom he had made into the garden to dress it and to keep it.

And after that wherever reference is made to this garden by the prophets it is called "The garden of Eden," "The garden of the Lord," and "The garden of God:" and never paradise until after the aforesaid captivity. In the second place we find that the word paradise, like many other Greek words, is not translated, but only anglicized, that its meaning is nearly equivalent, or synonymous to the Latin felicitus, anglicized felicity, and to the Anglo-Saxon world bliss, which would be its proper English translation. And hence the words of a dying Savior to the thief on the cross, would read, "This day shalt thou be with me in bliss. And the garden of Eden would be the garden of bliss. But even this translation of the Savior's words, imply that there is a place of bliss, or of paradise. The Apostle Paul tells us in Acts 22: 17, and 9: 20, how he had fell in a trance and saw the Lord: and in the second Corinthians 12: 4, he speaks of a man, "How he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." And in the second verse of the same chapter, he speaks of one, undoubtedly the same, "caught up to the third heaven." In Rev. 2: 7, we read, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."—In the book of Apocraphy, in the second book of the prophet Esdras, chapter 3, verse 5, 6, we read, "And (thou) gavest a body unto Adam without soul, which was the workmanship of thy hand, and didst breathe into him the breath of life, and he was made a living soul before thee. And thou ledest him into paradise, which thy right hand had planted before ever the earth came forward." In the beginning of the sixth chapter of the same book, it appears the Lord speaks to the prophet, telling him when he considered the end of this world, saying, "In the beginning when the earth was made, before the borders of the world stood, or ever the winds blew, before it thundered and lightened, or ever the foundations of paradise were laid." &c. Now, if the Lord considered the end before the beginning was made, he must have seen how wicked the world would be, for if it would have been good, there would have been no cause nor occasion to bring it to an end, or to consider the end. And if the Lord saw the end he also saw the wickedness thereof before it was made, and had its redemption prepared before the foundation thereof was laid, he must have a higher and more mysterious object in view than we are aware of. And if paradise was "planted before ever the world came forward," "or ever the multitude of angels were gathered together," it appears to be a place entirely separated from this earth. And yet it appears that Adam in his first estate was in that blissful place in the garden of Eden on this earth. Or perhaps paradise is a spiritual garden which the Lord could remove from one place to another.

It appears that Adam was first made a natural being, and afterward, from the breath of God he became a living soul, a twofold being, and was then led into paradise "to dress it and to keep it." But he could not "keep it." And after his fall, it appears he knew not that he was dust until the Lord told him, "Dust thou art, to dust shalt thou return." It seems wonderfully strange to us, considering that an innumerable multitude of human beings have lived and died in this world, and have gone we know not where; and the number of visitations that God has made to the people of this world by his ministers to prepare them and us for the world to come, and the revelations of his will, that he has made to holy men of old,

"Whose hoary locks have swept the feet of Deity;"

when even a few have been raised from the dead, that after all, so little is revealed to us about the unseen world: and the little that we do know is not real, but is only in visions and in dreams. But herein we may not err; since Adam was driven out of paradise, or out of the garden of God "lest he put forth his hand and eat of the tree of life and live forever," that no person can go back to paradise until he has died a natural death, then, if his life has been in accordance with the will of God, he goes back into the garden of God, or into Adams first estate, and partakes of the tree of life and lives forever; as the spirit saith unto the church: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." And the thief of the cross was no doubt one of the first that entered there. Because when Adam had disobeyed, he could no longer dress and keep the garden; therefore the tree of life was protected by cherubim and flaming sword, until the second Adam through obedience unto God, yea even unto death on the cross, gained access to the tree of life. And the thief was no doubt one of the first who ate of that immortal fruit. Since the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations, (Rev. 22: 2.) we understand they are plucked off and handed down to us by the angels to heal us from our infirmities, and to make us every whit whole: for they are oil in our wounds and balm on our sores. It is not likely that those leaves will contain more virtue, nor be more wholesome for the healings of the nations during the thousand years of Jubilee, than at the present time; nor do we believe that they are reserved expressly for that time as some think. But, the text, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—The Savior died, left his body on the cross, and in the Spirit went over into paradise; and the thief likewise, his body was also left on the cross while in the Spirit he went over into paradise. In the Spirit we understand Paul was in a trance carried over, and saw and heard what he dared not reveal. In the spirit we understand Adam was there before he fell; because he was not created in paradise, but was after his creation, led into the Garden of God. But as Adam disobeyed and could not keep his "blissful seat;" a way has been made for us to get back again through much tribulation into the garden of bliss. And if we keep in that way while in this world, though it lead through the valley of the shadow of death, yet, when we change time for eternity, our souls will be carried over in the spirit to paradise, the land of promise, the rest reserved for the people of God.

I will now close, hoping if any reader has anything to add, to comment, or explain, he will be free to do so. I have not given a full explanation to the query; but merely as I said in the beginning, tried to write about it.

Sin—Its Consequences.

There is perhaps no other word found in the Scriptures that should more thoroughly engage our serious attention than this word "Sin." It is very frequently used in the Bible. And the Apostle John defines it as being "the transgression of the law." Then it necessarily follows that where there is no law there can be no sin. And Paul says: "by the law is the knowledge of sin." The origin of sin is generally traced back to the garden of Eden. But in our weak way of thinking we trace its beginning beyond that. Lucifer the sun of the morning transgressed the laws of Heaven before man was created, and in consequence he fell from his high estate and has become the enemy of the human family. And he it was that introduced sin into the world by inducing our first parents to transgress the law of God. Man came from the hands of his Creator, pure and holy, in the likeness of God's own glorious image, and would have remained so if they had not violated the command of God. They were placed in paradise "to keep and to dress it." But there was a law given to govern them that they might "eat of all the trees of the garden except the tree of knowledge of good and evil they should not eat." They did eat the forbidden fruit and in consequence were driven out of the garden of Eden lest he put forth his hand also and take of the tree of life and live forever. We believe that if man had never sinned he never should have died.—For the unalterable decree of Jehovah in reference to man "dust thou art and to dust thou shalt return," was not pronounced till after the fall. Death then is the consequence of sin.—And all the pain and misery, sorrow and anguish that the human flesh is heir to, are the effects of sin. Well then might the Apostle say, "the wages of sin is death." It was sin and the wickedness of the antediluvians that brought about the deluge. "The wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." So that it repented the Lord that he had made man and he caused a deluge of water that destroyed them all. In consequence of sin Sodom and Gomorah were destroyed. And in consequence of the sins of the children of Israel, out of six hundred thousand men, besides women and children, only two entered the promised land. Even Moses himself for his disobedience to the command of God was only permitted to see the promised land, but could not enter in.

We have now noticed sufficient of the effects of sin to make our hearts tremble. Yet we will notice one more. That it was sin that brought Christ from Heaven to this sin cursed world.—It was for our sins that he laid aside his starry crown; he forsook the glories of heaven, he "took upon himself the likeness of sinful flesh, for sin condemned sin in the flesh," and "he became the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only but also for the sins of the whole world." He came to free us from sin; "and whosoever the son makes free shall be free indeed." But how shall we be freed from sin? By obedience to his everlasting Gospel. By faith in his name, by repentance towards God, and by a strict compliance with the requirements of the Gospel.—Then if the consequences of sin are so many, and the reward of sin death temporal, and death eternal, should we not at once forsake all that is sinful in time, and escape the awful consequences of a sin in eternity.

Old and Young Brethren.

RESPONSE TO BROTHER N. LONGANECKER.

Dear Brother Holsinger; In the 1st No. of the current Volume of your excellent paper, I find an article entitled, "To my Younger Brethren in Christ." in which the author says: I turn to 1st Peter 5: 5. where I read, "Ye younger submit yourselves unto the elder." He then says: "I hope that no christian brother will be grieved when we use the term "younger" and "older brethren." Certainly not! Christianity contains too much charity to be easily offended. And I do not call the brother's christianity in question, in asking him to bear with me while I examine some of his ideas, and suggest some, not expressed in his article.

The brother proceeds, in the "second" division of his subject, toassert that the younger should submit themselves most emphatically to the older. He speaks of children being in submission to their parents, and thinks it should be just so in tne church. Exactly so Ephesians 6: 1. reads; "children obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right." Does the brother think this means submission rightor wrong?

Certainly it does not; for such submission would make children the tools of their parents, not only to outrage others, but to suffer privation and outrage of their parents; which is certainly not the design. Children have reason, and some knowledge of right and wrong, and become accountable beings, long before they are free of their parents, according to the law or custom. Paul certainly thought so, or why, should he say "parents in the Lord?" He obviously means that parents, who are in the spirit of christianity, will make their requisitions in accordance with christian truth. Just so it is with the church. I do not understand the brother to have proved it otherwise, or to have attempted to do so.

The 2nd verse of the chapter to which the brother calls our attention, exhorts the elders to feed, and watch over the flock &c; while the 3rd forbids them "being Lords over God's heritage," and enjoins on them to be ensamples.—Does the brother understand this as giving them the right to command, and precluding our right to call them to account, should they commit sin? Certainly not! If they violate this injunction they are certainly amenable to the church, and merit the severest rebuke. But if an elder, in the proper discharge of his duty, reproves us we should not rebuke him, but respect his counsel. The brother says; he was taught to respect old age. It was rather more inherent with me than a creature of education; for I have loved the company and counsels of the aged from early childhood. I was very confiding until experience taught me that "it is not all gold that glitters," and learned me to judge things by their weight.

The 2nd and 3rd clause of 1st Peter 5: 5.

"Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility &c ; is worthy of the most profound attention and obedience of us all. I think brethren, that if we would all pray fervently with the true spirit of prayer, for more of that knowledge which will lead and guide us into all truth, we would have, less trouble, with more love in our hearts. We could then see our spiritual condition better ; would have a brighter hope of success in the spread of truth. Converts to the faith would be more imbued with the spirit of holiness. There would be less backsliding, with more accessions ; more charity, and less complaining ; more loving counsels, and fewer church trials ; less scolding, with more preaching and more watchmen on Zion's Wall. Yes ! And if a brother wrong us, go to him with a heart so full of Jesus' love, that he can read it in our actions. In short do our whole duty to him, and if he refuse to hear us, then, and not till then, tell it to the church. Aye : cease to repeat those phrases "young brethren" and "old brethren," and let us feel that we are one, and unclassified. And if a brother is arraigned before the church, prove him innocent or guilty according to the Word of God, to the exclusion of other orders old or young. Read the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians. "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds."

Self-denial.

Self-denial is a principle every one who desires to do right should teach and practice, so far as his influence goes. Heads of families should teach and practice the principle of self-denial to their children. It is positively commanded that Christians should deny themselves, take up the cross and follow the Savior whithersoever he goeth.

If we look to Jesus for our example we will be found to deny ourselves of many things which are often practiced in these last and troublesome times. Among these may be mentioned such as parents indulging their children with things that are not necessary for comfort or beneficial to health, thereby creating a desire and appetite for things which, when they grow up, will cause us sorrow to see them practice. Yet we have sown the seed of which the fruit will then just show itself. I would wish to offer a warning, to make us think, knowing that we will be held acountable for everything we do, and every talent that we unthinkingly throw away.

We see brethren and others throwing money away for things it would undoubtedly be better for them to do without, such as tobacco, cigars, or even for drink, perhaps really never thinking what their example is doing, and when they are asked to take a paper they are mostly "hard up," and seldom can spare so much. A little self-denial would have enabled them to pay for several papers, and left them in better health.

Others have no time to read, or perhaps have heard or seen something they thought was not altogether right, and which they think is sufficient reason to have nothing to do with it. A little denial of self would remove many objections.

I write not that I have any one in view, but to try to stir us up to do good. Actions speak more powerfully than words. Let us take up our cross and follow Jesus daily.

One in Christ.

And I pray not for these only, but also for them who believe on me through their word ; John 17th and 20th.

Nothing ever recorded in the Gospel of Christ, is more full of meaning, reaching forward to the very last believer in time. Most truly, it is a great source of consolation to us, to know that we are embraced in the number of those for whom that most devout prayer was offered up to the Great I Am. When we turn to consider the state of the church in our day we feel to mourn, without much to console, because we see so little of that oneness that the Savior prayed we might have, even "that all may be one ; as thou, Father, in me and I in thee, that they also may be in us." It is truly of vast importance to the Church to be this in unity. Could we only be all of one mind, seeing alike in all things, then all the world would be constrained to believe. Yet alas ! we see division increasing, in these latter evil days ; what a dreadful situation is it to contemplate ; Oh my God ! how can we thy chosen people be so united and so divided ? Truly, we cannot be a true light unto the world, and have divisions among us ; then in view of the awful responsibility resting upon us, how careful should we be, that we ever strive to promote that unity so ardently prayed for by the Lord of life and glory, to be vouchsafed to those that should believe on him through all time. — May God in his infinite mercy help us all to become one in Christ.

I. N. CRAMER.

Geographical sketch of the First District of Virginia.

Brother Henry : I proposed sometime since to send you a short geographical sketch of our district, the First District of Virginia, and herein will endeavor to redeem my promise. I cannot flatter myself that it will be rigidly correct in every particular, but as an outline it will serve my purpose, and that is to assist our fellow standard bearers in comprehending the vast field that looks to them for our interpretation of the scriptures.

Occupying the south and south-western portion of the state, our field lies in a mountainous region. Beginning at the Atlantic Ocean, about the mouth of Chesapeake Bay, our Northern boundary runs westward, via. Petersburg, Lynchburg, Lexington, Huntersville, Charleston, and terminates at the Ohio river about the mouth of the Great Kanawha. The Southern boundary is rather undefinable from the fact that the Carolinas, with the exception of a few counties in the extreme North West are as properly under the Jurisdiction of the Tennesse church as under ours. Without including them, we run with the line dividing North Carolina from Virginia, West, taking in several counties in the North West of North Carolina and excepting the counties of Washington, Scott, and Lee, in the South West of Va., which are under the charge of the Tennessee brethren.

There are fourteen counties west of the Alleghanies, seven between the Alleghanies, and the Blue Ridge, and about thirty-five east of the Blue Ridge. Of these counties about twenty-five have never heard the doctrine of the Brethren In fifteen, there are organized churches, and the remainder are visited several times annually and members are scattered throughout.

The District is about 400 miles long and 100 miles wide. The eastern part of the state is thickly settled and are descended from the English who first emigrated there. Until the rebellion there were large numbers of negroes held in bondage, whose religious condition was deplorable in the extreme. Since that event there is an apparent tendency downward, but this is attributable to political, more than to social or religious influence. Under existing circumstances the unfortunate children of Ham will not profit spiritually by their associations with the political factions of this corrupt and dissolute age.

Between the mountains the inhabitants are principally of German extraction, and here are the largest bodies of Brethren with one exception: The German heart seems to be readily accessible to the doctrine of the brethren, as that element largly predominates in the church. I would like very much to have that matter explained — Brother Toher, can you tell us why we are composed principally of Germans ? In many of the largest counties of the valley of Virginia the Brethren are far more numerous than any of the sects.

West of the Alleghanies the people are of a mixed origin, descendants of different nations such as are they of many of the western states. The slave power never obtained much strength in that quarter and our principles were more readily accepted than in the east. We made slow progress wherever the spirit of slavery held dominion Although we were strictly non-interventionists, yet we were watched with a jealous eye and a serpent's vigilance. We were regarded as sworn enemies of the "peculiar institution," and, as such, we were unwelcome occupants of a hostile section.

Political and social revolutions of an astounding and august character are taking place in our midst, and the student of prophecy and revelation is on the alert to see what definite shape they will assume, and to what ultimate results they are tending. The finger of Providence is evidently in the matter, and we are enjoined to watch and pray. If some notable prophecy is culminating in these convulsions it is our duty and our blessed privilege to be able to comprehend it Let us be upon the wall, watchmen of Zion, lest the sword come upon the land unawares, and the blood of the people be required at our hands, lest it be said to us, "Oh fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken. Beloved brethren, we see herein the vast responsibility that rests upon us as heralds of a soul-saving gospel. Many thousands of immortal souls must necessarily depart from this world without the preaching of the gospel as we understand it : and St Paul says concerning such : "how can they believe without a preacher." If the preaching of the word is necessary to a belief of it, of whose hands will their blood be required. It is not too late to amend that that is amiss. Let us bestir ourselves to energetic and vigorous action, making more personal and pecuniary sacrifices for the spread of divine truth. While we disapprove of the gigantic proselyting spirit that controls the fashionable denominations of Christendom, let us beware that we do not fall into the other extreme, and, becoming lukewarm and indifferent to the great interest of the church, forget that of us will be required the blood of the people. Our time is too short and precious to idle and waste in internal dissensions, in bickerings and strifes and enjoyings. It is just long enough to allow us to accomplish our work. We want our united influence and talents to successfully prosecute the important work. Therefore let us not neutralize them by unprofitable, contentions and disputes about personal and unimportant matters. Praying for God's blessing upon us we adopt as our motto "Onward and upward."

D. C. MOOMAW.

A High Standard.

It should be the Christian's aim to be entirely consecrated to Christ. From the hour of setting out on the Christian life, he should never forget that he is bound to the celestial city. Every night brings him nearer home. Every morning sees him starting for another day's journey to the Father's house. Christian, remember

"A cloud of witnesses around,
Hold thee in full survey;
Forget the steps already trod,
And onward urge thy way."

It is painful, in this view of the case, to hear a christian asking, "Do you think there would be any harm in my doing this or that?" "Might I go to this place, or look at that spectacle?" "Might I not, away from home, where my examples would do no harm, indulge in practices which I must refrain from at home?"

This is living by a low, and not by a high standard. Looking down—not up! Forgetting that we should strive to live "unspotted from the world." Trying to walk on the edge of the broad path, instead of keeping in the narrow way of life.

MISCELLANEOUS

A Minister's Courtesy.

Mr. Ely used to tell a little story of a brother clergyman, Rev. Mr. Gray, of Suffield, which story was a good illustration of Yankee "cute ness." Several similar anecdotes have appeared in print, but this is a genuine "Simon pure," we believe.

Among Mr. Gray's parishioners was a well-to-do farmer, named, we will say, Brown, who was especially generous in his free-will tithes to the good minister. This farmer's errand and "chore" boy getting big enough to take his place at the plow, a new boy was taken into service—a rough, untrained little fellow. To him the promoted boy discoursed quite condescendingly: "You hev got into a pretty nice place, I tell you; and if you behave, they'll use you well, give you plenty of good victuals, a suit of Sunday clothes, winter clothes winter schoolin' and not work you tew hard. But one thing—you'll have to go on errands to the minister's pretty often, and lug big baskets of things; and the worst of it is, you'll never get nothing but thanks from the parson and his folks not so much as a shillin' for your pains." Johny heard and pondered, and it happened that the very next morning he was sent to the minister's with a heavy quarter of veal, about as much as he could carry. The way was long and the weather was warm, and when he reached the parsonage he was not in the sweetest of tempers. He marched into the breakfast room without knocking or removing his hat; and setting down the basket, said gruffly:

"Mr, Gay, Mr. Brown has sent you this here quarter of veal."

"Ah, indeed," said the minister blandly. "I am obliged to him.—Are you Mr. Brown's new boy?"

"Yes."

"Well, my lad, when you have been in the family a while longer your manners will doubtless improve."

"Why, what's the matter with my manners?" asked the boy, with a look of stupid astonishment.

"Why, my son, they are a little abrupt and discourteous. Now your way of presenting Mr. Brown's present was not just what it should have been. I think I can show you, so that you will know just how to do next time. I will personate you, and you may pretend you are me for a few minutes."

Saying this, the minister took up the basket, went into the entry and closed the door. Then he knocked gently.

The boy having seated himself in the minister's chair, and put on a grave and reverend aspect, called out, "come in."

Entering very quietly and deferentially, though with difficulty preserving his gravity, holding his hat in one hand and the basket in the other, the minister approached his small proxy, and said, with a low bow, "Mr. Brown sends his compliments, and begs that you will accept this quarter of veal, Mr. Gay.'

"I am very much obliged to Mr. Brown, and to you, too, my fine boy," said Johnny, with an air of utmost seriousness, "but it seems to me that it's a big load for so small a lad to carry. Just take it into the kitchen and ask Mrs. Gay to give you a quarter of a dollar."

Nobody ever enjoyed this story more than Mr. Gay himself; except, perhaps, Mrs. Gay, who promptly paid over the quarter to the clever little actor.

He ought to have been a lawyer. Perhaps he was, and ended his days on the bench.

A Death-bed Scene.

A gentleman died last week at his residence in one of our up-town fashionable streets, leaving $11,000,000. He was a member of the Presbyterian church, in excellent standing, a good husband and father, and a thrifty citizen. On his death-bed, lingering long, he suffered with great agony of mind, and gave continual expressions to his remorse for what his conscience told him had been an ill spent life. "Oh!" he exclaimed, and his weeping friends and relations gathered about his bed—"Oh! if I could only be spared, for a few years, I would willingly give all the wealth I have amassed in my lifetime. It is a life devoted to money getting that I regret. It is this which weighs me down and makes me despair of the life to come."

His clergyman endeavored to soothe him, but he turned his face to the wall. "You have never reproved my avaricious spirit," he said to the minister. "You have called it a wise economy and forethought, but I now know that riches has been only a snare for my poor soul!"—In this sad state of mind, refusing to be consoled, this poor rich man bewailed a life devoted to the mere acquisition of riches. Many came away from his bed-side impressed with the usefulness of such an existence as the wealthy man had spent, adding house to house dollar to dollar, until he became a millionaire.—All knew him to be a professing Christian, and a good man, as the world goes but the terror and remorse of his death-bed administered a lesson not lightly dismissed from the memory. He would have given all for a single hope of Heaven.

PRAYER.—In eternity it will be a terrible thing for many a man to meet his own prayers. Their very language will condemn him, for he knew his duty and did it not. The fervent prayers which the good man has labored to make effectual will be "shining ones" in white raiment to conduct their author into the banqueting house of the Great King.

But the falsehood uttered at the throne of grace will live again as tormenting scorpions in the day of the Lord's appearing. "Be not rash with thy mouth, nor let thy heart be hasty to utter anything before God.' It is an objection that forbids us, by implication, to ask for that which we do not sincerely desire. Above all, it forbids the asking from God those blessings which we are hindering by our neglecting or unwatering by our selfishness and unbelief.

—A man's character is frequently treated like a grate—blackened all over first, to come out the brighter afterwards.

Christian Family Companion

Tyrone City, Pa., Jan. 18, 1870.

We are under obligations to brother JAMES A. SELL for office assistance, during the past month. Having been a year and three months in the office some time ago, he soon had his "hand in," and so we got along through the busy season without once becoming "fidgety." Brother Sell had intended spending this time, or part of it at least, in visiting among his friends. This is what we call sacrificing one's own pleasure to help another. We regret that on account of declining health he could not have remained with us a few weeks longer. He left us on the 13th inst. for a visit among his kinsmen and friends, in the Duncansville congregation, this county, and we hope he may be speedily restored.

"O that I could feel now as I did when I was in my first love."

What a miserable confession. Not even as good as in the out-set! Poor creature! No wonder you long for the first feeling. It is to be feared that your feeling was all there was in your religion, and when that is gone all is gone. Pure religion is principle, and does not rest itself upon feelings. Get down upon this basis, build upon Jesus Christ the sure foundation stone, and your house will stand erect in storm as well as sunshine.

Our readers need not expect much from us in the way of editorial writings until the rush of business attending the beginning of a new volume has subsided, which from present indications is likely to be protracted far beyond the usual time. Our subscribers are very tardy; some say they were waiting for the money, some on others who had expected to subscribe, &c.

Brother Noah B. Blough, St Clairsville, Bedford county, Penna., Wishes to have it made known that he can obtain a place for meeting in St Clairsville, and would be pleased to have ministers inform him when they expect to pass that way.

Preaching in Tyrone.

Elder John Wise will preach in the Brethren's Room, in the shool house, in Tyrone, (God willing) on Friday evening, 21st instant. All are invited to attend.

Answers To Correspondents.

SUGGESTION. You have said nothing to offend me, certainly not, but you evidently do not understand the printing business. No one who cares about reading the paper objects to the price. Those who do not care for the reading will object to any price.

J. F. ROSS. Fifty-five cents is still due you. Have sent you a package of specimen Nos.

THE LAST DAY OF THE YEAR is now out of season for this year.

NANCY WISE. The Little Scholar was published in the Companion several years ago. Will insert it in the Pious Youth of February. Thank you.

A correspondent informs those whom it may concern that brother Elijah Showalter's address is: South Haven, VanBuren co., Mich.

Some person at Roanoke, Ind. sends $1.20 and wishes the Companion sent to "my address." Who is it? Who can tell?

S. W. BOLLINGER. The money must have come to hand all right, as it is credited on the book.

ISAAC EBY. What numbers did you miss? probably we can furnish them.

H. H. FOLCK. Have no account of receiving 3$ from you in July; yet it is possible. State particulars and will make all right.

F. M. SNYDER. We will send it on, although we really cannot afford it. If you can get anything toward paying for it, do so.

Notices.

We have been favored with a copy of STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS, or Forty Years' Recollections of P. T. Barnum. It contains nearly 800 pages and is gotten up in good style, but is not such a book as we can recommend to our readers, though we have derived some good ideas from the few openings we have given it. It is published by J. B. Burr & Co., Hartford, Conn., and is sold by subscription

WHITNEY'S MUSICAL GUEST, Toledo, Ohio, Monthly, 1$.

Gives several pages of reading matter, and a number of pieces of new music.

GOOD HEALTH.—A monthly Journal of Physical and Mental culture. Alexander Moore, Publisher 21 Franklin Street, Boston. Subscription price 2$, single copies 20cts.

We prize it very highly.

WOMAN'S JOURNAL.—The first number of a paper bearing the above title is before us Address H. B. Blackwell Box 4,297, Boston. It is devoted to the interests of woman, her educational, industrial, legal and political equality, and especially to her right of suffrage. If there are any of the "strong minded" among our readers, they will know where to apply for an organ. But as our brethren do not generally approve of voting, we do not think they will be very much in favor of their wives going to the polls.

FARM FOR SALE.—Brother J. W. Harshberger, Dayton, Rockingham county, Virginia, offers his farm for sale at private sale. It is in a neighborhood thickly settled by Brethren. Address him as above, or what is better, go and see.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER, J. W. McIntyre, Publisher, No. 4 South Fifth street, St. Louis. Monthly, 32 pages, $1.50 per annum. The first number is before us, neat and clean.

We think we could not do anything for the Pious Youth, it being a monthly it is not likely we could find many that would be willing to pay $1.00 for it, inasmuch as most of our brethren content themselves by letting their children read the Sunday school papers, produced by other societies, which they can get weekly for fifty cents. So you will readily see that the prospects are very low in this part of the country. We have often thought that things are not what they should be, especially so when we read in the Companion about Sunday schools conducted by the Brethren, where they have upwards of a hundred volumes and expect to double the number, and at the same time there is not one of them produced by the Brethren. If not written by the Brethren they are written by the world. We ought to give to our children wholesome doctrine, whereby they may be led to Christ Jesus. Would you sometime give us your views on the subject of using the books of the world in our Sabbath schools?

D. BOLLINGER.

REMARKS.—We think the brother is mistaken about getting weekly Sunday-school papers for 50 cents.—If there is such a paper we should be pleased to see a copy.

In regard to using books not produced by the Brethren we have only to say: other things being equal, we would prefer those written by our members, yet we would not refuse a good book because it was not written by our Brethren. Any book that teaches the sound doctrine, and nothing else, is the book we approve of, no matter where it comes from. But every book that is to be placed into the hands of our children, ought to be thoroughly examined first by those whose duty it is to look after their instruction.

"I am sorry to say that I shall not be able to take the Companion another year, as I wish to pay you for what I now am owing you before contracting any more debts. I wrote you about the same a year ago, but through your kindness you sent the Companion on. Now I am sorry to say that I have not the means to pay you at this time, but just as soon as I can I shall do so. It is rather hard to publish a paper and not receive your pay when due, but I can't do any better now." Your unworthy but well-wishing brother.

We have credited 50 cents to your account sent by a kind brother from Indiana, we think. If you have not silver and gold, will you not give us such as you have, namely, use your influence and get others to subscribe and pay for it, who have the means, and only need some one to present the matter to them. Make an effort, by all means, and we will take the will for the deed, feeling assured that you will be successful.

California.

Readers of the Companion:

If brother Holsinger will allow me a little space in the Companion, I will endeavor to write a few lines which may be interesting to our friends in the Atlantic States. We frequently receive letters from our friends in the East, asking numerous questions in regard to our country. There have been many descriptions given of California, by different writers, and it seems as if everyone ought to be pretty well acquainted with the nature and character of our country by this time; but such is not the case; when we read the letters of our eastern friends who make so many inquries, we conclude that they have not the remotest idea of what California is.

There is no writer who can describe California in such a way that all can comprehend it. The climate and seasons are so different from anything in the Atlantic States, that no one can fully understand their nature & character, unless he lives here awhile, and learns by experience. One of the best features of California is the climate. There is no place in the United States where such a variety of climate can be found as we have here. Our State is divided by hills and mountains into valleys, and these valleys differ, tho' not so very much, with respect to climate. I cannot fully understand why this difference exists, unless it is because some are farther from the coast than others.

I will not attempt to tell just how cold or how hot it gets here, but perhaps I can give some faint idea of the temperature of our (San Joaquin) valley. We always have some frost in the winter; some years much more than others. There has been more frost and cold weather here this winter, than I experienced since I am in the State; the coldest morning we had this winter was when the mercury in the thermometer stood about 14½ degrees above zero, and that was considered very cold for this valley.

The weather in the summer time is usually very pleasant; sometimes we have a few very hot days, but not too hot to labor out doors. The seasons are divided into rainy and dry seasons. We have most of our rains during the months of December, January, and February. Sometimes they come earlier, and also continue till March and April. The crops, which consist chiefly of wheat and barley, are all sown during the rainy season, and when harvest comes, we have plenty of time to get our crops out of the way, before any rain falls. You can find most any kind of soil you wish; sandy, clay, black adobe, and sometimes different kinds mixed. Fruits of many kinds are raised in abundance, such as apples, pears, peaches, plums, apricots, figs, grapes, &c. There is corn raised in some parts of the State, but the principal productions are wheat and barley. It would no doubt be interesting to eastern farmers to hear a description of our mode of farming, but I fear I am already getting too tedious, and so will omit that.

Some of our friends, when writing to us, have even asked us whether the people of California are civilized. I can say this much: There are churches of different denominations in every town, and through the country, and one can scarcely go where he will be out of reach of public worship on the Sabbath. We have school-houses everywhere, for public and private schools. If these are not marks of civilization, then I don't know where they can be found. California has many advantages as well as disadvantages, and one is not likely to find all the advantages combined, but where you find one advantage, you will also find a disadvantage; and no one, without seeing this country, can tell whether he would like it or not. A person with pecuniary means can do much better, and get into business sooner, than one who has not those means. The price of good land near market is high, and appears to be advancing in price. But I do not wish to say anything to either encourage or discourage such who may have a notion of coming here; the better way is for them to come and see for themselves, and rely upon their own judgment. Much more might be said in relation to our society, the manners and customs of the California people, but I will let this suffice for the present.

By Eld. J. S. Flory.

Left Tyrone, Pa., Jan. 1st, at 8.30 for Huntington; was too late for the train on the branch road In my perplexity as to what to do I happily met with brother A. B. Brumbaugh, M. D., who was looking for me. Went with him to his office, where soon after I was met by brother Henry Brumbaugh, who had come in for me. Took a lunch prepared by the kind hands of sister Brumbaugh, and then set out on horseback for James Creek; distance 11 miles. Arrived at the home of brother Henry Brumbaugh in due time; meeting at night at Brethren's meeting-house. All night with brother H. Brumbaugh. Two meetings next day at same point. Weather very inclement; all night with Elder Isaac Brumbaugh, and until next day P. M., when I went to the station and took the train for Huntington. At 3.30 met the connection with the last train and arrived at McVeytown at 6.25. Was met at the station by Eld. Joseph Hanawalt who took me horseback to the Brethren's meeting-house, where I found a waiting congregation; home with brother J. Hanawalt Meeting next day at same place; home with brother Abraham Myers, who in the evening took me to the station, near which there was meeting in a schoolhouse. All night with brother Henry Hartzler. Next morning called at the house of brother George Hanawalt, and at 10.15 left for Harrisburg. Arrived at 2 P. M. Left for Baltimore 45 minutes afterwards, where I arrived at 7.30 at night. In company with a friend got in a street car and went out two miles to the Drover's Hotel where I got a good night's rest. At 7 next morning left for Washington City. Arrived there at 8.20 A. M. Was lucky in finding "my man" soon; got through business with him, then took a "run round" seeing the City. Went first to the President's house; thence to the Medical Museum, now in the building where Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. This Museum is free to visitors, and is truly worth seeing by those who have an interest in the wonders of nature as manifest, relative to the "human form divine." Next I went to the Capitol buildings. Large additions have been made to those buildings since I visited them 13 years ago. I went up the winding stairs to the top over the great dome. The height I am told is 400 feet. From that dizzy elevation I had a bird's eye view of the City,—the great center in way of legislation of our great Republic. I had to think while looking down upon the proud city, with her pomp and splendor, how soon all must come to naught, when the great day of God's wrath shall come. I descended to the Senate Chamber and Representative Hall, and to the great Rotunda, and then to the depot, where at 1 o'clock I left for Baltimore; arrived there at 2.20 P. M, and at 3.30 left for Westminster, on the Western Maryland Road. Arrived there at 6.20, and was met at the station by a kind brother that took me to his home. There met with brother Solomon Stoner, and after partaking of some refreshments, hurried off to Meadow Branch meeting-house; had an attentive audience; home with brother Joseph Stoner. Two meetings; next day dined with sister Margaret Boyer. Bro Wm. H. Franklin who had come for me took me to the meeting-house at Sams Creek; meeting at night, & then went home with brother Franklin.

Brother Holsinger; I will tell you something that does not often occur, and is very pleasant and desirable. I have six brothers and one sister.—We were all raised near Sinking Springs, Ohio. We are now all married. In the fall of 1864 one of my brothers with his wife came to Gentry Co,. Mo., and settled. In the fall of 1865 two more of my brothers came here and settled, one of them with his family; the other one has since married and now lives in Andrew Co. Mo. My only sister came also, and myself and family the same fall. In the fall of 1866 another one of my brothers came out, and lives here in Gentry Co. The other two brothers still live in Ohio: also my father, mother being dead. This winter (long to be remembered by us,) my father and the two brothers and one of their wives, came out to see us. We live about eight hundred miles apart. For the past week we have been enjoying each other's company, very pleasantly too; and have conversed freely with each other. On Christmas day we were all at my house, together; my old father, and my sister and her husband, and all of my brothers and wives, except one that was left in Ohio, and took dinner with me; as it was the desire of my father that we would all eat together once more. He says that he never expects to see us all, (that is all of his children) together again in this world: neither do any of us expect such a circumstance again, as father is getting old. Father insists upon us, and that earnestly, to be good children and live up to our faith of Christianity, and all will be well. O what a happy thought! For us all to meet together, with all those Christians that have gone before; there to sing praises to God and the Lamb for ever more.

Yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

S. S. Garman.

Brother Henry: I desire you to send me the Companion. I will enclose and forward $1.50. I have moved to the state of Iowa, where there is no church and no preacher, and I feel lost and desire the Companion. We came here one year ago last October. There were a couple of sisters here but no preacher to preach the gospel to us. Our aged sister, kind and motherly, was called to her long desired home. She was known as sister Elizabeth Arnold. Her age was 67 years, 4 months, 27 days. She died the 19th of December, 1869. I would like to have some of the Brethren to come and visit us, as I think some good might be done by having some preaching. If there are any of the Brethren wishing to move to the west, I would like to have them come and see this part of the country, as I think they will find no better.

Brother Henry: We are all fond of Church news, and such as this: On the 11th inst. I left home for Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., to brother David Garlaugh's district, to attend a series of meetings, and was assisted by brother Adam Brown, Daniel Longanecker, and others from the adjoining districts Had 18 meetings from the 11th till the 18th; 2 in Manheim, 1 in Mount Joy, 15 in Crider's meeting-house. Meetings generally well attended, and some very large meetings. Good attention and some good impressions. At the close some 10 or 12 made their cases known by good evidence, that they were tired of sin, and promised to change their lives. This we call good news.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

My Diary for 1869.

I thank God that under his blessings I enjoyed reasonable good health through the past year. I had the pleasure of traveling through eight different states, and preached in five. Attended a great many meetings, and quite a number of communions, in company with my loving wife who is now gone to the spirit land, where she will rest from her labors and her works do follow her, and where we expect to meet her with all those who have purified their souls in obeying the truth.

I traveled during the year 1869, 6850 miles.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

We have been holding a series of meetings from the 22nd until the 28th ult. Had good order and pretty good attendance, considering that two protracted meetings were going on close by at the same time. Samuel Garber, of Altoona, Iowa, was with us and preached for us, and we fondly hope that we have all been benefited by his coming to us. May the Lord bless his labors. We would like to have the Elder brethren and ministers generally to come oftener among us. I think it would be attended with much good. The Campbellites have added 17 to their number whilst holding their protracted meetings, and the Methodists are also adding many converts, but the ark seems to be moving very slowly with us.—Sorry to say it, but such is the case.

Criticism.

Brother Holsinger: Having read an article or rather an answer to a query of brother Silas Thomas, in the fiftieth number page 766, in the third paragraph of his article he says: "The Savior never founded his parables upon fable, but always upon fact. Hence the certain man who had two sons was not a myth but the father of a family in real life." I understand brother Thomas to say that the Savior never founded his parables upon anything but fact, or something that had actually taken place, one day or other. If so, will brother Thomas give an explanation on the 30th verse of the 25th chapter of Matthew. Where and what kind of a place was outer darkness, and weeping and gnashing of teeth in real life? Also the history of the rich man and Lazarus, we contend is a parable. The rich man died and was buried, and in hell lifted up his eyes being in torments. If the above history was a real fact, the rich man was sent to his reward before the judgment.

Yours in love,

I. F. NEHER.

Church News.

ANTIOCH, IND.
Jan. 9th, 1870.

We meet in our meeting-house every two weeks for public worship, and on Thursday evening of each week a few of the brethren meet either at the meeting-house or at the house of a brother for social meeting.

On the first Sabbath in January, Elder Jesse Calvert, of Milford, Ind., preached a funeral discourse in our house on the death of sister Murray. He also preached to us on Sunday evening. The weather was very inclement, notwithstanding there was a large congregation in attendance, who, we think were well pleased with the words of our brother. To-day our neighbor and brother, Elder D Heiney addressed us from the words recorded by Luke 12: 48, "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." The audience was not large, some brethren who live near not being in attendance. The speaker thought they did not come to meeting on account of the cold weather, and that they excused themselves because they did not have to preach. We who are lay members do often act as though we thought that because much has been given unto our ministers they may attend the meetings when the weather is cold and stormy, and we will attend with them when the roads are good, and the weather mild.

The speaker endeavored to impress upon our minds that God would hold us accountable, not so much for the much or little that was given us but for the use we had made of what we had. The Church was compared to an earthly family in which small children could do many things to lighten the labors of the rest, and that the parents would only require their children to do such things as their age and strength would permit them to do. And so would our heavenly Father only require of us to do the work our capacity or position would enable us to perform. He who had but little given unto him, would be held equally accountable for the manner in which he used that little as he who had much. That the lay member, who probably thought he had received so little that there was no work in the Church which he could do, might do a work in God's family that no other member of the family could perform.

S. M MINNICK.

Brother Holsinger: To-day while perusing the pages of the last Companion, I read, and reread Brother J. F. Ross's "Thoughts on dress." I am well pleased with his remark; we should all ponder over his thoughts and examine ourselves to see whether we are modestly and plainly attired. But we should not look to attire only, but attend also to our walk, our talk, our way of living, and our every action, for it is necessary. And this is partly what composes our every-day work. We can thus have a work to be doing every moment of our time. I fear of ourselves we do not have strength sufficient to accomplish our work, for of ourselves it would prove a hard work; but we are thankful that God does assist us, therefore our work is rendered easy, so easy that we can all engage in it, notwithstanding our feebleness. God is all love and mercy, therefore we should strive to be of the same mind.

REBECCA SNAVELY

Hastings, Ills.

Brother Henry: This blessed Sabbath morning I have been enjoying the happy privilege of being seated around my fireside with my little family, with the Companion in my hands, reading in their hearing the glorious admonitions of the brethren and sisters. God be thanked for the same. I have been a reader of the Companion for about seven months. It has been a welcome visitor to my family, because we have found it to our satisfaction. Its course is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true christian on his way to Zion. We have been encouraged time and again by the admonitions of the old fathers who are writing through the Companion and we pray God that they may increase their labor of love in the cause of their Master, laboring for him and the good of his children, and for the building up of Zion, that sinners may be pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

I am settled here in the mountains of Virginia, with my wife and 13 other members of the church around us. No ministers of the Brethren live nearer than 35 or 40 miles of us. The ministering brethren that labor for Christ in this part of his vineyard are Henry Garst, Joseph Wine, Jacob Wine, from Sullivan county, Tennessee, and brother Henry Swadly from Washington, Tenn. Some of these brethren visit us generally once every two months through spring and summer. Brother H. Garst visited this place 5 or 6 times during the past spring and summer. He has labored hard for Christ, and has been made instrumental, in the hands of God, to bring souls to Christ. May the Lord bless him for his labor of love. It is hoped that the good seed which has been sown by him here among our kindred and friends has fallen into well prepared hearts, and will bring forth its fruit in its season. He will visit this place again, God willing, about the first Sabbath in May next, at which time we hope to see those other ministering brethren mentioned, or at least some of them. We would like also to see the two twin brothers Molsbeys, as the brethren and friends here desire to hear them preach Jesus. I have written these few lines in this way knowing that the brethren, or at least some of them, are taking the Companion, and so will come to their notice. JOHN D. OSBORN.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In Whitley County, Indiana, January 9th, by Joseph Ziegler, Mr. WM. BROWN, to Miss MARY J. ZUMBRUN.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Shade Creek branch, Somerset Co. Pa., Nov. 22nd, MARY, daughter of friend Joseph and Lydia SEERE; aged 4 years, and 12 days. Funeral services by elder Christian Lehman, and the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

On the night of the 22nd the bereft mother became alarmed, fearing she was taking the fever, and not being prepared for death she sent for me, and desired to be baptized, it being about 10 o'clock at night. Coming there, I discovered she was not bodily sick, but her soul was sick in consequence of sin. I persuaded her to wait till morning. She said she had waited too long already, and that she had desired baptism for the last two years, and had still put it off to please others, her husband and friends belonging to another persuasion. I instructed her in the ways of the Lord. She said she could find no promise of heaven without being baptized. Her husband and friends did not object to her following Christ in baptism; claiming that they did not know her desires. So we sung a hymn and prayed together, then I told her I would go for Christian Lehman, as there were no brethren present, and only two sisters. Coming back, we started for the water, taking an ax along, cutting the ice open from six to eight inches thick, making a watery grave. Dear brethren and sisters let us earnestly pray for our young sister, and may this be a warning to all who put off the Lord to please others.

HIRAM MUSSELMAN.

In Little Swatara branch, Berks Co., Pa., December 12th, 1869, brother JONATHAN HUNSAKER; aged 56 years, 10 months, and 16 days. Disease dropsy. He was a minister in the church for many years—was in the second degree. He leaves an affectionate wife and three children, all members of the church. Funeral services by the brethren from Heb. 13: 12, 13, 14.

JOHN HERTZLER.

In the Clover Creek branch, Blair Co. Pa., December 15th, 1869, brother ABRAHAM DITCH; aged about 76 years. Funeral services by Elder George Brumbaugh, and Geo. W. Brumbaugh, from Hebrews 13: 14, in connection with Heb. 9: 27.

In the same congregation, Oct. 6th, 1869, WILLIAM SHERMAN, son of brother John B. and sister Elizabeth ALLENSWORTH; aged 1 year, 5 months, and 24 days. Funeral services by brother S. M. Forney.

In the same place, Nov. 19th, CHARLES H., son of Frederick and Margaret FRITCHLEY; aged 2 years, 7 months, and 17 days. Funeral services by Elder Michael Forney, and S. M. Forney, from 1st Thess. 4: 13, 14.

MICHAEL FORNEY.

In the Wadams Grove congregation, Stephenson county, Ills., at the house of brother Allen Boyer, LEAH, infant daughter of friend Martin and sister Annie SHAFFER; aged 4 years, and 4 months, less 1 day. Occasion improved by the brethren, to a respectable audience.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria Co., Pa., October the 7th, 1869, brother JOHN J. HORNER; aged upwards of sixty years.—Funeral services by the brethren.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In the Ostoria branch, Ill., Dec. 13th, '69, brother DANIEL SPRINKLE; aged 40 years, 11 months, and 27 days. He was a worthy brother. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn their loss. Funeral services from Rev. 21: 4, by the writer and others, to a large congregation.

JACOB MACK.

In the Middle Creek branch, Somerset Co. Pa., December 23rd, 1869, MARGARET WILTROUT, aged 83 years, 9 months, and 25 days. Disease Jaundice with age. Her remains were brought to the Centre Church, in the Elklick branch, Somerset Co., and interred, along with her husbands, where the occasion was improved by the writer, from Job 19: 25, to a large congregation of friends and neighbors.

C. G. LINT.

In the Pipe Creek congregation, Carroll Co., Md., December 14th, '69, sister SUSANNAH KURTZ; aged 90 years, and 5 days. Text Rev. 14: 13.

Same congregation, December 20th, 1869, friend GEORGE HESS; in the 81st year of his age. Text Hebrews 9: 27.

December 29th, ELIZABETH WILSON, in the 85th year of her age. Text Job 30: 23. Thus in the space of 15 days three of our aged neighbors have passed away from time to eternity. Funerals all attended by the Brethren.

Also, in the Monocacy congregation, Dec. 12th, 1869, EPHRAIM W. SHRIVER, my little nephew, aged 1 year, 2 months, and 21 days. Text, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good."

EPHRAIM W. STONER.

Near Williamsburg, Blair Co., Pa., Nov. 30th, 1869, LEVI, youngest son of brother Philip and sister Mary SHELLEY; aged 16 years, 3 months, and 9 days. Disease White Swelling, of which he sufferred for about six weeks. When sick about one week he bade farewell to his father and mother, brothers and sisters, and told them he would not get well again. Funeral services by John S. Holsinger, and John W. Brumbaugh, from 1 Peter 1 : 24, 25.

JOSEPH S. SNOWBERGER.

In Upper Conawago branch, October 9th, 1869, our old and much beloved brother, JOSEPH GROFF, who generally filled his seat in our Latimore meeting-house. He is now sleeping in the dust to await the sounding of the great trump. At his last farewell many eyes were clouded with tears. Our brother, a few weeks before his death, had gone to the mountain some 3 miles, with a horse and wagon for a load of wood. On his way home his horse took fright, and ran away throwing him out and fracturing a leg which caused his death. His age was 70 years and 4 months. On the 11th he was followed to the Latimore burying-ground by an unusually large procession of people.

In lower Conowago branch, Oct. 14th, 1869, of Consumption of 10 years duration, our sister and aunt, SUSANNAH HOLLINGER; aged 56 years, 10 months and 8 days. She left 4 children and a husband, a brother, and many relations, to weep over her grave.

In same district, Oct. 11th, 1869, our brother, JACOB FIRESTONE; aged 70 years, 2 months and 8 days. Our brother was one of the first brethren in in the north-west arm of Lower Conowago congregation. He was one of the principal supports in building the first meeting-houses in upper & lower Conowago, and continued to support the same up till within a few weeks of his death, which was caused by Dropsy. His sufferings were great. I visited him a few days before his death; found him strong in the faith and willingly awaiting the summons. He now lies by the side of his companion. His children number 9, of whom 6 claim to have covenanted with Christ. I will just say to the 3 yet out of covenant, remember what you now are, and what you soon will be.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

November 2, 1869, in Elkhart county, Indiana, brother JOSEPH BARTMESS, aged 58 years, 11 months and 1 day. Funeral services by the brethren from 1 Thess. 4th chapter, 13th verse to end.

Dearest brother thou hast left us, &c.

In the Antietam congregation, Franklin Co., Pa., sister ELIZABETH FAHRNEY, consort of brother Josiah Fahrney; aged 31 years, 10 months, and 2 days. She leaves a husband and 3 children to mourn their loss. She leaves behind her the pleasing evidence that she has gone to that blessed place where all the saints shall one day meet. Funeral by elders H. Koontz and I. Price, from Rev. 14 : 13.

In the Mohican branch, Wayne Co., Ohio, brother HENRY WORST. He was born November the 30th, 1775, and died June 1st, 1869; aged 93 years, 6 months, and 2 days.—He lived to an age that he could say, "I have grand-children to the fourth generation."—Funeral services by brother Jacob Garver & P. J. Brown, from Hebrew 4 : 9, to a large concourse of people.

At New Cumberland, Grant Co., Ind., December 11th, 1869, BENTON GRANVILE, son of brother William and sister Catharine HOOVER; aged 3 years, 10 months, and 7 days. Funeral services by Elder John C. Studebaker and others, from 1st Thessalonians 4 : 13.

"The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and blessed be the name of the Lord."

JONATHAN HOOVER.

In Tulpehocken branch, Berks county, Pa. December 18th, 1869, sister SARAH GERHART, wife of friend John Gerhart, and daughter of brother Henry Kline, deceased. Aged 62 years, 3 months, and 28 days. Funeral services in the Hains meeting house, by elder John Zug, and Christian Bucher.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria co. Pa. January the 5th, after a short but severe illness, sister ELIZA JANE. GOCHNOUR, Consort of brother Adam Gochnour; Aged 41 years, 10 months and 23 days. Sister GOCHNOUR leaves a kind husband, eight children, and many friends to mourn their loss, which we believe is her great gain. The subject of this notice was the first mother we ever had the painful sight of seeing, laid in the coffin with an infant in her arms, both in the cold embrace of death. We sympathize with our brother and family in their bereavement. Funeral services by brother Benshoof and the writer, from Heb. 13 : 14.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

December 16th 1869, in Franklin branch, Franklin county Va., Our beloved sister MARY, consort of brother Joel FLORY, and daughter of Elder Christian and sister Nancy Wertz, of Roanoke county Va., at the age of 19 years. She is called to leave her husband and her little twin daughters, who were only twelve days old at the time of her death, to realize the loss of a wife and the want of a mother. She was committed to the silence of the grave on the 18th inst, in the midst of weeping friends. Occasion improved by brother Abraham Naff, and others from Revelations 14th Chapter 12 and 13 verses. JOHN H. LEMON.

In the Aughwick congregation, Huntingdon Co., Pa., Nov. 4th, 1869, brother DAVID BOWMAN; aged 46 years, 9 months, and 12 days. He came to his untimely death by eating of a poisonous root, in a mistake for spikenard, and in about one hour and a half he breathed his last. Thus a strong and hearty looking brother was brought low.—Brother David was highly respected in, and out of the church. A very large concourse of people followed his remains to the grave. He leaves a sorrowing and afflicted widow sister, who was at the time not able to stand upon her feet on account of Rheumatism, and not able to go into the next room to see her beloved one in his last agony, but could hear his groans. At the time of the funeral she was placed in an arm chair and the corpse placed before her. The reader may imagine the feeling that prevailed with the sister and the four children. We all mourn our loss, but we hope it is his great gain. Funeral services by the brethren, from Matt. 24 : 44. JOHN G. GLOCK.

School Notice.

Since there is a growing desire among the Brethren that a College or some such institution of learning should be established in the Church, and after having counseled a number of brethren in Ohio and Indiana, we have set the tenth day of February, 1870, for brethren to meet at Antioch, Ind., to take said school enterprise into consideration, and to adopt the best means of making it a success

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE.

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the powers that be, to give it the most unqualified praise, and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machine free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more economically, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have done well by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahrney, No 30, North Dearborn St. Chicago, Illinois.

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," & vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

For the Companion.

Our Miseries our own Fault.

Christ has forgiven us the ten thousand talents, that dreadful debt which Adam contracted, which descended to us with accumulating interest. The greatest saint and the greatest sinner are both included in the bond which his mercy remits. Yet people rarely realize this brotherhood in evil and misery, and they as seldom realize that they are also brothers in the proffered forgiveness. God draws no distinction between sin and crime. The world does. It must. But we do not say this is because crime injures society while sin may be left wholly between the sinner and his God. Crime grows from sin.—Law punishes only crime, simply because sin is too subtle for it. The sins that really injure society, and from which issues the crime which fills our prisons, and calls into requisition the balefulness of the gallows—crime which causes humanity to blush and the angels to weep, are sins which none of us could really plead "not guilty." First and foremost is the little seed of self, sprouting into wilfulness, sloth and apathy. Who has never preferred his own weal to another's? Who has never driven his own will over another's comfort? Who has never held back his hand when he should not, or kept silent when he should have spoken?

Justice may punish the murderer or the assassin, but human justice cannot reach the influence which caused him to raise his hand against his fellow. But do not suppose that these influences excuse his crime. It is not absolutely necessary that we should be a victim to circumstances. Neither do circumstances excuse the man from whom proceeds the evil influence. When the shadow of a great crime darkens the length and breadth of the land, who of us can safely say: "I have had no part in this!" A mere want of punctuality or promptitude, by souring tempers and embittering hearts, may be the first step on the dark road that leads to the gallows. The devil takes care that sin shall be a maze wherein nobody knows where each path may lead. The world is God's work, but Satan's tangle is in it, and every one of us has done his share to perpetuate that tangle. Wherever we see pain, or sorrow, or poverty, or death, we confront sorrow born of sin, our sin.

It has been said of some holy men: "they never knew how much good they have done."—It may be truly said of us: we never know how much evil we have caused. Ye ministers grieving over the too oft vacant seats in your sanctuary, it may have been your own cold, uninviting monotony, or your persistency in doubting the validity of weak members' statement in regard to rumored backslidings, caused them to err, grow cold and inconstant.

Ye members, complaining of the slow progress of the christian church, perhaps the fault is yours. When Christ visited the cave wherein was laid he who had been "dead four days," he cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth," "and he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes." Now, we can reasonably suppose, that Christ could have commanded the clothing to fall off. But not so.—He said: "Loose him and let him go."

Ye fathers mourning over the inconstancy of your sons, it may have been your own cold, unsocial disposition that first drove him from home to seek more congenial company. You make your farms your idols; your wives your servants, and your children your slaves; and for the sake of accumulating a mass of "filthy lucre." You labor and toil day and night, taxing their physical capacities beyond their abilities, and giving their mental faculties no exercise whatever, save to meditate on your groveling nature, until human nature rebels, and he steals away beneath the azure dome of Heaven without a star to guide—friendless and alone. And as if to take one drop of bitterness from his cup of woe, he drinks. Alas! he is gone. His tiny bark is already in the rapids, and soon will be hurled over the awful cataract of inebriation.

"Bad Luck"—Indolence—Covetousness.

By Jesse Crosswhite.

"They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." for "The love of money is the root of all evil" which while some have waited after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." Paul.

Riches are only blessings to the possessors of them, so far as they are a means in his hands of doing good. They are only desirable to the "truly wise" as one of the bestowments of an Infinite Creator upon his steward, for the purpose of glorifying his name on earth. Very much depends on the disposition we make of the wealth which God has given us, and very much depends, also, upon the manner in which—and the means by which—we have acquired our riches. Honest toil, economy, industry and indefatigable perseverence, are in all praiseworthy and commendable, and are sure guarantees against want. We often hear persons complain of "bad luck," or of misfortune in their secular affairs. Now let us consider for a few moments the reasonableness of all such complaints. As to the "bad luck" of persons, I suppose that all will agree with me that it is a very great misfortune to be "unlucky," but whether all will agree as to the cause of this distressing evil I cannot at present say. But be that as it may, or whether all do agree with me upon this subject or not, yet I am free to entertain, and express my opinion upon it.

Some persons ascribe every misfortune which they experience in life to the effects of "bad luck," when in reality it is the legitimate result of their own neglect in business or misconduct. God has established certain organic laws, which are to govern the physical, or material world, and has in infinite wisdom so ordained that any, and every violatin of those laws shall produce an invariable reresult. So surely as like causes always produce like effects so surely will our neglect of business produce its consequences. Therefore I conclude for one, that our good or bad luck is the legitimate offspring of our own habits. True, there may be cases where misfortune seems to be visited upon us from the operations of a direct, supernatural, and invisible power;—such for instance as the case of Job, and of Belshazzar the king, and others of scriptural notoriety—but yet when we look carefully and philosophically at all such cases we see them designed as a blessing to the parties, and not as a curse; as the poet has said

> Afflictions though they seem severe,
> Are oft in mercy sent,
> They stopped the prodigal's career,
> And caused him to repent.
> Although he no relentance felt,
> Till he had spent his store,
> His stubborn heart began to melt
> When famine pinched him sore."

Oftentimes our misfortunes in this life (as we are pleased to call them) are for the trial of our faith, and are more precious to us than gold; as says the apostle, "Those light afflictions which are but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory"—while we look not at the things which are temporal, but at those which are eternal—"for we know that if this earthly house—our tabernacle—were dissolved." &c.

Slothfulness and idleness are two very prominent causes of many of the misfortunes which befal the human family, and they are both strongly represented in the holy scriptures. The apostle Paul says, "if any will not work neither shall he eat;—"and withal they learn to be idle, busy bodies, going about from house to house" etc. King Solomon says, "The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold, therefore he shall lack bread in the summer."

But there are extremes to be avoided in both cases, as we are also cautioned against an inordinate desire for gain, and heaping to ourselves treasures upon earth, the rust of which will witness against us in the day of judgment.

We remarked at the opening of this article, that the manner in which we obtained our wealth had a great deal to do with our future prospects. He who has acquired a competency of this world's goods by a lifetime spent in honest toil and industry, and who, while the Lord has prospered him, and blessed him in his honest endeavors, while he has been contending valiantly with powers of adversity and wringing from the hand of "Dame Fortune" a sufficient support for himself, and those dependent upon him, have only done what the Apostle commands him to do, viz: to "provide things honest in the sight of all men"; and "that you may have to give to them that have need; for if any provide not for his own, and especially those of his own house, he is worse than an infidel, and has denied the faith." There are extremes in everything, so that while some are over zealous in striving to make fortunes, others are perfectly indolent and indifferent.

There are various classes of idlers, but all of them are severely reprimanded in scripture. The "wise man Solomon" says, "How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard? When wilt thou awake out of sleep?" But he replies, "yet a little more sleep, and a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands to sleep." And the last words confusedly break into a snore, and thus he sleeps away his "days and his hours without number"; and when he gets up he sits folding his hands, or walks about sauntering, or trifling he stands. The consequence of this state of things is, as we might readily foresee, and as Solomon in his Proverbs describes when he says: "I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding, and lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face of it, and its stone wall was broken down."

But, bad as this picture may look which is here presented by king Solomon, yet this is not the worst feature in the case; for he further adds, (by way we suppose of capping the climax) that, "By much slothfulness the building decayeth, and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through." This seems to be the finishing touch given by the king as a warning to his subjects, against the vice of slothfulness, & to put them upon their guard against the evil consequences of idleness.

There are several classes of extortioners, as well as idlers, or those who have grown rich by grinding the faces of the poor. We have already, by the assistance of "the wise man Solomon" described some of the most conspicuous traits of the first class—"the sluggard." The second class are equally useless, but far more active. He attends closely to everybody's business but his own; is always sauntering about with his hands thrust down into his pockets, up to his elbows, watching the building of a neighbor's barn, planning and suggesting this or that improvement in the superstructure, or advising another how to trim his orchard, or how to ditch his meadow. He knows of every case of sickness in the neighborhood, and knows a remedy for every case, and an antidote for all the maladies which flesh is heir to. He knows all the stories, and all the slanderous reports which are in circulation of each family in the country, and although he seems not to believe any of them, and professes great sympathy for the parties thus slandered, yet he is a very ready listener and a very loquacious talker. If he can catch a stranger at a tavern of a rainy day, he pours forth a strain of information, a pattering of words, as thick as the rain-drops out of doors. He has good advice for everybody, how to make money, how to save everything; he can tell the cobbler all about his trade, gives advice to the smith; he is a violent reader of newspapers, almanacs, and receipt books, in short, he attends to everybody's business but his own.

I can here only introduce one other character, of the many which might be studied with profit to the reader, viz. that of the professional idler. He wishes to subsist by his profession, while he attends to everything else. He is always foremost in every excursion of pleasure, or party of sport, he is everybody's friend, universally good-natured, forever busy where it will do him no good, but very remiss where his interests require activity. He takes amusement for his main business, which other men employ as a means of diversion, and the serious labors of life which others employ mainly as a means of support, he employs only as a means of recreation. After thus going on for some years he at length fails in business, and sinks down in complete laziness and ruin.

But time fails me to present more of the effects of indolence and inactivity, and lack of energy and economy in our secular affairs, but I do hope that what I have here been able to present in this brief sketch may cause some to employ their time to better purpose, so that it may at least be beneficial to some one, if not to themselves.

But while I would strenuously insist on a wise and judicious employment of the time which God has given us, yet I would also warn all against the opposite extreme of this subject; i. e, striving after the goods of this world in order to become rich. Remember the text: "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition." There is, we believe, equally as much danger of running into extremes on the other side as in that which we have been considering.

Covetousness seems to be one of the ruling passions of the human family, and there are as many, and probably more, denunciations, and cutting rebukes from the lips of Jesus Christ, and the Apostles and Prophets, against it as an evil. Men are warned in the Bible against making haste to be rich: "He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him." This is spoken, not of the alacrity of enterprise, but of the precipitancy of avarice; when a man seeks to prosper by crafty tricks instead of honest industry, or, when his inordinate covetousness pushes him across all lines of honesty, that he may the sooner clutch the prize.

When God sends wealth to bless men, he sends it gradually, like a gentle rain—but when he sends riches to curse, or punish them, they come tumultuously like a roaring torrent, tearing up landmarks, and sweeping all before them into promiscuous ruin.

Covetousness breeds misery, even in this life, to say nothing of the future. The sight of houses better than our own, of dress beyond our means, of jewelry costlier than we may wear, of rare curiosities beyond our reach, these hatch the viper, brood in the heart envious and covetous thoughts, thereby constantly annoying and vexing the poor who would be rich, and tormenting the rich who would be richer, and thus effectually destroying that peace of mind which is so desirable, but so improperly sought after upon this earth.

"Thou shalt not covet," is a law by which Jehovah sought to bless the Jewish nation, in giving them instructions for their mutual good. Covetousness is greediness of money, and the Bible meets it with significant woes. "Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness unto his house, that he may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil." Habakkuk. Also by hatred: "For the wicked boasteth of his heart's desire, and blesseth the covetous whom the Lord hateth." P's. of David. Also by solemn warnings: "And he said unto them, take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses." Luke 12: 15th. By denunciations: "I wrote unto you in an epistle, not to keep company with fornicators—yet not altogether with fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters, for then must you needs go out of the world. But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolator, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner, with such an one, no not to eat." 1. Cor. 5: 9, 10, 11. And finally by exclusion from heaven: "For the iniquity of his covetousness I was wroth and smote him, I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart." Isaiah 57: 17. Also 1. Cor 6: 9, 10.

Time and space forbid me to follow this subject farther, nor indeed do I think it necessary at present to do so, because I suppose that all will concede the fact that covetousness and laziness are bad failings.

Hope and Courage.

True hope is based on energy of character. A strong mind always hopes, and has always cause to hope, because it knows the mutability of human affairs, and how slight a circumstance may change the whole course of events. Such a spirit, too, rests upon itself; it is not confined to particular objects; and if at last all should be lost, it has saved itself its own integrity and worth.—Hope awakens courage. Despondency is the last of all evils: it is the abandonment of good—the giving up of the battle of life with dead nothingness. He who can implant courage in the human soul, is its best physician. To seek to govern men by their fears and their wants, is an unworthy purpose; the desire to rule by means of cowardice, is of itself cowardice. Love inspires courage and hope, and this is double the giver and preserver of life. Whatever teaches us boldly to combat the many evils and assaults of life, enables us to win the crown of victory. Especial care, therefore, ought to be taken in education to teach what true courage is—as well in social and domestic as in public affairs—and by what means it may be best sustained.

For the Companion.

Religion.

"There is but one God, the Author, the Creator, the Governor of the world. The Supreme Sovereign of all dominions, principalities and powers; Almighty, eternal and incomprehensible. The sun is not God though his noble image. He enlightens the world with his brightness; his warmth gives life to the products of the earth. Admire him as the creature of God, but worship him not. To the one who is Supreme, most wise, and beneficent, and to him alone belong worship, adoration, thanksgiving and praise; who has stretched forth the Heavens with his hand; who has described with his finger the courses of the stars; who sets bounds to the ocean that it cannot pass and says to the stormy winds "be still;" who shakes the earth and the nations tremble; who darts his lightnings and the wicked are dismayed; who calls forth worlds by the power of his word; who smites with his arm and they sink into nothing. O tempt not his anger, lest thou be destroyed. The Lord is gracious and he has created the world in mercy and love. His goodness is manifested in all his works. He is the fountain head of all good, the center of perfection. The creatures of his hand declares his goodness, and all their enjoyments speak his praise; he supports them with food, he preserves them with pleasure from generation to generation. If we lift up our eyes to the heavens his glory shines forth; if we cast them down to the earth it is full of his goodness; the hills and the valleys rejoice and sing; fields, rivers, and woods resound his praises.

"But thee, O man! he has distinguished with peculiar favor, and exalted thy station far above all creatures. He has made man but a little lower than the Angels, and has crowned him with glory and honor, and has set him over all his works; he has put all things under his feet, "for in that he put all in subjection under him he left nothing that is not put under him; but now we see not yet all things put under him." He has endued man with reason to maintain his dominion; he has fitted him with language to improve by society, and exalted his mind with the powers of meditation to contemplate his unbounded perfection. He has ordained the laws of heaven as the rule of man's life. So kindly has he suited his laws to man, that obedience to his precepts is happiness to the soul.

Man truly was one of God's noblest creatures, for he was created in the likeness of God, and had his image stamped upon him. In the garden of Eden he had sweet communion with his Maker. But by a violation of God's law he was driven from the garden and deprived from his former privilege, Man having now placed himself in this awful condition, God in his love and mercy, and wisdom, devised means for man's recovery. He promised a Messiah, a Mediator of the world. And says Paul: "But we see Jesus who was made a little lower than the Angels, for the sufferings of death, crowned with glory and honor, that be by the grace of God should taste death for every man." God in the former dispensation gave laws and ceremonies to Israel which consisted of sacrifices and burnt offerings. Paul tells us that the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service and a worldly sanctuary. There was also a tabernacle made, a candlestick, a table, and shew bread, which is called the sanctuary, and after the second veil the holiest of all, and the cherubims shadowing forth the Mercy-seat. We are also told that the priests always went into the first tabernacle to accomplish the service of God.—"But into the second went the high priests alone, once a year, not without blood." This may to some extent shadow forth the object of Christ coming into the world, to make reconciliation. For it is said that the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. But all the offerings and sacrifices under the law, which were offered from year to year could never "make the comers thereunto perfect." "But the bringing in of a better hope did."

Hence we have said, a Redeemer was promised. This promise was spoken of from time to time. It was referred to by the Prophets, by Moses, and Abraham had the promise that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed.

Darkness is fleeing away and day-light is beginning to dawn. And who would not be ready to praise God and bless the Lord God of Israel, for he is about to visit his people. And who would not be ready to rejoice at the language of the Angel in announcing to Joseph the son of David, "fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife for she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." And who would not be ready to rejoice at the declaration of the Angel to the Shepherds of Bethlehem. "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord."

Hence the object of Christ coming into the world to save his people from their sins. And in order to do this he brought the means whereby we can be saved. He did not come to do his own will, but said he, "the will of him that sent me." In order to accomplish the great work of redemption, he did that which no other man could do; he suffered and died on Calvary's Cross that we might live. "O praise his goodness with songs of thanksgiving, and meditate in silence on the wonders of his love; let thy heart over-flow with gratitude and acknowledgement: let the language of thy lips speak praise and adoration; let the actions of thy life show thy love to his law." In order then that the blood of Christ may prove efficacious to our souls we must make the application; for Christ says: "except ye eat my flesh and drink my blood ye have no life in you." The life then that we expect to live in another world must come from Jesus Christ. For says Paul: "God who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake, in times past, unto the Fathers, by the prophets, has, in these last times, spoken unto us, by his son." God has communicated his mind and will to the children of men, through his son. Consequently we do well that we take heed to that perfect law of liberty. We know that the Mosaic law was very strict, for he that transgressed that law had to die, without mercy, at the mouth of two or three witnesses. "Of how much sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be counted worthy who has trodden under foot the son of God."

Religion then is a subject that should be greatly desired and sought after. God has endowed man with reason and intelligence, and through those avenues given to man, he can at least in some degree, comprehend the nature and character of God. We are well aware that there seems to be a great effort made to secure salvation and the favor of God. But when we look at the means resorted to, by a large portion of the human family, we come to the conclusion that some of those means are nothing less than the inventions of man. "Search the Scriptures" says Jesus to the Jews, "for in them ye think ye have eternal life and they are they which testify of me." In order then that we may make sure work for Heaven we should examine well the law that Christ brought from Heaven, and lay aside all preconceived opinions, and give his word the pre-eminence in all things. It is very common in this age of the world for men to resort to the various tracts and books written by uninspired men for information upon this important subject. I had a conversation with a man not long since, relative to a certain point. When he was not prepared to answer he replied: "I must examine some of my books in relation to that matter." I inquired what books. He referred to this book, that book, and the other book, all written by fallible men. Said I: "you need not go to all that trouble; your different books may deceive you. To be sure of this matter you had better examine the Bible, the Testament; which are the only reliable Books." I have no objections to examine the different books, and as long and as far as they correspond with the word of God, there may be no danger of being deceived; but should they advocate a doctrine contrary to the word of God, there certainly is danger of being led astray.

We conclude, since the days of the Apostles, the right ways of the Lord are wonderfully perverted. Consequently to arrive at a proper conclusion we had better flee to the Gospel; for says Paul "therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith." We might illustrate this matter in this way. I have on my premises a large fountain, a spring of water, pure and clear as crystal. Many weary travelers stop to alleviate their thirst, and are pleased with the good and fresh water they drink.—Very well: but the water from this fountain, as all others, runs down stream, and the weary traveler can drink of the same water five and twenty miles below its fountain head. And what of it? Does he get it pure? No. From the fact that there are other waters mixed with it by this time, and if the traveler wants a drink of pure water he must go to its fountain head.—In a similar way I look at Religion. Religion has been running down (if I am allowed the expression) for more than eighteen hundred years, and must we not conclude there is a complete mixture! Hence the necessity of going to the fountain head. I mean go to the Lord Jesus Christ, for the pure water of life. "He that will drink the water that I will give shall never thirst." God has made the necessary provision for man's present and future happiness. He has revealed his will; has given his word in plain terms; and now says in relation to the judgment: "I judge no man, but the words that I have spoken shall judge you in the last day." "The Lord is just and righteous and will judge the world with equity and truth. Has he established his laws in goodness and mercy, and shall he not punish the transgressor thereof?—His eye pierces the secret of every heart, and he remembers them forever; he respects not the persons or the stations of men. The high, the low, the rich, and the poor, the wise and the ignorant, when the soul has shaken off the shackles of this mortal life, shall equally receive from the sentence of God, a just and everlasting retribution, according to their works."

"The Communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all." 2 Cor. 13:14.

This closes that remarkable benediction which the whole church of Christ from beginning has so often dwelt upon with gratitude, consolation, and edification. It, too, supplies the last office of the adorable Trinity in the personal work of God the Father, and a keystone to the arch of the temple of our salvation. It also affords subject matter for deep humiliation, and a theme for the highest praise, or, in other words, it attunes the soul of the believer to that lowliness of self-distrust and trust in Christ, which is the great object of the Gospel. Does it not afford a subject of deep humiliation to reflect that the grace of Christ, and all the love of the Father, are not in themselves sufficient for the salvation of a soul? The thirsty traveler might recline upon the brink of the well, while its cooling waters gush up below in their abundance, but yet it might be said to the thirsty spirit: "Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep," whence to thee, then "this living water"? But does it not afford the highest praise to be assured that when the weakness, blindness, and ignorance of sin, would incapacitate us from tasting the rich mercies of redeeming love, God was pleased to condescend and undertake for us, by teaching us to pray; helping our infirmities, enlightning our darkness, and growing the seeds of holiness in all who flee for refuge in the hope set before them in his glorious gospel? With all this, the natural heart of man is enmity against God, averse to communion with Him; indifferent to all grace and godliness. Converse with the unrenewed man of God's love and sacrifice in sending his own Son to save him, and he has no heart for them. Invite him to the marriage supper, and he will most likely make light of it. Ask him for the fruits of his Lord's vineyard, and if he does not "entreat shamefully," he will go to his farm or his merchandise and make some excuse. The banquet may be rich, still he has no appetite for it. Now it is the work of God the Father to subdue this enmity, and overcome this great aversion, and reveal to the blind eye the lovliness of Christ; and draw it from lust and vanity to its Father and God. And thus it is brought into real fellowship with God, and his Son Jesus Christ. Thus the barrier is removed, and the soul of man is again brought into sympathy with its God.

The Mormons of the Period.

Much curiosity exists among the Gentiles all over the Union, to see what action Congress will finally resort to in order to wipe out Mormonism. Brigham Young, Sr., is a wily old chap, and proves a pretty tough customer. In his dotage and infatuation on the subject of Gentile conversion, he not only expects to successfully resist all efforts of the Gentiles to wipe out the saints, but he really entertains serious hopes of proselyting among the Gentiles, until polygamy will be so popular and strengthened among all Christian society, that it will be impossible to legislate against it.

Mormon proselytes are now in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, New Orleans, Baltimore, and Washington. Thus Brigham, Sr., does not hesitate to beard the anti-Mormon lions right in their capital. Brighham Young, Jr., has long been on duty in Philadelphia—ay, has actually wooed, won and wedded a beautiful Quakeress, who kindly consented to become his third better third.

For many long years, Mormon missionaries have been laboring in all the large cities of Europe, and having converted and recruited their tens of thousands of saints, have imported them into this country, and settled them on the shores of the Great Salt Lake.

Thus doth the ruler of Utah—the Prophet of the Saints—like the Pharisees of old, compass both sea and land to gain converts and add to the strength of Mormon institutions.

When I read the above, and more especially that paragraph that speaks of Mormon missionaries, the idea suggested itself: Can we, who have the pure gospel, and make but little effort to disseminate it, when such dissemination requires dollers and cents, stand fully approved of before God, while those who worship at the shrine of idolatry—treading under foot the purest precepts of morality taught by Christ, are making the effort to proselyte, as indicated by the above. Resignation.

There is a little bright-eyed girl,
Her name is Ida May,
She is her papa's little pet,
Just three years old to-day.

We love her much, she is so dear,
And full of life and glee,
We'd miss her much, if she were gone
The house would empty be.

She is a precious little gift,
Alone to us she's given;
But then how often death does come,
And take away the living.

We often look upon the forms
That in the coffin lie,
And sorrow feel, for those whose hearts
Must say the sad good-by.

But when those little ones are called
From this sad earth away,
We know their happy spirits dwell
In an ETERNAL DAY.

Why should we then so much desire
Their daily presence here?
It is because their innocence
Our present life does cheer.

The Savior left the courts above,
Entered this world a child,
O may we all like HIM become,
OBEDIENT, HUMBLE, MILD.

We then should feel to be resigned,
However hard may be,
To part with those we hold most dear,
God said: "Love only me."

There is a day when we shall meet
The loved ones gone before,
Beyond this vale of sorrow here,
Where we shall part no more.

Zeal for Souls.

A traveler was journeying in the darkness of night along a road that led to a deep and rapid river, which, swollen by sudden rains, was chafing and roaring within its precipitous banks. The bridge that crossed the stream had been swept away by the torrent, but he knew it not. A man met him, and, after inquiring whither he was bound, said to him in an indifferent way—

"Are you aware that the bridge is gone?"

"No," was the answer. "Why do you think so?"

"Oh, I heard such a report this afternoon, and, though I am not certain about it, you had, perhaps, better not proceed."

Deceived by the hesitating and undecided manner in which the information was given, the traveler pushed onward in the way of death. Soon another meeting him, cried out in consternation—

"Sir, sir, the bridge is gone!"

"Oh, yes," replied the wayfarer, "some one told me the story a little distance back; but from the careless tone in which he told it I am sure it is only an idle tale."

"Oh, it is true, it is true!" exclaimed the other. "I know the bridge is gone, for I barely escaped being carried away with it myself.—Danger is before you, and you must not go on." And in the excitement of his feelings he grasped him by the hands, by the arms, by the clothes, and besought him not to rush upon manifest destruction. Convinced by the earnest voice, the earnest eyes, the earnest gestures, the traveler turned back and was saved. The intelligence in both cases was the same; but the manner of its conveyance in the one gave it an air of a fable, in the other an air of truth.

So it is only through a burning zeal for the salvation of the lost—a zeal glowing in the heart, and flashing out in the look and action, and utterance—that the confidence of unbelief can be evermore, and the heedless travelers of the broad way won to the path of life and happiness. Love is the most potent logic: interest and sympathy are the most subduing eloquence.—

Look Out for Him.

For the great adversary who always aims at the open point in the harness. A shrewd writer says:

"Does not Satan attack us in our weakest point? How he suits his mode of temptation to the disposition of the victim! Are you vain? In how dazzling a lustre will he place the pleasure of this poor world before you! Are you ambitious? In what splendid honor will he make the great things of it appear! Are you discontented? In what exalted light will he place the advantages of others before your eyes! Are you jealous? In what strong colors will he place the kindness of the person you love toward another than you! Are you of an ill temper? How he will make you look on the body hates you, or intends to slight you! Are you indolent? How wearisome will he make the slightest effort for another's good seem in your eyes! Are you too active? How useless will he make the quiet hour of prayer, and thought, and reading seem to you! He tempts us to what our nature is most inclined; he suits his allurements to our inclination. If we are of a quiet temper, he will not tempt us there: if we are only ambitious, he will take care to make us jealous; if we are too active, he will not tempt us to be idle. He knows us well; he drives our inclination to its far extreme."

THE BRIGHT SIDE.—Look on the bright side. It is the right side.—The times may be hard, but it will make them no easier to wear a gloomy and sad countenance. It is the sunshine and not the cloud, that makes a flower. There is always before or around us that which should cheer and fill the heart with warmth. The sky is blue ten times when it is black once. You have troubles, it may be. So have others. None are free from them: and perhaps it is as well that none should be. They give sinew and tone to life—fortitude and courage to man. That would be a dull sea, and the sailor would never acquire the skill, where there was nothing to disturb the surface of the ocean. It is the duty of every one to extract all the happiness and enjoyment he can within and without him; and above all, he should look on the bright side of all things.—What though things do look a little dark? The cloud will turn and the night will end in broad day. In the long run, the great balance right itself. What is ill becomes well—what is wrong, right. Men are not made to hang down their heads or lips, and those who do only show that they are departing from the paths of true common sense and right. There is more virtue in one sunbeam than in a whole hemisphere of clouds and gloom. Therefore, we repeat, look on the bright side of things. Cultivate all that is warm and good—hate the cold and repulsive, the dark and morose.

If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small.

Selected by Amos S. Chamberlain.

The Prodigal.

Afflictions, though they seem severe,
In every part are sent,
They stopped the prodigal's career,
And caused him to repent.

Although he no relentings felt,
Till he had spent his store,
His stubborn heart began to melt,
When hunger pinched him sore.

"What have I gained by sin," he said
"But hunger, shame, and fear?
My father's house abounds with bread,
And I am starving here.

I'll go, and with a mournful tongue,
Fall down before his face,
Unworthy to be called his son,
I'll seek a servant's place."

His father saw him coming back,
He saw, and ran, and smil'd;
And threw his arms around the neck
Of his rebellious child.

"Father I've sinned, but O! forgive,"
"Enough," the father said,
"Rejoice, my house, my son's alive,
For whom I mourned as dead.

Now let the fatted calf be slain,
Go spread the news around,
My son was dead, but lives again:
Was lost, but now is found."

'T is thus the Lord his love reveals,
To call poor sinners home;
More than a father's love he feels,
And welcomes all that come.

Hunting for Trouble.

Is very poor business. If we haven't anything else to do we had better inform our friends of our situation, and beg of them to give us something to do. We have no need to look for trouble; but if we do, we will find plenty. "The luckiest person that ever lived might have woes enough if he set himself seriously to work looking them up." How very true. If you have no trouble, go to work looking some up, and you will not be obliged to search long.—There is a vile inventor of trouble, who has an unlimited range in this world of ours; and whenever he sees any one who has the least inclination to look for trouble, he is on hand without delay to assist. He has a peculiar faculty of making trouble out of almost everything, and he don't wait to be invited. You know who he is; and you know he is a dangerous associate; and if you don't want his company and influence, don't hunt for trouble.

Never turn a blessing round to see if it has got a dark side to it, and always take it for granted that things are blessings until they prove to be something else. This I deem to be excellent advice. How often when a blessing comes to us, we worry ourselves out of all enjoyment in it simply because we fear something we hardly know what, and so we keep turning it over to find the dark side we fear it has, until we lose the blessing we might have had.

Oh! let us forever cease hunting for the dark side, if we don't hunt it up, we may, perhaps, be spared the pain of seeing it, even though there be one, and let us accept our blessings with thankful hearts; then we can have the presence of the good angels with us, and they can help us, as by a magic wand, turn trouble into blessings.

Wearing Mourning.

We long for the day when this custom shall be obsolete. It is unbecoming the truly afflicted one.—The wearer says, by the black garments, "I have lost a dear friend. I am in deep sorrow." But true grief does not parade itself before the eye of the stranger; much less does it assert its extent. The stricken one naturally goes apart from the world to pour out the tears. Real affliction seeks privacy. It is no respect to the departed friend to say we are in sorrow. If we have real grief it will be discovered. When God has entered a household in the awful chastisement of death, it is time for religious meditation and communion with God on the part of the survivors. How sadly out of place, then, are the milliner and the dressmaker, the trying on of dresses and the trimming of bonnets. There is something profane in exciting the vanity of a young girl by fitting a waist, or trying on a hat, when the corpse of a father is lying in an adjoining room. It is a sacrilege to drag the widow forth from her grief to be fitted for a gown, or to select a veil. It is often terribly oppressive to the poor. The widow left desolate, with half a dozen little children, the family means already reduced by the long sickness of the father, must draw on her scanty purse to pay a new wardrobe throughout for herself and children, throwing away the goodly stock of garments already prepared, when she most likely knows not where she is to get bread for these little ones. Truly may fashion be called a tyrant, when it robs a widow of her last dollar. Surely your sorrow will not be questioned, even if you should not call in the milliner to help display it. Do not in your affliction help uphold a custom which will turn the affliction of your poorer neighbor to deeper poverty as well as sorrow.

How sad it is, that, when Christians congregate together, whether it be at the tea table or elsewhere, there is so little talk of the Lord, and so little inquiry about his truth. We are ever ready to talk of our sect, our church, our pastor, our success, our meetings, our enterprises, etc., but O! how seldom we sit down quietly to talk of Jesus. It is very humiliating to think how little time we are alone with the Lord, and how little we relish quiet communion with himself. There may be much zeal, much service, much noise, much appliances and means, and yet very little of Jesus. It is joy to him, when we come away from our pleasures and pursuits, our engagements and our services, to spend a few brief moments in his presence, to breathe his love, and hear his love, and hear his word. If a fond father saw his children so much engaged in service for him as to have no time to sit on his knee and commune with him, would it not fill his heart with grief? And thus it is with our heavenly Father when his children are more occupied with work than himself. The result of service engaged in without communion, is loss of reward hereafter, and restlessness, barrenness and agitation now. On the other hand, to be occupied with Christ himself will lead us to activity for him in the right way and give us joy in our work.

Never choose those for your friends who laugh at and make sport of holy things.

The Foolish Virgins.

When descending from the sky
The bridegroom shall appear:
And the solemn midnight cry,
Shall call professors near:
How the sound our hearts will damp!
How will shame o'erspread each face!
If we only have a lamp
Without the oil of grace.

Foolish virgins then will wake,
And seek for a supply!
But in vain the point they take
To borrow or to buy.
Then with those they now despise
Earnestly they'll wish to share!
But the best among the wise,
Will have no oil to spare.

Wise are they and truly blest,
Who then shall ready be!
But despair will seize the rest,
And dreadful misery:
"Once" they'll cry, "we scorned to doubt,
Though in Him our trust we put;
Now our lamp of hope is out,
The door of mercy shut."

If they then presume to plead:
"Lord, open to us now!
We on earth have heard and pray'd
And with thy saints did bow."
He will answer from his throne,
Though you with my people mix'd,
"Yet to me ye never were known.
Depart, your doom is fix'd."

That none who worship here,
May hear the word depart!
Lord impress a godly fear
On each professor's heart.
Help us Lord to search the camp,
Let us not ourselves beguile;
Trusting to a dying lamp
Without a stock of oil.

The Dream.

A Christian lady dreamed that falling asleep on earth, she awoke in heaven. Her first thought was of inexpressible joy that she was safe in heaven—no longer harrassed by fears of losing it—not a doubt remaining of her interest in the heavenly inheritance. As she was exulting in this great joy, Jesus himself approached her, holding in his hand a crown of glory. As he placed the diadem on her brow, she looked wonderingly into his face, and beheld, mingled with unutterable love that beamed on his countenance, a look of sadness she could not comprehend. Can sorrow then enter heaven? and can it reach even the loving face of the Redeemer himself? but ere she had time to shape them into words, Jesus comprehending her thoughts, pointed, without speaking to "an innumerable company" who were crowns like the one just placed on her head, except that they were all adorned with stars—some with only one or two, some with many, but hers had none. Looking up to the Savior, she would have asked the reason of this disparity; but again He answered ere she had time to utter the question: "You," said the blessed Jesus, "have believed on me; therefore you are sure of heaven; for none who believe on me can ever perish. But you never won a soul to me—not one, through your instrumentality, has a share in this heavenly glory; and therefore you have no stars in your crown to lay at my feet, in token of your gratitude for my everlasting love. Can you wonder that I grieve for loss—a loss that now can never be repaired?"

The intense emotion produced by these words awoke her; and she adds: "My first waking thought was, to fall on my knees and thank God that I was on earth and not in heaven.

The Dividing Line.

Where does the dividing line run between true religion and the world? We answer that it runs just where God's word puts it; and a conscience which is enlightened by the word and by prayer does not commonly fail to discover it. Where Christ would be likely to go if he were on earth, is the right side; but where a Christian would be ashamed to have his Master find him, there he ought never to find himself. Wherever a Christian can go, and conscientiously ask God's blessing on what he is doing, there let the Christian go. He is not likely to wander over the line. And shall a church member enter a play house, or into a dancing room, and honestly ask God's blessing on the amusements, and come away a better Christian for it, can let him go; but not before.

But should not every good man be a "friend of the world?" Was not the divine Jesus a friend of the world when he so loved it that he gave himself for its redemption? Did not Paul love the world when he endured hardship, humiliations, and martyrdom to lead sinners to the cross? Ah yes! very true; but what the Redeemer and his apostle were after was not sinners' sins, but sinners' souls. And they sought to save the world, not by conforming to it, but by transforming it to a higher and holier ideal of life.

Nor is it by going over to the world that we can save the worldling. If we are to impress the world, we must live above the world; if we would save sinners we must, in the same sense that Jesus was, be "separated from sinners." The moment we go over the line to "curry favor" with the votaries of sin, we never reach them, and only run the risk of ruining ourselves. Would to God that in trying to draw the world into conformity to Christ, we did not allow the world to drag us down into conformity with itself!—Exchange.

"In every enjoyment, O Christian, look unto Jesus: receive it by proceeding from his love, and purchased by his agonies. In every tribulation look unto Jesus: mark his gracious hand managing the scourge, or mingling the bitter cup; attempering it to a proper degree of severity. In every infirmity and failing look unto Jesus, thy merciful High Priest. In every prayer look unto Jesus, thy prevailing advocate. In every temptation look unto Jesus, the Author of thy strength. But especially, when the hour of thy departure approaches, when all the springs of life are irreparably breaking—then look unto Jesus with a believing eye. Like expiring Stephen, behold Him standing at the right hand of God, ready to succor his people in this their last extremity. Yes, my Christian friend, when thy journey through life is finished, and thou art arrived on the very verge of immortality, then look unto Jesus. View him, the only way to the everlasting mansions, as the only ground to the abodes of bliss.

We often omit the good we might do in consequence of thinking about that which it is out of our power to do.

McVeytown Meeting.

On Saturday evening, 15th, we dropped down to McVeytown, for a little soul-refreshment, knowing that a feast of good things was being opened at that place, and an invitation had been extended. We rejoiced in the prospect of being freed from our office prison to which we have been confined for the past two months, day and night, and in which we did not hear a sermon—save one of our own. And even now we were very nearly being disappointed; for at the station we were met by several brethren, among whom was Archy VanDyke, with conveyance to take me with him to a meeting some four miles distant, and it was already night. A compromise was however effected by which I was permitted to accompany brother P S. Myers to the Spring Run meeting-house to hear Elder John Wise preach, for which we owe thanks to brother VanDyke.

Brother Wise spoke from the words of John in the last two verses of his 20th chapter, and especially from the clause: "But these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ." His discourse was interesting and refreshing.

After meeting brother Peter S. Myers took us to his home and cared for us, and on Sunday morning brought us back to the meeting-house again. It now fell to our lot to preach, brother Wise having been taken to another place. So we read the words of Jesus: "All power is given unto me, in heaven and in earth," and then said what we had to say, and sat down Brother Myers assisted, and the congregation was respectable and attentive.

After meeting went home with brother Christian Swigart, a blind brother. We voluntered our arm as a support to him, remarking that we presumed he knew where he lived. So we walked along as he seemed to direct, all the time engaged in conversation, until he discovered that we were on the wrong way. We then thought of the "blind leading the blind," and have since concluded that it was a good illustration of that scripture. I was blind as to the place we wanted to go to; he knew the place but could not see the way, and yet each confided in the other as a safe guide. We have learned that he who would be a guide ought both to know the place and the way thereto. As Jesus says: "Whither I go ye know, and the way ye know." But we found the abode of our brother, and spent a few hours very pleasantly, when brother P. S Myers came along with his buggy to take us to Yoder's school house, some five or six miles distant. Arrived in time to spend a few minutes at the house of brother Yoder. Preached to a full house of attentive listeners as the Lord gave ability. Thence to the house of brother Henry Hertzler, Matawana, McVeytown Station, where we were entertained for the night, and sent homeward by the first train next morning, refreshed in body and soul.

Brethren Wise, Graybill Myers, and Wm. Howe, remained to assist in the ministry, and we hope the Lord will bless the labors.

Why are we Called "Brethren"?

In our correspondent's department will be found a friendly epistle from an intelligent gentleman, a minister in another society of Christian professors, who wishes to know why the Brethren call themselves the "Church of the Brethren."

When Isaac had repaired the wells which his father had dug, he "called their names after the names by which his father had called them." Gen. 26: 18. So, after the fountains from which had issued the truths of the Religion of Jesus, had been well nigh closed up, and then were re-opened by a number of zealous servants of the Lord, who associated themselves into a united body for that purpose, they called themselves by the same name that the fathers made use of. And so the same name has descended down to us, and we have been using it without perhaps making the inquiry necessary to satisfy our correspondent, of their reasons for using it. We observe in the outset that the term "Church of the Brethren," is original with this paper, and we have therefore ordered the quotation marks to be taken away.

The object and use of a name is to designate a person or class of persons. There is a wide field for thought in the study of names. The "Adams (or perhaps "Adamses") have not only lost their station, but very nearly the name. And while we rejoice to have the nature restored, we confess we are not particularly partial to the name. "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." But we must come to the point.

We rocognize each other by the name brethren; as Jesus declares: "One is your teacher, and all ye are brethren." Matt. 23: 8. And we read of the "Brethren that dwell in Judea." Acts 11: 29. And that the Lord was "seen of above five hundred Brethren." 1 Cor. 15: 6. And Timothy was to put the Brethren in remembrance of certain things. 1 Tim. 4: 6. In these instances the name Brethren most certainly refers to the association of persons who followed Jesus. In fact we know of no other name used by the New Testament congregations, as used among themselves for themselves, than that of Brethren. Jesus called his followers his disciples, and so they are, but it is more becoming for him to address them as such than for them to assume the title. Yet we have no objection to being called a Disciple of Jesus.

After the followers of Jesus were well organized they were also called Christians; first at Antioch. But we think they did not assume the name. It was given them by others, because they followed Christ. So we use no other name to designate ourselves than that of Brethren. But others call us what they will, and hence we are called by different names. But no matter, if we are Brethren in Christ we have a right to the name.

These are our reasons for using the term, and we think they are scriptural; and believe our friends will agree with us. "German Baptist" we do not claim or admire, and therefore shall not defend it. True we are a Baptist, and we are German, and bear a relation to the class of persons whose principles and nativity identify us as such.

We hope our correspondents will be able to gather some information from our disconnected explanation. And if we answer incorrectly we hope our brethren will amend.

Brethren's Tune Book.

We will publish as early as the work can be accomplished, a book to be entitled the BRETHREN'S HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. which shall contain an appropriate tune to every hymn in our New Hymn Book, and as many more as will be thought advantageous to those who will be expected to use the book. It will be printed in seven character notes.

Now the object of this notice is to solicit the aid of the brethren and sisters in making a suitable selection. And we invite all who feel an interest in the work to send us a copy of such tunes as may be, or have favorites with them. Either copy them or send us the original. The printed copy always preferred. We also desire suggestions, propositions, and any advice that may be of advantage in the prosecution of the work—to make it good and hasten its completion. Postage paid on matter sent us for this purpose will be refunded, if desired.

Hydrophobia.

A contributor to the Evening Star; says: The Leipsic German Journal publishes the following antidote for the bite of a mad dog, which it says was an exclusive secret with a Saxon forester, but who, upon growing old, therefore procured its publication.—He says he has used it for fifteen years, and rescued many human beings and cattle from the fearful death of hydrophobia; Take immediately warm vinegar or tepid water, wash the wound clean therewith, and then dry it; then pour upon the wound a few drops of hydrochloric acid, because mineral acids destroy the poison of the saliva, by which means the latter is neutralized.

Query and Answered.

Will some brother explain how we are to understand that the children of Israel lusted after the flesh pots of Egypt? Ex. 16: 3. Since they took their flocks and herds—yea "very much cattle" along with them—and since the Lord sent them quails and manna, did they not live of their flocks and herds?

Answer to 2nd Query, in No. 2.

God created eve before the 7th day. Those that doubt, may with propriety doubt also that Adam was created previous to the 7th day; as the manner of his creation was not described until in the 2nd chapter of Gen. And in the 1st chapter 27th verse it stated that he created them male and female.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church interest from all parts of the brotherhood. Writer's name and address required in every communication, as a token of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript will not be returned. All communications for publication should be written on one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry; By request I let you know of the tour that our Elder, brother Jacob M. Thomas, and myself have lately made through West Virginia. On the evening of the 29th we left his house on horseback, and had meeting at a place known as Blackbarney, in Preston county. Thirtieth, we arrived at brother Keiger's; had meeting in a school-house in Barbour county. Thirty-first, being Sunday, we had meeting at brother Elias Anvill's.

Next day, November 1st, traveled about five miles to friend Israel Gainer, had two meetings. On the 2nd we left the Barbour branch and arrived in the Buchanan congregation, at friend Deppo's. On the 3rd had two meetings in the United Brethren house on Peeks run. On the 4th at brother Joseph Hoasers, near the town of Buchanan, in Upsher county. On the 5th we traveled about five miles up Sand Run and commenced a series of meetings, had five meetings and closed on Sunday evening. On Monday, the 8th, to Indian Camp meeting on the 9th and 10th; and on the 11th. We arrived at brother Fultz' and had four meetings in two days. Thirteenth attended a communion meeting at brother Fitzgerald's. The labor of the meeting rested on us two being the only strange brethren present. There was quite a refreshing time. The brethren and sisters appeared to enjoy themselves well. After the Lovefeast closed at night, there were two applicants for baptism. After the necessary instructions were given them that night, we left them in the hands of the brethren to be attended to the next day.

On Sunday evening arrived at brother David Bosley's, near Ball Town, Braxton county, on the Little Kanawha River. Had eleven meetings at that place. The Brethren had preached but once at this place before. One brother baptized six last August, and during our meeting there were four more added to the church by baptism, and there were four more applicants. We organized the ten members into a congregation by the election of brother David Boseley speaker, and brother George Moss deacon. It being a new place for the Brethren, there appears to be no opposition as yet at the place. Our meetings were well attended and a great interest manifested by the people, and I believe that there is a prospect of much good being done.

We left them on Saturday the 20th and arrived at brother Henry Jones', near the line of Lewis county. Staid over Sunday and had two meetings. Left there on Monday the 22nd for the church in Lewis county. Arrived at Dr. Peter Musser's, and his brother Tobias Musser's, about eight miles from Weston, county seat of Lewis county, and had a series of meetings, closing on the evening of the 26th. Twenty-seventh, we left for Peeks Run; had meeting on Sunday. Monday morning started for home, and arrived at brother Elias Anvill's and next day at brother Bollyard's, and on December the 1st at brother Wm. Buckelow's; on the 2nd at brother Thomas' and on the 3rd at home. There is a great opening in West Virginia for the Brethren. There were still calls farther in the State. Could not some of the bretbren visit through some of the western counties. We would have gone farther but it was late in the season.

Notes of Travel.

J. S. FLORY.

The 8th of January had meeting at Sams Creek meeting house; after meeting brother E. W. Engler took me to his home near New Windsor, and was kindly entertained by his family, in the evening brother Engler took me to elder Philip Boyles, where I spent a short time pleasantly. At night brother Engler took me to Pipe Creek meeting house.—Brother Solomon Stoner met me there and took me to his home after meeting where I had the pleasure of meeting my cousin, his companion and his family. Meeting next day, Sunday, at Pipe Creek again; home with brother Ephraim Stoner. Meeting at night at Union Bridge; all night at the home of sister Sophia Lightner, who entertained us kindly. Meeting next day at Beaver Dam meeting house, at 10 o'clock; home with my uncle, Jacob Stoner; meeting again at same point in the evening. Went to cousin Abraham Stoner's, had the pleasure of getting acquainted with his kind family, but was sorry to find cousin Jane severely afflicted; but she was willing to submit to the will of the Lord. She seemed willing to submit her case to the great Heavenly physician, and her hope was in the merits of a dear Savior.

Meeting again next day at Beaver Dam meeting house; dined with brother D. Stoner. Meeting at night at Goodintent house; very much crowded and many could not get admittance. Home with brother D. Grossnickle. Next day went to Ridge meeting house in Monocacy district; home with brother H. Shriver; meeting at night at Ridge meeting house again. All night with brother Krise. Next morning visited sister Ecker who has been afflicted for several years; had a short season of devotion with her; then went to elder D. P. Saylor where we were kindly cared for. P. M. visited a number of brethren and sisters had religious exercise with them; then visited D. P. Saylor's married daughters who are relatives of mine. Took supper with brother S. Weybright. Meeting at night at Keys house of worship, which is property donated to the public by the author of the famous National song "The Star Spangled Banner." All night with brother John Weybright: next morning at Middleburgh, brother Solomon Stoner left me having accompanied me for a week. Thanks to him for his kindness. Brother D. Grossnickle kindly took me to brother Upton Waltz, who had volunteered to take me to brother Jesse Roops where I met with a kind reception. Thanks to brother W. for bringing me on thus far. And thanks to God for his care over me.

Brother Henry; As some of the brethren love to hear from the different arms of God's Church, and as I believe the Lord has worked among the people in this part of God's moral vineyard I will relate some of his doings. Brother Davis Younce and brother Jacob Cripe labored amongst us. There were eight of the sons and daughters of Adam made willing to turn in with the people of God, by obeying the Lord in the holy ordinance of baptism. Some of our old fathers and mothers, and many more souls were made to tremble under the sound of the gospel, as it was preached with power. May God bless brethren Younce and Cripe, and enable them to still go on in their calling, and warn sinners to flee the wrath to come. The ark of the Lord is still moving slowly with us. One of our neighbors, while he was under conviction, and while his wife was made willing to go down to the liquid stream and put on Christ, was taken violently with the Lung Fever, and is still lying on the bed of affliction. The Lord has begun a work with him, and he will complete it.

Query Answered

On page 731, Vol. 5, brother H. A. Snyder asks the following questions, which he desires answered through the Companion. He refers to Luke 17:37. "Wheresoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together." What body? Matthew 24:28, speaks of the same body and calls it the carcass. The German version of Luke is: "Wo das Aas ist, da sammeln sich die Adler." Luke and Matt. have it the same. Christ was speaking of his second coming. He gave them to understand that many false Christs will come, shew signs and wonders to deceive if it were possible the very elect. Christ's coming will be in the clouds of heaven, as lightning finding many unprepared, therefore he says one shall be taken and the other left. The disciples wanted to know where that is where he would appear. The answer was, "wheresoever the body is thither will the eagles be gathered. Christ gave his disciples to understand that even as the eagles will gather together where the body or carcass is, so will the saints be gathered where he will be. Now the disciples could understand that, even as the eagles will gather to that body, even so shall the saints be gathered. Christ will appear in person, even as ye have seen him going into heaven. Acts 1:11. This was the answer to the question the disciples asked.

STEPHEN YODER.

BEAVER CREEK, MD., }
January 11th 1870. }

Dear Companion; Thrice blessed messenger; thou art ever welcome in the mansions of the saints; thou hast carried the grief and anguish of my soul through the church of the living God, and didst again return, though still and silent as thou art, with a message of joy from one whom I had almost forgotten. Go again in the spirit of God, and carry upon the wings of love, the joy which was caused by a secret touch of an unseen hand! Pass gently by the noise and confusion of this sinful world, until thou reach the threshold of that dear sister Ruhama Riley in the city of brotherly love, and say for me, that my soul leaped within me, when I heard that one heartfelt prayer had gone up, and pierced the inner court of God's eternal throne.

Dear sister; I think I have felt the power of your prayer, the inner life was moved, and I can again, if but faintly, see the ladder that Jacob saw. But I am not yet fully restored; I have spent my beauty; I have lived too wastefully upon the riches of our Father's blessings. Now I am poor, and must only depend upon the scanty pension which the great king feels to bestow upon me. The hand of the Lord is laid heavily upon me; he has made me to pass through sickness, afflictions, and poverty, yet I feel to say with Job, though the Lord slay me, yet will I trust in him. God is able to bring good out of evil, and will without a doubt bring it to pass.

Now dear sister; many of my brethren and sisters may think it strange that I complain so much of my low condition in the spiritual life, being so long in the service of the Master; but be it remembered that God can overrule all things; he has power to kill, and power to make alive. Although I have often been called to the bedside of the sick and the dying, and have spoken words of comfort and consolation, and have stretched out my hands towards heaven, and directed my prayer towards his holy temple, until I was bathed in the sweat of anguish, and can even now remember the lingering look of those who called me blessed—but O! the leaf is turned over; a change has been brought about. My spirit is broken, my heart bleeds, my soul struggles for life; fears, within, and troubles without. Even now I must drop my pen to wait upon the sick of my family.—Now the care of the church, the study of the word, so that it can be held forth to a dying world in its purity. O! how can I endure it without help from above? Are there no more Ruhamas—no Marys in the church of God, who will think of me in their closets and let the sacred flame of their prayers go up within the vail! Brethren and sisters, lift up the hands of your speakers as Israel lifted up the hands of Moses, for they need strength and wisdom from a higher source than this earth can give. The care of souls hangs upon them and the people look for them to show the examples. For this cause we make our appeal to the church—in whom the power is invested—to assist us in the holy war; for the struggle is between life and death. If we fail to obey the command of our captain we fall into the hands of the enemy. Then our doom is fixed. Our inheritance in the promised rest forever [illegible], and the chambers of darkness opened to receive us. O! pray a little longer! fight faithfully in the conflict, and let us all throw our mite into the scale of perfection, so that none of us be found wanting.

Please, sister Ruhama, give your address in full; and write again, either through our beloved Companion, or by letter.

Yours in Love,

ANDREW CORT.

Brother Holsinger: By the advice of brother Philip Boyle, I wish to say a few words through the Companion, to the Brethren, at Pipe Creek and Beaver Dam, Md., and Marsh Creek, Pa. I am John T. Lewis, colored, who joined the Brethren at Pipe Creek, Md. in 1853. My greetings to all. I am now living in the city of Elmira, N. Y. I left Maryland, in 1860, and came to Gettysburgh, Pa. In 1862, came from there to this State. I must here say, that surely goodness and mercy has followed me, for through all the war and bloodshed I have been out of the way, and saw none of it, for which I feel to give thanks.

I have not been able to meet with the brethren since 1863; yet I am trying by the help of God to live in accordance with the gospel and the order of the Brethren. All the preaching I have is in the Bible, the Companion, and the Gospel Visitor, which are great comforters to me. If any one don't know the value of the Visitor and Companion, let them be where they can't get to church, and I think they will learn to appreciate them.

I can not hear of any brethren in New York State. There are a great many churches here, but their chief object seems to be popularity. You cannot tell the members from the world only by seeing them take communion. They appear to give but little heed to the teaching of the Bible. They don't appear to know anything about the Brethren, and they laugh at the idea of feet washing, upon the whole they are a fast people. I am getting along about as well as one could expect to in my circumstances. I am living in hope of being able to move to some settlement of the Brethren where I may again enjoy the privilege of hearing the gospel preached in its purity. I hope the brethren and sisters will pray for me, that I may be faithful to the end. If any of the brethren will be kind enough to write to me, my address is, Elmira N. Y. Box 1106. I am a poor scholar and if this does not take too much correction, I hope you will give it a place in the Companion, in full or in part as you think best, and if it is too much trouble throw it aside.

JOHN T. LEWIS.

You will see we have given it in full, and for your encouragement we will say it did not require so very much correction. And should you have any good thoughts which you would desire to give to the Brotherhood through the Companion we will gladly assist you in the shaping them for you. We hope you will continue to receive encouragement from our columns, and preserve your integrity to the last. Hope some of the brethren with whom you are acquainted will present you with something adapted to your special wants.

Inquiry.

BROTHER HOLSINGER, dear sir:—The first and second numbers of the Companion for the current year are before me. I thank you for your kindness in sending them to me. I am much pleased with the contents. A true christian spirit breathes thro' them, the influence for good, of which must be felt by your many readers.

I learn from your "prospectus," found on the last page of the Companion, that in publishing your paper, you have a three-fold design in view;—

1st. "To advocate Truth." No higher work than this can any man engage in; and there is a glorious reward in store for those who advocate and obey the truth. "I am the way, the truth, and the life" says Christ.—Again; "You shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth," continues the blessed Savior. And to leave us in no doubt what the word is, Peter says—"And this is the word which by the Gospel is preached unto you." To "advocate the truth" then, is to advocate the Gospel. And may the blessing of Heaven attend all those who do that.

2nd. Your second design is to "expose error." Here there is a wide field. Protestanism generally—without saying anything about Catholicism—is full of error—grand fatal error. With its creeds and its dogmas its traditions, and its "doctrines the commandments of men"—it is full of rottenness and decay. To expose all this, and give the truth instead, is a work,—thankless as it may be in the eyes of degenerate religionists—that any good man might be found to lift a finger in.

3rd. "To encourage the true Christain on his way to Zion"—It is one thing to become a Christian; quite another to remain in the path of duty. To this laudable work your paper is committed—and I bid you God speed in the performance of it.

But to my Inquiry! I make it not for the sake of discussion; for such a thought is not in my mind. I make it not to try to puzzle you, or to disturb your equanimity. I make it simply that I may obtain the desired information. The inquiry is this:—

In your "prospectus" you announce yourself as a member of the "Church of the Brethren," sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists." &c.

Now brother Holsinger, why do the good people with whom you stand identified, call themselves the "Church of the Brethren," or by that other name of "German Baptist?" I candidly think that both names are unscriptural; but I may be mistaken in this, as I do not know the grounds on which you rest the matter.

Will you be so kind as to give your answer to this inquiry in the "Family Companion?"

Yours in Gospel work. B.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—JESUS. At $1.50 Per Annu

VOLUME VI. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, FEB. 1, 1870. NUMBER 5.

The Preacher.

He took a shaft both strong and straight,
A shaft he had polished with labor great.
He winged it with sweet eloquence,
With learning and with subtle sense.
Boldly he drew, and he aimed with care,
But it wounded only the idle air.

A second he took both straight and strong,
Winged with a passionate sense of wrong.
He drew it stoutly, and aimed it true;
The mark he aimed at was plain to view.
Swift it fled, yet it lighted wide;
For it touched on a rock, and it swerved aside.

He reached his hand and took from above
A slender arrow barbed with love.
He aimed it with but little art,
Yet it touched and wounded a human heart.

His last, his lightest, was winged with prayer,
And he shot it forth through the yielding air,
No careful aim the preacher took,
For he turned to heaven his upward look;
Yet it pierced a heart both hard and proud,
The hardest heart in all the crowd.

For the Companion.

"In Christ."

"For as many of you, as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. If any man be in Christ he is a new creature, old things have past away and behold all things, have become new, "In me ye might have peace, in the world ye shall have tribulation; be of good cheer I have overcome the world."

Every child of God is in Christ, "whether they be male or female, bond or free, they are all one in Christ Jesus. There happiness is secured in Christ. "For where I am there ye shall be also. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you, not as the world giveth, give I unto you." As long as we are of the world we cannot have this peace and happiness, which fadeth not away. "In the world ye shall have tribulation." Our future happiness depends entirely upon our being in Christ, "Without me ye can do nothing," "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in me," "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, which fruit is unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." If our happiness depends on our being in Christ, is it not an essential point for us to fully understand how we get into Christ. There is such a diversity of opinion now in the world, about this article of faith, that it is not safe for us to rely altogether in what is said, and written by man. The word of God is sometimes rejected, and the error of man is taken and studied, until the mind becomes interwoven with the error, and becomes a settled point in faith. We take the plain word of God for the man of our instruction; we believe it is sufficient to satisfy our minds of this one thing, that we enter into Christ by baptism. The Apostle Paul is very plain and forever settles the question "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." It is very evident that what the Apostle says he means. It is very plain to our mind. There is but one door into the church, and Paul says, we enter in by baptism. If we are wrong in believing that baptism brings us into Christ we are not wrong by ourselves, but the great Apostles of the gentiles is wrong with us. If we have complied with the demands of the Gospel, we have entered in through the door into the sheepfold. There is but one fold and one Sheperd. Christ says: "I am the door, by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture. We are in a saved condition, when we enter into the sheepfold. When we are done toiling here, and our redemption is complete in Christ, and we are safe housed in our Father's house, then it is we will go from mansion to mansion, feasting upon the rich pasture of God. "Shall go in and out and find pasture." How encouraging is the thought; we shall feast in our Father's house. Brethren this is what we are toiling for. Then be not weary in well doing' for our "redemption is complete in Christ."

Close Communion.

This is one of the greatest questions with which we have to deal. The tendency of the present age towards universal church fellowship among the various evangelical denominations, places the Brethren often in an unpleasant light. We are accused of being narrowminded, bigoted, uncharitable towards other denominations, when we invite none to the Lord's table but our members. I fear too many do not fully understand the nature and intent of the Supper and the Communion. I am far from being satisfied with my knowledge of these subjects. Whom should we admit to the Lord's table? Church members only or those wishing to become Church members also? Some say those who are properly baptized and in fellowship with the church. We would ask, were all the Apostles baptized when the Supper was instituted? If not, can baptism be made a criterion of admittance? What is the intent of the Communion? Is it an act by which we show our belief in Christ and commit our souls to him? If so, must baptism necessarily precede the drinking of "this cup"? We may say to all pedo-baptists that we are as liberal as they are in regard to this question! Since we admit all our own church members of good character, while they deny this privilege to their grown up children not yet confirmed, though "baptized" (sprinkled), no matter how good their character, but this does not meet the question. We can not justify ourselves by the defects of other denominations. We would like to hear a free discussion of this subject in meekness, with as little human reason and as much scriptural proof as possible.

S. Z. SHARP

Two Christians had quarrelled in the morning; in the evening one of them sent a note to the other: "Brother, the sun is going down!" Nothing further was needed to effect a reconciliation.

For the Companion.

That Great Light.

Not having an opportunity to attend church to-day to hear the word of God preached, we have to content ourself by reading the word, and while so doing the above subject came to our notice. Then the thought suggests itself to our mind, to comment on the same, and submit it to the Companion.

When we take a retrospective view of the past, we find in many instances where the people walked in darkness longing for liberation from their yoke of bondage. When we look back but a few years into the great political darkness in which our country was involved, when great armies were called out in bloody contest, when proclamation after proclamation was issued, calling for more men, how great was that darkness! Oh how our anxious hearts longed for that great light of liberty to dawn upon us. Here a fond husband and father leaves his bosom companion and children to the cold charities of the world, and enters the ranks.—There a dutiful son leaves the bright fireside of his youth, with the blessings of heaven invoked upon him by kind parents, loving brothers and sisters. Here the youthful maiden consents him to go, in whom she trusts for future protection. All this is done, and perhaps never more are those bright eyes permitted to look upon loved ones left behind, when peace should again be restored. At length the angry strife subsides, and our political sky is unobscured by those angry clouds, and the star of light and liberty begins to dawn upon us and all is peace and tranquility.

With what humble gratitude we then approached our Maker for our deliverance. The children of Israel, dwelling in darkness, the tyrannical yoke of bondage inflicted upon them by Pharaoh. What songs of deliverance they sang unto God, when that great light led them out of bondage. The very earth resounded with their musical strains, as it echoed forth to heaven. When we look back, to that remote age, when there was no redemption, when there was no eye to pity, no arm to save, God sent his only begotten son into this sinful world, that whosoever should believe on him should not perish, but have eternal life. While the Shepherds were watching their flocks by night, the glory of the Lord shone about them, which light very beautifully symbolizes the glory of the New Testament doctrines, and fulfilment of the prophecy according to the language of the text. Also Matthew 4th 16. "The people which set in darkness saw a great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up. From this time, this "true light" which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," began to preach, saying: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." "For ye were sometime darkness but now are ye light." Eph. 5 : 8. This light as recorded in Psalm 119 : 105, is a "lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our path." It serves us as an index to the formation of our character. By referring to it we can see how our lives correspond with its divine teachings. Many of us may be young in the service of God, like ourself, yet if we prove true to the cause of our divine Master, this great light as referred to in our text will illuminate our pathway through this unfriendly world, that we can after death enjoy the light of his countenance in the regions of eternal bliss.

Keeping the whole Law.

"For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and offend in one point, he is guilty of all." James 2 : 12.

The above passage is often referred to by brethren, to show the necessity of keeping all the commandments of God, to which I have no objection, but the way I have heard applications made, if I understood them rightly, was overstraining the sense of the text. Namely that if one offence is committed, makes a person equally guilty with those that trangress the whole law, which, I think, militates against the Spirit of the Gospel, and destroys divine justice, one of God's attributes; for we cannot for a moment believe that all will have to suffer indiscriminately alike, because the scripture saith that "every one shall be rewarded according to his deeds. If we take the whole context together we can apprehend the idea. The Apostle intends to impress upon the minds of the scattered twelve tribes of his brethren, (according to the flesh,) For I conceive this letter not to be directly addressed to believers in Christ Jesus alone; but to all the children of Israel: for we read, chapt. 5 : 6. "ye have condemned and killed the just." Such a charge we presume, he could not lay against a believer in Christ? Certainly not. Now are we prepared to give an exposition of the text. The law referred to is the decalogue, which is plain by the succeeding verse; the spirit of that law being embodied in few words, called by James the Royal law. Math. 22 : 36, we read; "Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." This is the first and greatest commandment. And the second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." If ye fulfil this, James saith, ye do well; but this they did not do, hence he reproves them; for it was evident by their conduct in regarding the rich and despising the poor, thereby showing partiality; though at the same time boasting of keeping the whole law, yet hypocritically offending that very point that pertains to the Royal law, on which hang all the law and the prophets. He who does so is amenable to condemnation as a breaker of the whole body of law: and consequently his punishment will be proportioned to his offense, on the proper force of the Greek term Enoxas, Here the apostle goes yet farther, and by an argument observes, taken from the intimate connection of the whole law, which is so perfectly united, that no one part can be violated without the rest being violated, and offering that he who thus offended against the par ticular law in question will be condemned as a transgression of the divine law in general, and thereby be obnoxious to the punishment of transgression; for, he who keepeth, or endeavor to keep the whole of the law, except in one point, and especially if that be against the scope of the whole wherein he deliberately, presumptiously, and habitually offends, for the argument itself implies these limitations, he is adjudged to punishment as a transgressor of the law, quite as much as he who had broken all his precepts.

Now it was an acknowledged principle among the Jewish casuists, that the wilful breach of one law of a body of laws involves a transgression of the whole; and accordingly the Apostle here means to say, that the same is applicable to the law of Christianity. (See 12th 13th verses.) And in the present case he who offends in one point may well be pronounced guilty, inasmuch as the point concerns "Christian Charity," on which hangs all the law and the prophets. For he may well be said to be guilty of all who offends against that on which all depends. A chain consisting of many links is broken when any one link is broken. This, after due deliberation, is the exposition your unworthy writer has drawn from the subject matter connected with the above text.

Dear Brethren, let us be very careful to study well the substance connected with the text we undertake to expound, lest by a hasty conclusion we overstrain scripture and thereby discourage or destroy them that are weak and stricken down with the infirmities of the flesh. If the one who offends in a small matter, as some expound the foregoing text, would have to suffer equally with the adulterous, the fornicators, the murderers, the abominable, the covetous, and the liars, where would be an encouragement for morality? or even for Christianity itself, "for in many things we offend all." For when the Lord Jesus Christ shall set in judgment, he will reward every one as his work shall be. Then brethren and sisters, let us always be found rich in good works for in due time we shall reap if we faint not. And you my dear friends, who yet stand beyond the pale of the church do not think yourselves inexcusable, for you know your duty and if you thus squander your precious time so carelessly in this world till your day of grace is closed, you will forever have to regret it, and suffer the pains of inexpressible torment; therefore prepare to meet thy God.

Sunshine Behind the Clouds.

We have often experienced the unpleasantness of long showers, and cloudy days. Sometimes we go as far as wishing something like this; If only it would clear up once again," forgetting that it is God who sends the storm as well as the sunshine.

Showers are necessary, for the refreshing of the vegetable Kingdom. If it would not be for those showers, nothing could come to perfection. But sometimes they come so unexpectedly, and with such a force that they very near wash away the very life of the plant; so that after the storm has passed, the shower ended, the sun shining again, and the plant is not properly cared for, it will die away, because it was not strong enough to stand against the changes of the weather.

But we will say something of the storms the child of God has to encounter; as we all know that they are sometimes very hard on us; sometimes wash away our very foundation, because we had not digged deep enough. How often, when those storms were passing over us, have we forgotten that we were Christians? How often, when the world has persecuted us, have we done evil in return? How often have we, when waves of adversity rolled high around us, been ready to give up to serve God? How often have we denied Christ, when the world were trying to find out how strong we were in faith? If we always would be on our guard, and ready to meet those storms of troubles and trials, we would be more able to bear them.

We should always bear in mind, though the storm may rage, that the sun shines behind the clouds, and as the clouds begin to part and move away, the sun will come out the clearest, warmest. We may think by times that all is lost, that we cannot conceive all, yet like the plant, whose very roots have been washed loose, by proper care we will be made the stronger. We may be much discouraged, yet if we stand fast, to our profession, the storm will not injure us, but will make us stronger and abler to fight against satan.

The Christian's desire is to live happy in the world to come; for this he toils from day to day, and all that satan can roll in his way will not keep him from landing on the blissful shore. He knows very well, that he cannot wear the crown, unless he bears the Cross, though heavy it may sometimes seem to bear. There is something in his soul which tells him that soon these storms are all overcome, and then he can be with his master, where peace and joy will be forever and ever.

"Let the peace of God rule in your Hearts."

Colossians 3 : 15.

We now shall inquire into the special influence which "peace with God" wields over the heart, or into the great practical purposes which its residence there is intended and calculated to promote.

These words of the Apostle, "let the peace of God rule in our hearts," emphatically instruct us here. Let us first ascertain their meaning: "the peace of God." These words describe the happiness of us who believe. We are at rest, because our conscience tells us we are pardoned for Christ's sake, and that our title to eternal life is made over to us. God is now our friend, not that God was ever our enemy—but we now know it. We know that in the atonement God is pacified towards us, and we are pacified towards God. This knowledge we have by the spirit's teaching; and hence the satisfaction it contributes to us is called "the peace of God." The words have by some been rendered—"the peace of Christ; because he is said to be our peace," or peacemaker, by the sacrifice he made of himself for our sins. There is no essential difference between the two. Indeed, to the whole of the person of the Godhead, they may be very properly applied, inasmuch as the father devised, the son accomplished, and the holy spirit applies this peace. On these accounts, and because it can be obtained in no other way, and enjoyed by none of us unless we receive it into our hearts by faith, it is described by the Apostle to be "the peace of God that passeth all understanding." It is, and ever must be, incomprehensible how such a being as God should ever have thought so kindly of us, and how such as we should ever come to be upon such intimate terms of friendship with God. Being, however, God's peace, and not man's, we see how it is secured to us, and how it reaches at length perfection. If it were an earth-born peace, and dependent on human works and aspects it would soon yield to the solicitations of the world, or ebbing as the flowing of the tide on the sea. God dwelling with us however, and guarded by his holy word, and fed by the spirit of peace, it can never either be removed or diminished. The peace of God, then, is just the sweet consciousness of God's forgiving love, and the happy tranquility which is thereby maintained in our believing souls, together with our cheerful submission of all our intellectual, moral, and religious powers to God's will and rule, "let the peace of God rule in our hearts." The word rule was originally used to designate the official duties of the umpire. He was sole judge or ruler. He was, therefore, a kind of centre of influence; and their knowing that his eye was ever upon them, and that his was to be the law of adjudication, was a motive to energetic contention, and the governing idea in their minds throughout, while in the games, a superior power to prevent careless action, the eye of the umpire ever surveyed the arena, and his judgment decided the prizes. The Apostle, then, may be understood as here giving a kind of personification to 'the peace of God,' or rather of its existence in his own heart. He represents God as an umpire or ruler, enthroned in our hearts, giving laws to all within it, for the suppression of whatever threatens to disturb this divine peace. His exhortation is just tantamount to this—as he who overcomes all the other gladiators keeps a steady eye on the umpire and ever realizes the prize to be given, so be it our concern to submit all that remains of evil, as well as all that has been produced by grace, to the fair and legitimate influence of the peace we enjoy, just that we may conquer to the end, and at the end get the crown of life.

In this interesting view of the passage, the spiritual blessing of peace is put by metonymy for the author of that blessing. So that it is not the prince of peace himself, but the peace he produces, that we are taught to obey. The sense of this peace is to be the reigning power, and to it we must yield all due homage. The heart is to be both the seat and the subject of this government of peace. The heart is "the center of personality and the depository of the feelings, and, as such, it is the most appropriate place for the throne and the executive of the peace of God." In many scriptures the heart is put for the whole inner man, and as that inner man is a rebellious kingdom, it seems fitting to all the ends of mercy, that in its very centre the antagonistic and pacifying sentiment of friendship with God should be established in full authority. It is in that heart that sin has erected its dark throne, that deceitfulness ranges the entire region of sentient being; that the lusts which war against the soul continue their conflict, and where, if they could, they would displace God and re-seat themselves in power. The heart, therefore, is just the place where a spiritual rule of sufficient strength ought to be fixed for the suppression of those loitering and harassing foes; for the working out of an irresistible counter-agency to sin; for a terror to all incipient insubordinations, and for the encouragement of us all who are willing and able to love God and follow after holiness in our hearts —that is, in our renewed hearts. God's peace is not in our old hearts, and, consequently, dose not rule there, but in every one justified by faith, that peace is found. In our old hearts all is rebellion. When God is for peace, the old heart is for war, because it does not know God, but when it knows him as the God of mercy in Christ, it wars no longer against the umpire. Let us then who believe in Christ, and enjoy this peace, contemplate from this passage, who and what is the king of our inner-man; to what kind of government we are to surrender ourselves, and what amount of homage we are to give to the happy sense of being at peace with God, which we now enjoy.—The peace of God rules, when it is made the center around which all the thoughts of our hearts revolve. A centre of influence is a common expression, referring sometimes to the point of diffusion, and at others to that of attraction. It is the point of diffusing influence, in the case of the sun, from which light issues; or in the case of the throne, from which government proceeds; and it is the point of attraction when, as a centre, the sun draws towards itself those heavenly bodies that revolve around it, or when the wisdom and clemency of the throne engage and fix the affections as well as the submission of the subjects. Hence astronomers speak of a centrifugal and centripetal power in the heavenly bodies—the power by which they either receed from, or are attracted to a common center. It is then to the attractive or centripetal influence of the sense of God's friendship that we refer, when we speak of it as the center to the thoughts of our hearts. The consciousness of this friendship is as a sun within our souls, not only illuminating all our powers, but drawing us all to that orbit which keeps us constantly under its rays, and therefore always in our proper places. Away from such a peace, the understanding is darkened, but when brought into it, all there is light; every faculty is attracted to its perihelion, and blazes with solar effulgence. We can associate with the absence of this peace anything but the grossest ignorance of God as a God of love and mercy, wicked opposition to God's law and the rejection of the gospel; but how changed did we become when we read, thought, reflected in the midst of the persuasion of God's merciful design and doings! When we sit down in this position, we are instantly "clothed, and in our right mind." Here we feel our way back to the bosom of divine love; here we are gently fascinated into the conviction that, notwithstanding all we have done against God, there is nothing in God against our pardon and acceptance; here we become to be made more and more willing, in the day of God's power, to do all and to be all that God would have us to be: and now we live and move under those gracious experiences which raise us upward to the enjoyment of still purer and happier existence. It is, therefore, clearly the duty and interest of all of us to abide near to the center of attractive knowledge, authority, and life.

It is admitted that in a christian life are difficulties. The best of men have natural repugnancies to God and holiness; and as for unbelieving men, they cannot lead such a life at all, just because they live entirely away from this fearful centre. Hence they are driven to and fro by the merciless winds, and describe the wayward and wild track of the meteor rather than the steady revolutions of the planet. But let us, who have this peace of God, not be presumptuous or over-confident. Such was Abraham and yet he denied the truth; and such was David and he could sin; and such was Peter and he denied his Lord. They had got off the axis—away from the center of influence; therefore they fell, and when they rose again, it was by the returning sense of God's loving kindness, or by the attractions of the peace of God. We have much to do with our hearts. We have to keep it with all dilligence in the fear and love of God, and in zealous activity for the service of God. But none of these things can be done except within the circle of believing sentiments and desires. Let us, therefore, in all circum stances, keep fast hold of our conviction that God is our best friend, and we will find Christ's "yoke easy, and his burden light."

"And Above all Things have Charity Among Yourselves."

Dear Companion:—This holy admonition, falling from the pen of the inimitable Peter, should impress our minds with a due sense of our duty, as pertaining to the feeling that should characterize our deportment towards each other as brethren. Although we may frequently differ, especially upon many unessential questions that may arise from time to time, let it be regarded as an honest difference of opinion, and there will exist no reason for any estrangement or unnatural feelings of animosity among us. None of us claims the prerogative of infallibility, and are but poor, erring creatures at best: but the man who has no opinion of his own, and who is made a subservient tool in the hands of his fellow men, possesses no attributes of independence worthy of admiration by those by whom he may be surrounded. Then those of us who have opinions, let us dare express them to some purpose, that they may subserve beneficially to our fellow man, and more especially to our common Brotherhood. Although but young in the church, I must confess my heart has been made sore in observing a growing disposition of resentment among some of our dear brethren, called forth by some minor differences of opinion in regard to some vexed questions at issue, in which there appears to be some distinctive features, not altogether satisfactory to the parties involved. Pardon the harsh expression as applied, but I am induced to call them by their proper names. I am truly sorry to see this avenging spirit of vindictiveness stealing, perhaps unconsciously, upon some so far that it seems to have taken possession of their better judgment, and appears to be imbosoming itself in downright and merciless proscription; not satisfied with having muzzled the pairs but yet seek by further aid and influence to crush those who perhaps have been actuated by as much honesty of motive as we are willing to allow those who are endeavoring to reproach him for seeming incongruity.

This ought not so to be. Cannot we differ honestly without permitting anger or malice to gain the ascendency over us?

"Let us follow after the things which make for peace, and things whereby we may enjoy one another."

"For one believeth he may eat all things, another who is weak eateth herbs."

"One man esteemeth one day above another; another man esteemeth every day alike; let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

Then, brethren, let us be careful not to impugn each others motives, until we be doubly assured that we have good foundation, for we find that the human heart is entirely too prone to jump at conclusions and magnify offences upon mere assumptions, more imaginary than real. "Think twice before we speak once," may save trouble. Let us be fully persuaded in our own minds. And if we feel a conscious superiority of honesty within ourselves, let a superabundance of charity characterize our souls, that may lead us to presume there are others who are endowed with the same admirable faculty. Let us not be "wise in our own conceit."

If we allow such philosophical reasonings to govern us, we will be more likely to rest easy under the tender admonition of James, 4: 11: "Speak not evil of one another, brethren. And then Paul's sermon in 1st Thess., 5: chimes in so beautifully in corroboration with James' wholesome advice, when he enjoins us to "be at peace among ourselves;" and that "none render evil for evil with any man." And in 1 Thess., 3: 12: we are told to "abound in love one toward another." Oh, how relevant to the case before us; and if these things rest and abide in us, we will be neither barren nor unfruitful.

We frequently hear this expression used, which says: "There is a time when forbearance ceases to be a virtue." But if you turn to Col. 3: 13: you will find that Paul does not seem to inculcate exactly that idea, when he charges us to forbear one with another; and to forgive one another; and "if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." Then, to put the cap-sheaf upon all these sacred admonitions, we have summed up in a sweeping injunction which you will find in Eph. 4: 31: "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice."

We might fill page after page with happy allusions confirmatory of what has been said, but lest we may weary your patience, we desist, feeling that "whatever was written heretofore, was written for our instruction in righteousness, &c.; and that if we all read our Bibles carefully, as we ought, and with a right purpose, we will find many things that will subserve to our spiritual interest.

I would then maintain, in view of what has already been said, that as long as a brother or a sister is in full communion and fellowship with the Church, that we are bound by every sacred injunction contained in God's word, to respect them as such, and love them as brethren. But when they become offensive, and do that which does not concur with the fundamental principles of Christianity, it becomes our duty to require the requisite amends; and failing in this, we proceed as scriptural authority dictates, letting all be heard for their defence, and them that sin rebuke before all that others also may fear.

I cannot conclude without referring to the happy reminder given us by a dear Brother, that ye younger submit yourselves unto the elder, which I heartily accept. This is as it should be; but right here insinuates itself the question: "is it required of the elder that consistency should always characterize their actions? Or do they claim infallibility?" No, no; we know you do not, and presume to answer for you in the negative. I notice in the same verse of the same chapter referred to above, some additional testimony which reads in this wise: "You, all of you, be subject one to another." We are great sticklers for keeping up connections, especially upon doctrinal points, so that we do not lose their full significance. And I conceive the same rule will apply in other matters pertaining to church government, as well as those things that are relevant to the issue before us.

And in another place we have this substance: "Let the Elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor." So we perceive that this peculiar honor is to be granted conditionally. And by whom is this honor to be conferred? By the church. Then we must necessarily infer that the church, or at least a majority of those who compose it, are endowed with power to judge the ruling, whether it be well. So we find we are really subject one to another. We may place the elder in a peculiar sense as the creature, and the church as his creator. Then the question arises, where is the most power consolidated? In the thing created, or in the power of creation? The will, then, of the Elder, without the assent of a majority of the church, would be powerless. So we discover when we philosophize upon matters of this sort they run out with many avenues, involving many nice questions for wholesome digestion, showing very clearly that many things admit of different constructions when made to suit especial cases, to subserve the end we wish to attain; so that we might run things of this sort into endless litigation and controversy, the combatants bringing continually to each others' relief many strong points of defence. I think, then, in view of all this, we had better be induced by Old Father Paul to put on the genuine garb of Christ "which is the bond of perfectness," and be content to submit to the impressive heading of this article, that we may truly live it out in our lives, as an example to all who may follow after us; so that this ennobling virtue, which has been almost termed the pearl of all Christian graces, may burn with undimmed lustre in our hearts, and in the hearts of our posterity; thereby subserving to the advancement and perpetuity of our spiritual welfare, which may finally redound to the eternal salvation of our souls, is the prayer of a young brother in

For the Companion.

The Second Advent of Christ.

"Unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto Salvation." Heb. 9: 28.

The expectation of any important event generally produces interest and excitement. It was the case with the Jews when they were slaves in Egypt, and expected deliverance, and to be restored in possession of the Holy Land. The same interest was manifested when captives in Babylon. The first advent of Christ was announced immediately after the fall of man was an object of special interest to angels and to men. Abraham looked forward and rejoiced to see that day, and by faith he saw it and was glad. Kings and prophets desired to see the fulfillment of that great event that God had promised, since the fall of man.

When we turn, and look forward to the second appearing of Christ, we see it will be one of the most important events in the fulfilment of the sublime plan of human redemption, and full of interest to both saints and sinners. It has ever been represented so by the sacred writers; an event earnestly desired by the righteous; but one that is terrible to the ungodly, who have, during their career of iniquity, a "fearful looking for of judgment."

The subject of the text is, second advent of Christ. The certainty of his coming is established; first—by reason and conscience. God is the moral governor of the world, and all creatures are responsible to him. Therefore he that made us, and governs us, has a perfect right to summon us to give an account of our actions or deeds done in the body, and too, at the time, and in the manner which his infinite wisdom may devise.

The justice of God is not wholly displayed in the dispensation of things in the present state, for the righteous who are the excellent of the earth, are afflicted, while wicked men generally prosper. Yet the consciences of all point to a future state of righteousness. See the consternation and dread of Belshazzar, and Felix, of old.

Secondly: By the uniform testimony of the Scriptures.

Enoch predicted it, when he said: "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all." Abraham reasoned about it, Job rejoiced in the hope of it. The psalmist so beautifully and sublimely described it, and the Savior comforted the hearts of his disciples with it when he said: "I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there you may be also." And after he rose from the dead he comforted them with the glorious thought of his second coming, and that he would gather them as precious jewels, to inhabit the everlasting mansions that are made without hands, eternal, in the heavens. Again, when he ascended, the beloved disciples stood gazing "steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, and behold, two stood by them in white apparel, which also said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

The second advent of Christ will be very different from his first appearance. "Without sin." He will not then come in a state of humiliation. In his first appearance he took on him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, subject to the surrounding circumstances, in common with the human family. He passed through the circumstances connected with an humble birth, though he was God manifest in the flesh; he was subjected to poverty, hunger, thirst, fatigue, reproach, and persecution. Then he "made himself of no reputatation," that he might "bear the sins of many." He will not come again to be mocked, and set at naught by Herod; nor to be buffeted and scourged, and spit upon, and crowned with thorns. He will not come to expiate sin "without sin" or (without a sin offering.)

At his first appearing the guilt of man was charged upon him as upon a surety who had undertaken their cause. "God laid help upon one that was mighty;" and therefore he "bear the sins of many;" "he who knew no sin was made sin," (a sin offering,) "for us;" "He bear our sins in his own body on the tree." But the sacrifice once offered for the sins of many, will forever perfect them that are sanctified through the truth, and therefore, "there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin." The demands of Justice are satisfied, and having suffered the penalty of the law once for sin, he dieth no more. The agony of soul, and bloody sweat of Gethsemane, will trouble that living form no more. The ignominy, the shame, the bodily and mental pains of Calvary's cross, he will endure no more. He cried: "it is finished."

The second advent of Christ will be magnificent and glorious. More glorious than the return of the mightiest conqueror from the field of triumph; or the proclamation and coronation of Kings and Emperors. These occurrences are but faint emblems of "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ." It will be magnificent and glorious as to His person.

Then he will be admired: (2 Thes. 1: 10.) "When he shall come to be glorified in his Saints, and to be admired in all them that believe." He will not appear then as the subject of poverty, and lassitude, and contempt; "having no form," etc.; "His visage so marred more than any man's;" but he will come "with power and with great glory." He will come with all the glory of his perfection shining brighter than ten thousand suns; he will come with the glory of his spotless and exalted humanity, and with all the glorious majesty of his divinity. He will appear as a king, with a retinue of "mighty angels." If, when the law was given at Sinai by the ministration of angels, the fire and smoke so filled the people with awe and dread, what will be the manifestation of the Son of God, when he shall come in the glory of his Father, and of all the holy angels, as a mighty conqueror, to judge the world in righteousness? How great must be the emotion of the countless millions that will be summoned to stand before the bar of divine justice, to be judged by the mighty Prince of Salvation, in accordance to the word of life.

The advent of Christ will be gracious; "unto salvation." He will come to redeem their bodies from the grave; the resurrection of the body is so abundantly taught in the Scriptures, and confirmed by the resurrection of the body of Christ, and those of his Saints, that arose at his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many, that it seems to be a fact beyond contradiction.

Until the resurrection of the body the enemy of Christ will not be completely vanquished; but that event will destroy death, and him that had the power of it, even Satan. Then shall the Saints be rescued from the iron bars of the tomb, and rise into immortal health and beauty; and they shall be subject to sin, and death, and corruption no more. Blessed hope indeed.

Having raised the bodies of the righteous, they shall be gathered to his right hand as the sheep of his fold; as the "blessed" of the Lord. They were dear to God from the foundation of the world; dear unto Christ when he suffered and died on the cross; dear unto him when he appeared before the throne of our heavenly Father to intercede for us; and they shall be dear to him when he appears to judge the world in righteousness. They are his lambs, and not one of them shall be lost; they are his children, and not one of them shall perish; they are his jewels, and they shall be all made up, and fixed upon his mediatorial diadem, to shine to his glory for ever and for ever. They shall be acknowledged and acquitted by Christ before assembled myriads. However despised on earth they may have been, the Judge will not there be ashamed to call them Brethren. Although many charges may have been brought against them by Satan, by men, by conscience, and by the law, as a broken covenant of works, there will be no charge heard to the prejudice of the faithful in that day. They will be pronounced righteous through obedience to the law of life.

Then the righteous Judge will admit them to an eternal heaven, as the last intended item of salvation carried into execution. For God has prepared them a city, an inheritance eternal in the heavens, where "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." No earthly pencil can fully delineate the joys of that heaven, which God has prepared for them that are worthy of immortality and eternal life.

Blessed be God, our heavenly Father, there will be no enemy coiled under the flowers of Paradise; nor funeral mound to disturb the smooth surface of that delightful field, where all is love, joy, peace and happiness mingled with eternal life. God made it for a people redeemed, and adapted it to their wants, with elements of eternity for an everlasting joy.

Hence this heaven prepared by God himself, exceeds the eloquent description of man or angels; its materials we cannot explain, or duly illustrate; deathless harps, golden pavements, walls of crystal, emeralds, rubies, amethyst; towers and domes fused in a burning sky; like a pageant of clouds in red repose; the presence of Christ, the society of saints and elect angels, the vision of God, the well remembered way, the seven-fold thundering hallelujah, "the Lord reigneth for ever and ever.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No Time to Pray.

No time to pray!
O who so fraught with earthly care
As not to give to humble prayer
Some part of day?

No time to pray?
What heart so clean, so pure within
That needeth not some check from sin—
Needs not to pray?

No time to pray!
'Mid each day's danger, what retreat
More needful than the mercy seat?
Who must not pray?

No time to pray!
Must care or business' urgent call
So press us as to take it all
Each passing day?

No time to pray!
Then sure your record falleth short;
Excuse will fail you as resort
On reckoning day.

What thought more drear
Than that our God his face should hide,
And say through all life's swelling tide,
No time to hear!

Cease not to pray;
On Jesus as your All rely;
Would you live happy, happy die?
Take time to pray.

What are You Doing for Jesus?

Hark! the voice of Jesus, crying,
"Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvests waiting,
Who will bear the sheaves away?"

If you cannot cross the ocean,
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer;
You can help them at the door.
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite;
And the least you give for Jesus,
Will be precious in his sight.

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus,
You can say "He died for all."
If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms.

Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do;"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.

The weights of the world: "The balance of power," and "The scales of justice."

The tongue is enclosed by the teeth as with a wall; and guarded by the lips as with sentinels, so that it be not suffered to run wild.

An Ohio journal pointedly remarks that "every cord of wood given to the poor will be so much fuel saved from use in the next world."

To think kindly of each other is good—to speak kindly of each other is better—but to act kindly towards another is best of all.

The moment man gives way to inordinate desire, disquietude and torment take possession of his heart.—The proud and covetous are never at rest; but the humble and poor in spirit possess their souls in the plentitude of peace.

Many attempt to cover their abominations with the pretense that they mean well; but they will learn at the judgment that nothing will find acceptance with God but doing well.

Many Christians, says Beecher, are like chesnuts—very pleasant nuts, but enclosed in very prickly burs, which need various dealings of nature, and her grip of frost, before the kernel is disclosed.

Dr. Samuel Johnson says that the learned man is not he who knows the largest number of facts, but he who knows the largest number of relations between a few facts, and is best able to indicate how they may be usefully employed in practical life.

"For the Sake of My Mother"—Hooker used to say, "If I had no other motive for being religious, I would most earnestly strive to be so for the sake of my mother, that I might rejoice her care of me, and cause her widow's heart to sing for joy."

As humble man is like a good tree: the more full of fruit the branches are, the lower they bend themselves—"Through much tribulation ye must enter into the kingdom of God."

Jeremy Bentham says: "Nothing can be worse than the general feeling on the subject of war. The church, the state, the ruling few, the subject many, all in this case seem to have combined to patronize vice and crime in their widest sphere of evil."

Christ First.—Some time before the death of the aged widow of Dr Baldwin, of Boston, a friend, in conversation with her, with reference to her departure, mentioned as one of the chief attractions of heaven, that she would there meet her husband. "I shall see Christ first," was her instant reply.

"I am past usefulness," said an old lady to her minister; "the Lord spares my days, but I can do no good now."

"You are doing a great deal of good," said the minister. "You help me to preach every Sabbath."

Of course she was very much surprised. Help her minister preach! "Why, how?"

"In the first place," said he, "you are always in your seat at church, and that helps me. In the second place, I often see tears running down your cheeks, and that helps me very much."

About Hating.—Hate not. It is not worth while. Your life is not long enough to make it pay to cherish ill-will or hard thoughts towards any one. What if that man has cheated you or that woman played false? What if this friend has forsaken you in the time of need, or that one having won your utmost confidence and your warmest love has concluded that he prefers to consider you as a stranger? What difference will it make in a few years, when you go home to the undiscovered country? All who treat you ill now will be sorry for it then, more so than you, even in your disappointment and grief can be

A few more smiles, a few more tears, some pleasure, much pain, a little longer hurrying and worrying through the world, some hasty greetings and abrupt farewells, and our plays will be played out, and the injurer and injured will be led away, and ere long forgotten. Is it then worth while to hate each other?

Happiness.—"Now let me tell you a secret worth knowing. This looking forward to enjoyment don't pay. From what I know of it, I would n[illegible] chase butterflies for a living, or battle up mountains for a daily sight. The only true way to be happy is to take the daily chances of happiness, as God gives them to us every day of our lives. The boy must learn to be happy while he is plodding over his lessons: the merchant while he is toiling his fortune. If he fails to learn this art, he will be sure to [illegible] enjoyment when he gains what he has sighed for."

Plain Preaching.

Lord, the preacher this day came home to my heart. A left-handed Gibeonite hit not the mark more surely than he my darling sins. I could find no fault with his sermon, save only that it had too much truth. But this I quarrelled at, that he went far from his text to come close to me, and so was faulty himself in telling me of my faults; and yet I can not deny that which he spoke, though nothing to that portion of scripture which he had for his text, was according to the proportion of scripture. For is not thy word in general the text at large of any preacher? Yea, rather, I should have concluded that if he went from his text, thy goodness sent him to me; for without thy guidance it had been impossible fo. him so truly to have traced the intricate turnings of my deceitful heart.

Many ways of Denying Christ.

Bishop Heber said: "It is a fatal mistake to suppose that there can be no apostasy from Christ, where we are not absolutely called on to deny his name, or to burn incense to an idol. We deny our Lord whenever, like that Demas, we through love of this present world, forsake the course of duty which Christ has plainly pointed out to us. We deny our Lord whenever we lend the sanction of our countenance, our praise, or even our silence, to measures or opinions which may be popular or fashionable, but which we ourselves believe to be sinful in themselves, or tending to sin. We deny our Lord whenever we forsake a good man in affliction, and refuse to give countenance, encouragement and support to those who for God's sake and the faithful discharge of their duty, are exposed to persecution and slander.

God's Plan of Your Life.

Never complain of your birth, your employment, your hardships; never fancy that you could do something if you only had a different lot and sphere assigned you. God understands his own plan, and he knows what you want a great deal better than you do. The very things you most deprecate as fatal limitations or obstructions, are probably what you most want. What you call hindrances, obstacles, discouragements, are probably God's opportunities; and it's nothing new that the patient should dislike his medicines, or any proof that they are poisons. No! a truce to all such impatience. Choke that envy which gnaws at your heart because you are not inthe same lot with others; bring down your soul, or bring it up to God's will, and do his work, in your lot, your sphere, under your cloak of obscurity, against your temptations and then you shall find that your condition is never opposed to your good, but consistent with it.

God's Kindness.

A lady in this city saw on the sidewalk a ragged, cold and hungry little girl, gazing wistfully at some of the cakes in the shop window. She stopped, and, taking the little one by the hand, led her into the store. She bought and gave her the cakes she wanted. She then took her to another place, where she procured her a shawl and other articles of comfort. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent lady full in the face, and, with artless simplicity, said: "Are you God's wife?" There was no profaneness, but tender and solemn feeling in the heart of this child, who thought of God as the kindest of all beings.

FREE SEATS.—"Carleton," the spirited correspondent of the Boston Journal, who has just returned from his journey around the world, says:

"The houses of worship are free all over the world, among all religions, except Christianity: and of the three great divisions of Christendom —Roman, Greek, and Protestant— the latter alone adopt the exclusive system, a system whose practical workings in our large cities, is to shut out from the houses of God, a large part of the common people."

No vice more easily than lying stupefies a man's conscience. He who tells lies frequently will soon become an habitual liar, and will soon lose the power of readily distinguishing between the conceptions of the imagination and the recollections of his memory.

Things should not be done by halves—If it be right, do it boldly; if it be wrong leave it undone.

GERMAN COLUMN.

Näher zu Gott.

Näher mein Gott zu dir
Näher zu Dir!
Thränt auch mein Auge hier
Näher zu Dir.
Trotz aller Angst und Pein
Soll dies die Losung sein:
Näher mein Gott zu Dir
Näher zu Dir!

Bricht mir wie Jacob dort
Nacht auch herein
Find ich zum Ruheport
Nur einen Stein:
Ist doch im Traum allhier
Mein Sehnen für und für:
Näher mein Gott zu Dir,
Näher zu Dir!

Wohl geht's durch wildes Land,
Der Weg ist steil;
Doch was von Dir gesandt,
Dient mir zum Heil.
Daß ich mich nicht verirr,
Rufen die Engel mir:
Näher, mein Gott zu Dir,
Näher zu Dir!—

Wenn dann die Nacht verschwind't
Sonne mir scheint,
Und ich dich näher find't
Als ich gemeint,
Bau ich mein Bethel hier
Und jauchze freudig Dir,
Näher, mein Gott zu Dir,
Näher zu Dir!

Drum sende was Du willst
Im Leben hier,
Wird nur mein Wunsch erfüllt:
„Näher zu Dir!"
Und schließt mein Pilgerlauf,
Schwing ich mich freudig auf
Näher, mein Gott zu Dir,
Näher zu Dir!!!

Manche, anstatt daß sie betrübte Seelen bemitleiden, machen sie ihnen noch Vorwürfe. Machst du es auch so?

Ein Heuchler ist in der schlimmsten Lage irgend eines Menschen auf Erden: gehaßt wird er von der Welt wegen seines Bekenntnisses, und gehaßt von Gott, weil er nichts weiter hat, als sein Bekenntniß.

Wer noch nie einen Feind vergessen hat, der hat auch die höchsten Genüsse des Lebens noch nicht gekostet.

Glückseligkeit ist ein Wohlgeruch, den man über Andere nicht leicht verbreiten kann, ohne sich selbst auch damit zu beglücken.

Christian Family Companion

Tyrone City, Pa., Feb. 1, 1870.

Here we are again. Another paper is about being closed up, and no editorial. Our readers will soon conclude they might as well have no editor. Perhaps they have never observed that the Companion, has no editor. Examine it. On the title you find By H. R. Holsinger. In the prospectus we say: "is published by," &c. Though we do edit the paper, in some way. And just to show our readers that we are still "about," we shall drop an occasional note, at least,

Not even our editorial notes have been up to time. The visits of several brethren have been almost unnoticed. We believe we intimated that more would be said of brother Flory's visit, which has not been done; and at this late hour we will only say that his discourse to us was highly interesting and edifying. One thing is worthy to be mentioned, and repeated; that brother Flory preached to a few of us, with the same earnestness and fervency, as could have been expected if the house had been full.

On the 21st ultimo, brother John Wise preached for us, and spent an afternoon, and the night with us.—By a little more judicious advertisement we gave him a better or at least a larger audience, whom he taught the religion of Jesus in a practical and acceptable manner.—We regret that our editorial labors prevented us from enjoying his company in private conversation to the fullest extent.

We have made several attempts during the past few weeks, and each time were not allowed to conclude our articles without interruption, either by the lateness of the hour or the other duties of our calling. Since brother Sell has gone away we have been entirely alone. The office business has been very throng. Our subscribers have been tardy in renewing their subscription, thus throwing the heavy part of the work attending the making up of the new list, into the present year, and so adding at least forty percent to the necessary labor. Since the first of January we have been averaging not less than twenty-five letters a day. Some of these required more time to get to understand them, than it would have taken to attend to their business five times. But more of that at a more convenient time.

The Pious Youth

The PIOUS YOUTH for February will be ready in a few days, and will be sent to those whose names are on the list, as soon as ready. We take pleasure in sending it forth, believing that it will give satisfaction to its readers. Among its contents will be found an orriginal poem, from a manuscript bearing the date of 1691. The January & February Nos. will be sent for 15cts. One dollar per annum. To Companion subscribers 75cts.

The Companion and its Peculiarities.

We claim and adhere to certain peculiarities, which we think proper to define, for the satisfaction of our readers, as well as for our own advantage.

1. We do not use the title of "Reverend" to any man.

2. Books, chapters, and verses of Scripture, are indicated thus: 1 Cor. 11:21, 22, which is read first Corinthians, 11th chapter and 21st and 22d verses; a colon (:) always separating the chapters and verses.

We do not use the word "church" for "meeting-house" or "congregation." When we mean the whole Brotherhood we use the word Church; when only a congregation is referred to, we use "branch," or "congregation," or the phrase "in the church at ——."

"District" does not belong to a branch of the Church, but is applicable to a districted territory of country, as the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, the First District of Virginia, etc.

In the obituaries the names of the deceased it set in capitals. The word "died" is omitted, as it is placed in the heading once for all. We desire to give the name, residence, (congregation, county and State) and age of the departed. When the death occurs in the current year we omit the year date.

—:o:—

Errors.

We have already been informed of errors in sending out our paper—and also several in not sending it out at all—and, no doubt, others will yet come to light. Now we pledge ourself to make everything right so far as in us lieth, when we know what you want. If any of the numbers are missing, tell what numbers they are, and we are prepared to supply them. But don't say "last week's paper," or "this week;" say No. 1, 3, 5, or what it may be; and give your name and address unmistakeably. Do not say, address "same as before." And when you send pay, say by whom your paper was ordered. This is important, and if complied with in all cases, will save us much precious time.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. NEWCOMER. It is all right on the books: 9.50.

JESUS OF NAZARETH PASSETH BY, was published in No. 11, Vol. 5.

J. J. FAUSNACHT. One dollar and five cents will pay to the end of Vol 6.

E. WILLIAMS. David Shindles subscription expires with Vol. 5, according to our books, and they are believed to be correct. We have extended the time of K. M. to end of Vol. 6

GIDEON BOLLINGER. The money order has been received all right. Thank you for the "Well Spring." We had not seen it before. But it does not compare with the Pious Youth. One copy of the Youth contains as much reading as four of the "Well-Spring," at which rate the Youth ought to be worth 2$ instead of 1$. We could not establish a paper of that class among our people. We want something a little more substantial

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only

Brother Henry: I have been laid up for the last week with a bruise on the back, which I received in an accident while repairing my engine. But I thank God that it is not worse than it is. While lying on my couch today, I took a slate and pencil and composed the following rhyme:

CANAAN'S LAND.

Dear brethren watch, from sin refrain,
Let all your trust in Christ remain,
Pursue him on the narrow strand,
Till you arrive in Canaan's land.

There will be Heavenly happiness,
God's people there will live in peace:
He that holds out unto the end,
To him will God a blessing send.

O, think how happy we shall be,
When we shall from our sins be free;
All pain, and sorrow, and distress,
Will there no more come unto us.

God's spirit there will reign with you,
If you will be forever true:
O, what a happy little band,
When we shall meet in Canaan's land.

From Brother D. D. Sell.

NEW ENTERPRISE, PA., }
Jan. 20th, 1870. }

I last wrote from the Companion Office. From thence I returned home on the 31st Dec., and had a meeting on the evening of the 1st of Jan, in the meeting-house at Duncansville; also Sunday the 2nd. Brother D M. Holsinger preached. He has charge of the church at Duncansville, commonly called the Frankstown congregation At this meeting two were baptized, which made my heart rejoice; they being brothers in the flesh. Then visited among my friends until the 7th. Then went to the meeting-house to hear brother John Wise preach, but for reasons unkown to us he failed to come. So the work fell upon us, which we tried to fill as best we could, with good assistance from the elder brethren by my side.

Then to the 15th I spent in the neighborhood of my childhood. Many fond recollections passed the mind, of the days of yore, of which we will not now stop to repeat.

On the morning of the 15th we started all alone for Clover Creek. For reasons best known to myself I chose to walk. It rained all the time, but go I must. My word was there and I must take it in, although I had a bad trip. When I got there my joy was sweet with the brethren. Stopped with Dr. J. Wengert. Being informed that there was an appointment in the evening, I went to the meeting and found a congregation. Preached. Lodged with our aged co-laborer, Elder George Brumbaugh, who speaks mostly in the German, who gave us many words of cheer. On the 16th had two meetings. Dined with G. W. Brumbaugh. Spent a short time with Elder John W. Brumbaugh, in pleasant and we trust profitable conversation. Lodged with brother Wengert, who is practicing the healing art. Spent a pleasant night with him. He was one of the number that went to the State of Missouri with us in '66, but returned in same year

Many thanks, brethren, for your kindness shown toward me during my stay with you. He who rewards good actions, down to a cup of cold water, reward you.

Thence to Yellow Creek branch, Bedford county, on the 17th. On the evening of the 18th I was conveyed by my cousin, John Sell, to brother Daniel Snowberger's. Took supper with him, and conversed awhile about good things, and then went to meeting. Met a large congregation—large to what we have in Missouri. After meeting went with brother Leonard Furry, who spared no means to make us comfortable.

On the morning of the 19th we went to the burying ground of the Brethren at this place. Saw entombed a darling child of our brother Rinard Replogle, and Rosanna his wife. I would say to you, brother and sister, Lizzie is "not dead but sleepeth"; sleeps the sweet sleep in the arms of Jesus. Many solemn thoughts passed my mind while standing at the grave of my aged grandmother, who was well known by many of the old brethren; namely BARBARA ROTHROCK. We tried to assist the brethren on this funeral occasion as best we could, being the first time I ever preached on such an occasion. Dined then with my young co-laborer, Samuel A. Moore. Spent the afternoon with him with pleasure and trust with profit From the tenor of his conversation I think we can build on him coming to the west, to help to fight the battles there. I rather think he is bound for Nebraska. Had meeting in the evening; good order, and there seemed to be an interest manifested in the good cause. Thanks, brethren, for your kindness to me during my stay among you. I am now on my way to Snake Spring Valley congregation. More anon.

DANIEL D. SELL.

UNIONVILLE, IOWA. }
Jan. 23rd, 1870. }

Brother Henry: The papers ordered by me to the subscribers here came duly to hand, and as ever was glad to hail their arrival, and to read with interest, and I believe with profit, the wholesome truths contained in their columns. And my humble prayer to Almighty God is, for his blessing to accompany the efforts of the Editor and all his contributors that each paper, and every column, may be filled with wholesome matter, as directed by the energy of the Holy Spirit; that each reader's heart may be gladdened and to go on their way rejoicing.

I have been a subscriber since the beginning of the second volume. I have now four volumes complete, put up in book form, for which I would not take double first cost. There are many brethren that can not be influenced to subscribe for a religious paper though having their thousands at command. Their general reasons as set forth are, that they then could not read the Bible. If such was correct, or based upon a correct basis, their excuse would be tangible: but reading essays, and examining sermons is what should, and will call for the detector, the Bible—the word of God.—I would be happy if our religous periodicals were in every family. Some, and many indeed, are not able to take them and pay for them, but if the many that are able would take them it would enable our editors to furnish such.

JOSEPH ZOOK.

Indeed it would. If every member who can take the paper and pay for it, and ought to do so, would subscribe for it. we could supply every member in the church who can not well afford to pay for it. We will risk to make such an agreement.—EDITOR.

Brother Henry: On last Christmas brother Elais K. Buechly, Benjamin Buechly and myself, made a visit to Butler and Floyd counties, this state, and being informed of two members living in the north part of our county (Black Hawk) we went that way. They received us kindly and we spent the night with them. We left an appointment for our return, and had a pleasant meeting, the first ever held by the Brethren in the place. As they could not hear the Brethren preach often, we advised them to take the Companion, from which they could obtain many a good and wholesome lesson of gospel truth, and of the order of the Brethren.

HENRY C. GOUGHENOUR.

Brother Henry: I notice the N. Y. Independent allows free discussion in its columns but prohibits personalities. I think it an excellent rule. There is nothing gained by personalities, and often much lost. It has killed the Church Union. It is the question we want discussed and not the person. Personalities are out of order in debating societies, and I am not sure that they are not in newspapers. Let each one give his opinion freely, without any allusion to that of any other, and none of those unpleasant occurrences will happen, and the Companion will be able to do more good and sacrifice no principle.

In love,

S. Z. SHARP.

Who are the Rich.

The question on Matt. 19: 23, 24, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God," has been asked twice, but I recollect no answer. We believe the Savior. But how much does it take to make a man rich? Cannot some bro' or sister answer? It is an important question. Here in Miama Co., Ohio, a man worth $100,000 would be considered rich. In England or Germany, where a few are rich and many poor, it may be different. HANNAH KNAUFF.

Covington, Ohio.

When Eve was Created.

In Companion, Vol. 6. No. 2, Wm. A. Baily asks the question, "did God create Eve before the seventh day?" By reference to Genesis 1st. chapter, and 27 : 28 and 31st verses, we conclude that they (Adam and Eve) were created on the 6th day of the creation. The 2nd chapter of Genesis need not perplex our minds any in regard to their day of creation for in that chapter we learn of what they were made; Adam of the dust of the ground; and Eve of a "rib of man."

About Fasting.

TO SARAH RIDENOUR. We think that "but when thou fastest anoint thy head and wash thy face" simply means to do as our habit is on other mornings, when we don't intend to fast. The foregoing and following verses make it plain to my understanding. Fasting is a Christian duty. Some think we ought to fast from work, too, but this we cannot always do; but I believe we should, when circumstances allow. HANNAH KNAUFF.

Gleanings.

I am glad to see that the Companion is so full of original matter. It is indeed pleasant to see so many of the Brethren betaking themselves to their pens. I hope you will soon be so crowded with original articles that instead of diminishing you will have to increase the size of your truly useful journal. In all the affairs of life men are benefited by an exchange of ideas Art, science, and politics flourish mainly through the instrumentality of the writers in the journals devoted to their interests. I think that by the same means Religion, too, may be benefited. Hoping for the success of both your Journals, and that God may bless the interests they subserve, I remain your brother in Christ.

JOHN W. BYRNE.

Brother Holsinger: I have been taking the Companion for one year, and am started into the second. I felt it my duty to show the paper to the brethren, and in doing so I have found two who wish to subscribe. and for whom find enclosed three dollars, and names. S. M. AUKERMAN.

Thank you, dear brother, for your aid. If every one of our subscribers would take as much pains, our list would be more than doubled. Every one has some influence, and can do something for us if desired. And, brethren and sisters, we do expect something from every subscriber. We are now furnishing you with a first class paper, at a reasonable price, and we think you owe us a liberal support. If every one will feel that he owes a little more than simply the subscription price, and would give us a little of their influence, applied after the manner of brother Aukerman, we would get along finely. Will you do it? We mean you: you who are just now reading; you brother, you sister, who have not yet sent us a subscriber. Can you not now think of some one who you think ought to take the Companion? Reflect a moment and then go to work. We ought to have just one thousand more subscribers to place us on good, living, working footing. If one-third of our readers would each get one more subscriber we would attain that desirable point.

Brethren and sisters are inviting us to visit them and preach. And some almost insist that we ought to come. They want to become personally acquainted with us. Now we need scarcely say that we would love to comply with all such requests, as we know they are intended for good; but we would remind all that the editing and publishing of two papers requires labor, and attention; and that these can not be given while the editor and publisher is traveling over the country.

But if our support is such as will enable us to employ an efficient clerk or assistant, we may still hope to make some visits among the churches. We expect to attend our next Annual Meeting in the State of Iowa, and would very much desire while on the way to visit portions of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and also spend some time with our brethren in Iowa. All of which will materially depend upon our success in business, for unless we shall be enabled to employ a substitute our stay shall be short. Whether our business pays us or not, one thing we have experienced, viz., that when we employ a brother, or any one else, he expects to be paid for it, and we love to pay when we have the wherewithal.

ONE THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS WANTED.

Who says here is one, two, 5, 10, 20, of them? We will see.

"The Companion is a great deal of company to us, as we hardly ever get to hear the Brethren preach. Only three of us in this neighborhood. The brethren have meeting about 14 miles from here, near Urbana. We would be glad if some of the ministering brethren would settle here, or at least give us a call and see how they like our country." J. K. CULLEN.

Rantoul, Ills.

Friend Henry : I will drop you a few lines from this part of the world. My wife takes the Companion, and looking over it I see in your State you have preaching every Sunday, and plenty of preachers. Why is it so? Are they afraid to leave for fear they cannot find the way back again! Down here we have no meeting.—There are three members here, and would like to hear preaching once and awhile. Is the church fulfiling the commands: teaching all nations?" If so, send some preachers down here. They may do some good here as the so called "Brethren" have not preached here.

GEORGE HIPPLE.

Middletown, Montgomery Co., Mo.

Pretty late Brother Henry; but never too late to do good! We are missing our weekly Companion that brings us messages from all parts of the Brotherhood. Our fireside seems to whisper into our ears; why spend ye your time idle? We can truly say it is a welcome visitor in our little family. Never knew its value until of late since it has quit coming to us.

MICHAEL HERMAN.

That Imposter.

Dear Brethren: I wish to say, through the Companion, a little more of that "Imposter," of whom we have a notice in Vol. 6. No. 1. About the time of New year I was on a visit to Brother Jacob Berkey near Goshen, Ind., and he told me of the circumstance of brother Levi Fry, of Penna. And as soon as I heard the description of said "actor," I told Brother Berkey that that was surely the same man, who figured in our country a little over a year ago. A man fully suiting, the description given by the Penn. Brethren came to my brother's house (Peter Long's) and gave his name "Lohr" saying he was a nephew to Brother F. P. Lœhr of Michigan. I told him that Lœhr's name was not Lohr but Lœhr so he showed me his pocket knife with the name Lohr inscribed thereon. He said he was rich and had a number of buffalo robes and other goods at Kendallville. He started with me and my brother to the R. R. to go for Elkhart, but in Sturgis, before we took cars, our friend was missing and next day was back in the neighborhood again, and things of some value were missed at my brother's house. At Brother A. S. Keim's, and in Michigan at Brother Lyters, he gave his name Nisewander, and seems acquainted with nearly all the speakers among the Brethren. Of late I have learned from the Omish brethren that he also "figured" to such a degree among the Mennonites, and Omish, that they advertised him in the "Herald of Truth," issued by J. J. Funk of Elkhart Ind. He gave himself as a collector for Funk, and said he was the son of a Mennonite preacher in Germany and belonged to them, and gave his name Nisewander." And about six weeks ago, he was in Wayne co., Ohio, at old Mr. Plank's, telling them that C. Noffsinger, of Ind, had shipped a box of goods to his daughter near Wooster and they could just go and fetch it, without a word of truth in it. Brethren beware of that man: I have no good opinion of him.

GEO. LONG.

Mongoquinomy, Ind.

Brother Holsinger : I have read all the numbers of the last Vol. of the Companion and two of the present, but have not seen anything directly from our neighborhood, so I thought I would write a few lines to let you know how we are situated. We are on the north boundary of La-Porte county, Indiana, and an arm of the Portage Prairie congregation. We have preaching every eight weeks, by elder Isaac Miller, of Rolling Prairie, and have had two added to our number lately, both of them sisters. We have but two brethren here, and about ten sisters. I have been asking them to subscribe for the Companion and Youth, and perhaps shall get some of them to send or I would send for them if they would give me leave. I have often shown them our papers and they like them well; the general hindrance seems to be want of money. But we may soon gather the amount of subscription by saving the 'littles," such as pennies, &c., and so always be ready when the time of subscription comes round. I have seen quite a number of names in the last volume that I am acquainted with, and was very glad to hear from them. If well, and pressing on to the "high calling," it is a source of comfort; if sorrowful, or cast down, I can mourn with them, for my lot has also been cast among the afflicted.

Your sister in bonds of love and unity.

Report of Sunday School.

We have had two terms of the Sabbath School, at the Union cemetery school house, in the Conemaugh congregation. We organized May 22nd, 1868, by electing C. P. L. Roberts, Superintendent; David Hildebrand, assistant Superintendent; John J. Good Secretary; Ephraim Gochenour Librarian Wm. R. Gochenour, Treasurer.

A few months after this organization our assistant Superintendent was called to the ministry. We then filled the vacancy by electing Isaac C. Bole.

In the Spring of 1869 we reorganized by reelecting C. P. L. Roberts Superintendent, and Henry McCartney and Hiram Gochenour assistants. The teachers were all selected by our Superintendent. The school being perfectly satisfied that he should do so. Last Christmas our Superintendent, C. P. L. Roberts was called to the ministey. We are perfectly satisfied with the calling of both the above named although we are almost at a loss to know how to fill-the Superintendency. We think our school has been a success. It is called the Brethren's Sunday School No 1.

There have been three others organized since, in this congregation. We are of the opinion that Sunday Schools are just the places to qualify persons for any position that duty may demand of them. We hope that all the brothers and sisters may manifest an interest in the moral and religious cultivation of the youthful and rising generation.

"Anoint thy head and wash thy face."

In reply to the request made by Sarah Ridenour, Number 2nd, page 27. But thou when thou fastest annoint thine head, and wash thy face." In the ancient Jewish canon annointing was forbidden on days of fasting and humiliation, and hypocrites availed themselves of this ordinance, that they might appear to men to fast. It was ancient custom among the hypocrites in that day. They availed themselves of that part of the command of our Lord. Our Lord cautions against this, as it would affect nothing by leaving the head unanointed, and the face unwashed, that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father who seeth in secret and he shall reward thee openly. You can't affect anything by outward appearance with your unanointed head and unwashed face, for I see the intents of thy heart, therefore anoint thy head and wash thy face, and dress in thy ordinary manner, that thy inward man appear before God, as well as the outward man. The head and face would look a little more sad, but let thy deportment prove that thou desirest to recommend thy soul to God and not thy face to man.

A fast is termed by the Greeks a total abstinence.

MICHAEL SLONGER.

Dear Brother Holsinger; I thought it not out of place to write a little for the Companion, knowing that I can make known through it our situation out in the far west, here in Iowa. I came here on the 21st of October 1869, with nine other members among whom was brother Christian Long, an active minister of the gospel, who undoubtedly is much known through the brotherhood. Also brother John Diehl, a deacon, who is much loved for his golden character. We were not here long until we had a church organization, which was accomplished with much prayer for God's love to be ever burning in our hearts, and that others may see our good work and glorify our Father which is in heaven. There are about twenty members in this arm of the church, who manifest much love toward one another. O may God's blessings ever rest upon this part of God's moral vineyard, so that we may prosper as a church, and God's work may go on. We have preaching every two weeks. Having no meeting house we occupy the Court House in Adel, and a schoolhouse in the country. Brethren desiring to move west will do well by coming here. We have a good country. Land can be purchased at very low prices. Now, brother Henry, if you think these few lines worthy of your columns you can insert them. I am only a babe in the Church, just four months old. I greatly desire the prayers throughout the brotherhood, both for myself and the little church here.

JACOB G. ROLAND.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Came to his death by accident, in Pottowattomie county, Iowa, November 25th, 1869, JACOB, son of brother Thomas D. (deceased) and sister Susannah BROWN; aged 10 years, 11 months and 22 days. While engaged in assisting his elder brother, and uncle, in loading a log on a wagon with skids, one of the skids gave, and the log fell upon his head, killing him instantly. His remains were brought to the residence of his grandfather, brother Jacob Heastan, near Crescent City, Ind., and interred in that vicinity.

Brother Thomas D. Brown, father of the above, died at his residence in Franklin, Decatur County, Iowa, March 6th, 1867; aged 36 years. By request. L. M. Kob.

In the bounds of the Yellow Creek congregation, Bedford Co., Pa., Jan. 9th, ELIZABETH, wife of Benjamin SHOEMAKER, and daughter of John K., and sister Barbara Teeter; aged 25 years, 10 months and 28 days. Funeral by the Brethren, to a vast audience.

Disease, Confinement. Her baby went five days previous to the spirit land, at the age of 5 days. The subject of this notice was an amiable and obedient young woman. She lived in holy wedlock one year and fifteen days; her ornament a meek and quiet spirit, but, with many, she delayed her eternal adoption. This should serve as a warning, solemn and impressive, to all in like circumstances. LEONARD. FURRY

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria county, Pa., January 23d, MARTHA, daughter of Elder Samuel and Sister Susannah BRALLIER; aged 8 years, 9 months and 26 days. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Rev. 14:13, to a large and attentive congregation. (Visitor please copy.)

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

In Shade Creek branch, Somerset county, Pa., January 15th, of scarlet fever, ELIZABETH, daughter of brother Abraham and sister Elizabeth WEAVER; aged 3 years, 10 months and 25 days. Funeral services by Elder Christian Lehman and Joseph Berkey and the writer, from St. John 11:24—26.

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE.

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the powers that be, to give it the most unqualified praise, and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Savior Comes.

How long, how long, all from on high,
The glorious and exulting cry
Will come, in tones none can deny,
He comes! the Savior comes!

As Angels above and saints below;
Seraphs on high in robes of snow;
All in one grand transcended glow
Will sing, He comes! He comes!

Divinity's realm shall stand, art
With her glare as the lightning's dart,
Shall perish and from earth depart,
And all proclaim He comes!

The great day is hast'ning; the light
Is dawning; glorious and bright,
The dawn that dispels that dark night,
And ere long He will come.

Unsound Doctrine.

It appears that unsound doctrine is taught in the present day to a greater extent than sound doctrine. It is getting to be the popular religion of the day. The Bible is read in so many different ways by men, and thereby they derive some of the most erroneous ideas. The Bible is daily being more perverted. A misconstruction is given to nearly every sentence; "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

Look at the great commission; how sadly it is altered and misconstrued by men who pretend to be expounders of the gospel in its primitive purity. Some say that baptism is not essential, "or not binding at the present day."—Others say it can be performed by immersion; or by pouring, or by sprinkling. Either way is correct. Some denominations have it in their discipline to receive persons into the Church by baptism any way they wish to. And if they wish to be received without baptism, they will receive them without it; leaving it to the dictates of their conscience. And when they do baptize persons, they baptize them because their sins are remitted, while the Bible says they are to be baptized "for the remission of sins." Is not such doctrine as the above unsound?

How badly the baptism of Christ is misrepresented in some of the Juvenile papers; stating that Christ our Savior was in the river of Jordan, and John the Baptist was standing on the bank, at the edge of the water, with a cross in one hand, and a bowl in the other, and stooped down and dipped up water and poured it on Christ's head. And it was said by a certain minister that Christ was in the river of Jordan standing on a stone, and that John baptized him by pouring water on his head with a horn. This is another unsound doctrine which is taught by some of the great theologians. Oh, can it be that persons of so great intelligence will so pervert the Gospel, and thereby lead many a poor soul astray?

Pedobaptists claim that baptism takes the place of circumcision, and that sprinkling is the only true mode of christian baptism, which are two more errors in religion. Sprinkling as a baptism is a fundamental error. It is unsound doctrine. They, and many others, are found only in catechisms, disciplines and creeds. What unsound doctrine is derived from Matt. 19: 13—15; Mark 10: 13—16; Luke 18: 15—17; Acts 2: 38—39, to defend infant baptism; and in John 3: 23. it is taught by many that the reason John was "baptizing in Aenon, near the Salim, because there was much water there" was to supply the multitude of people and the herd of cattle they had with them with water; and in John 13: 8, where Jesus answers "Peter, if I wash thee not thou hast no part with me" that he rejects immersion. Such as the above are some of the unsound doctrines which I have heard taught. Let us, my brethren, rejoice; "be steadfast, unmovable, always abound in the work of the Lord," and not be advocates of unsound doctrine, for unsound doctrine in religion is heresy.

Modesty.

"What art thou, O man, that presumeth on thine own wisdom? or why dost thou vaunt thyself on thine own acquirements?"

The first step towards being wise, is to know that thou art ignorant; and if thou wouldst not be esteemed foolish in the judgment of others, cast off the folly of being wise in thine own conceit. As a plain garment best adorneth a beautiful woman, so a decent behavior is the greatest ornament of wisdom. The speech of a modest man giveth lustre to truth, and the diffidence of his words absolveth his error. He relieth not on his own wisdom; he weigheth the counsels of a friend, and receiveth the benefit thereof.—He turneth away his ear from his own praise, and believeth it not; he is the last in discovering his own perfections. Yet, as a veil addeth to beauty, so are his virtues set off by the shade which his modesty casteth upon them.

But, behold the vain man, and observe the arrogant! He clotheth himself in rich attire; he walketh in the public street; he casteth round his eyes, and courteth observation. He tosseth up his head, and overlooketh the poor; he treateth his inferiors with insolence; and his superiors, in return, look down on his pride and folly, with laughter. He despiseth the judgment of others: he relieth on his own opinion, and is confounded. He is puffed up with the vanity of his imagination; his delight is to hear, and to speak of himself all the day long. He swalloweth with greediness his own praise; and the flatterer, in return, eateth him up.

"Holiness Becometh Thy House Forever."

This expression, from the lips of the old Psalmist, David, from whom we are so frequently refreshed by many expressions full of pathos and deep significance, comes to us with redoubled force, when we see it verified by a personal confirmation in the person of Christ, who in the majesty of his power, walked into the temple at Jerusalem, declaring to that people: "it is written, my house shall be called a house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves." Truly the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience, and upon all the workers of iniquity. I do not desire to admonish those of my dear brethren who may perhaps be my superiors in the advancement of a divine life, but whenever we see an evil among us I think we should feel it our duty to express our disapprobation in that spirit of brotherly affection and love that we should cherish for each other, desiring continually to assist in promoting the welfare of the church and the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

I have observed with feelings of regret, since my connection with the brotherhood, although an humble and perhaps unworthy member, that upon our assembling together for the worship of God, and especially upon the Sabbath, that after the ordinary salutation, and the common civilities extended to each other—grouped together around perhaps in the house, we find the character of our converse running into the common channels of inquiry in regard to the past weeks avocations, as regards our prosperity, or our remorse over adversity, as the case may be. Or perhaps our entertainment may consist in tickling our morbid sensibilities upon some trifling occurrence of no especial interest. Thus we often witness an exchange of experience and sentiment that never aspires above the groveling things of earth, that do not contain one spark of virtue of an elevating character. Christ did not set apart that day for such purposes. How much better would it be were we to go quietly to our seats and commune with our own hearts and with God, the aspiration of our souls arising up toward his holy hill, in silent thanksgiving and praise. Or let our exchange of sentiment and of inquiry be of a character that has a tendency to elevate the soul, by assisting in building each other up in our most holy faith, and in the things that pertain to our spiritual interests, thereby enhancing the prosperity of the church by dropping a word of consolation and encouragement to those who with us are traveling Zionward.

Force of example will sometimes compel us to admire in others that which we do not so fully practice ourselves. Let us strive to imitate that which is good, and leave undone that which is not in accordance with divine teaching.

It would be well for us on the morning of that day to call upon God to assist us in banishing from our minds all things (so far as consistent) pertaining to our secular affairs; that we may glorify God in our bodies and our spirits which are his, in a manner that will prove acceptable in his sight; endeavoring to put on the whole armor of God. Also, we are told to walk circumspectly, nor as fools, redeeming the time because the days are evil; being careful not to have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. And then comes that beautiful and pathetic admonition, every word almost a treasure in itself, which is worthy of being inscribed in letters of living light upon the tablets of our hearts: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us." If there is one passage of scripture more pregnant with deep and grand sublimity of character, it is this, couched in language so potent with all the fulness of the love of God gushing up from the depths of that fountain which all the ages of eternity can never lessen, which will flow on in its undisturbed tranquility as long as eternal ages roll; as it passeth all knowledge in this world we will only be made to appreciate its fulness when his ransomed family shall be gathered home to reap the full fruition of their labors; basking forever in the sunshine of his presence, where our hearts and our voices may be blended sweetly together in ascriptions of praise, honor, and dominion to his great and holy name.

Oh, what a sweet exalted song,
When every tribe and every tongue
Redeemed by blood with Christ appear,
And join in one full chorus there.

My soul anticipates the day,
Would stretch her wings and soar away
To aid the song, the palm to bear,
And praise my great Redeemer there.

Dram Drinking.

To while away the moments to some profit while awaiting the train, I will pen down a few thoughts. I am stopping at the V——house, in the village of S. The Hotel office and bar-room is one, so I have an opportunity of noticing the coming and going of the toper. Here comes an old man with tottering step and seemingly dim eyes, clad in garments rather the worse for wear, and calls for whiskey; out comes the glass and decanter; see the trembling hand grasp the poison cup filled to the brim. He raises it to his lips and quaffs the liquid fire. Seeing his gray hairs and rifled brow I think of her who once probably was his joy and earthly comforter. A mother, and it may be a wife was forgotten or neglected and for aught I know, children once respected and happy, but now miserable because the man is being lured on to a drunkards grave. Here is another at the counter calling for rum, not so old as the other but has the stamp of dissipation on his brow. As he fills the glass he entreats one of his young acquaintances to come and take "a turn" with him. The young man refuses at first, but the earnest entreaties of the other prevail, and up he comes, and there with profane conversation they take "a turn" together. The middle aged man takes a seat at the stove, puts into his mouth a huge chew of tobacco, and often complains of "hard times." Here next comes quite a young man, with a huge comforter thrown loosely around his neck, and well dressed; he walks boldly up and asks for drink; does not take more than half a glass of the red stuff. As he walks away I think to myself, do his parents know that he drinks? Or did they teach him to love the intoxicating bowl, by first putting the glass to his lips, or letting him have the sugar in the bottom of the toddy goblet? Or does that young lady that smiles on him when she meets him know he thus boldly drinks at the village bar or dram shop. Something seems to say to my mind, "young man beware: there is danger in the cup, it lures those that tamper with it too often, on to misery, woe and destruction. It is the great monster that at first excites, then intoxicates, and at last destroys body, and soul. The only safe plan, my dear young readers, is to "touch not, taste not, and handle not the unclean thing." Let once loom up before your mind the ghostly visage of the drunkard, the broken hearted mothers and wives, the desolate and miserable children because of the evil of dram drinking, and I think you will sign the pledge, not of an organized temperance society, but sign a pledge with your own conscience, and then determine you will be a man and stick to it, and you will look back with pleasure, as long as you live, to the day when you said (with a resolution to conquer) you will no more drink rum merely for the sake of drinking. Now is the time to make that resolve, my dear young friends. When young I loved the enticing bowl, but thanks to God I saw the danger, and at the age of seventeen took the pledge with myself, and my God. But I had to battle often with temptation, but now it is past. I have kept the pledge and now I have a perfect abhorrence to dram drinking. My young friends beware of the practice—shun it as you would an adder. You may think you can control your appetite, and you fear not the evil consequences that befal so many because of intemperance. Don't be too sure of your ability to resist, for many that have fell in them selves at last fell from high station to the level of the vilest sot. Oh! if you value your reputation, your name, or the name of your parents, and the love of father, mother brothers, and sisters, and do not desire to bring them down to the grave with sorrow, bid a last farewell to the evil practice; and if you value your soul in eternity, never, no never tamper with the vile monster that has caused so much misery, woe, and ruin both to body and soul.

For the Companion.

Let the Peace of God rule in our Hearts.

Continued.

It is precisely from this point that the mystery of godliness discloses to our view its manifold beauties, which in their turn charm us with the discovery of the 'secret of the Lord.' It is by erecting our telescope from this platform, and commencing our studies here, that we never hesitate as to the quarter into which we should send our affections and our trust; or as to the path in which we ought to walk. Here, having taken a sublime observation of God, we at once move forward, and have gone far on our way; while those who have started from other points of inquiry, stumble, and loiter, and never attain. Religion in the abstract has its beginning in God. It is in vain for us to attempt getting near to God otherwise than from this peace as the centre of attraction. Is success in reading possible so long as the alphabet is unlearned? Common sense says no to this query; and so it does also to this—can any of us become and continue a christian if we forget the God of our salvation, or if we go out to the practice of the great ethics of the gospel from any other centre than the peace of God in our hearts? Every one of the former class fails, because they have not the peace of God; they set out, but from a centre—not from the conviction that God's peace is the alpha of living religion. Let us see then that in this respect we give to the peace of God the rule in our hearts, by commissioning all the thoughts thereof to go out from under its meridian light. This is to begin at the beginning; this is to transcribe the very letters of our love into every lesson of holy wisdom; this is to put the elements of our religion into every work of the affections; this is to open up the fountain of God's love and power upon the outgoings of the inner man, and to secure for us all, whithersoever we may be going, the strength that is in the Almighty arm. We cannot overestimate the moral mightiness that is in religious principle, that all we think, do, and say, should in the very embryos of every thought, deed, and word, be placed under the attractions of this ruling power, seeing that thereby the germs of spiritual life are implanted in every one of us, and that therefrom we receive that centripetal power which regulates our onward movements, until we are found rejoicing in the peaceful bosom of the father of lights.

The peace of God rules, when it is made the pattern after which the heart is conformed. We are commanded to be 'followers of God as dear children,' and also to "let the same mind be in us that was in Christ Jesus." Such injunctions are very comprehensive. They take in the wide range of all that is lovely in the divine character, and imitable in Christ's.

The injunction of the apostle, stands in connection: 'put on,' he exhorts, 'as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness and long suffering, forbearing one another, and forgiving one another.' This beautiful exhortation is then wound up with an appeal to the peace of God, as that which ought to rule and govern us in the cultivation of such religious virtues, or as the great example according to which in our practice, we should be conformed.

Now, a peaceful temper is placed high in the Bible. The peacemakers are said to be blessed, and they are called "the children of God." To be consistent, then, with our filial relationship to God, as the God of love and peace, we must be the children of peace; cherishing towards each other the kind, forbearing, and forgiving temper which God has manifested toward us.—Tempers of an opposite character cannot dwell in justified and pacified bosoms—cannot rule where the God of peace reigns. Being at peace with ourselves, and especially with God, our natural propensities undergo perpetual chastening and discipline from the meek and lowly Jesus. To be of a bad and quarrelsome temper is still to be under the dominion of sin: to be uncharitable, and selfish, unforgiving, and revengful, is to be the child of passion and the slave of sin. Hence these things cannot give any permanent character to us who are more or less under that charity which 'suffereth long and is not puffed up; and is kind, which envieth not, vaunteth not itself, which doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things.' All this is true in reference to our bearing towards our fellow-creatures, but emphatically true when towards our brethren and sisters in the Lord. "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity,' was the testimony of Godliness under the old dispensation; and 'behold how these Christians love one another,' exclaimed they of the fulness of the times? And is it not most fitting that all we of the household of faith should be also of the family of peace and love—that every one of us should be beautiful, and a characteristic illustration of the Savior's school of kindness, so that when reviled, we revile not again; when smitten on the one cheek, we turn the other also; when compelled to go one mile, to go two; when sued for our coat, to give our cloak also." Yes "we the children of this peace love our enemies, bless them that curse, do good to them that hate, and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute us." It is our high distinction to forgive our brethren who offend us, not for seven times, but 'until seventy times seven.' And it is our precious privilege thus to pray, 'forgive us our sins as we forgive those that sin against us.' Here is the wonder how we can manage to keep our hearts and minds in such an equable, tranquil, and charitable condition, with such an infirm nature, and in such a tormenting and provoking world as this. Let the wonder cease in contemplating the rule of our faith and the peace of God in our hearts. It is variance with God that certifies quarrels among us. While not reconciled to God, we will not be reconciled to one another; but when we accept of God's mercy, we are both disposed and qualified to show it to others, for, whatever other prescriptions moral physicians may give our vile tempers, this is the only one that is effectual. Be at peace with God first, and peace with all men follows. The gentle and forgiving spirit is just a copy of redeeming love. Let us then pray that 'the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ that great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, may make us perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in us that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

In making 'the peace of God our pattern we feel ourselves under powerful obligations to preach the glad tidings of salvation to the whole world. What we have felt to be so precious, all men need; and what has been bestowed upon us so freely, we will freely give. God loved the world—so do we. God so loved the world as to give his only-begotten son to die for the sins of the world, and we so loved the world that we engage in every proper enterprise for the diffusion of the glorious intelligence. What God has done in finding a Savior for all men, we cannot do; but we can and we do offer that Savior to all the ends of the earth. Our love to the lost of our race is quickened and enriched by our own delightful experience of our heavenly father's mercy; and what we have found to be so sweet, we desire to share with the rest of the family of mankind. Thus we do not in the strict sense of the word become Saviors, yet do we continually carry the Savior with us, and thereby shed the blessings of our redemption on every hand. And this is because we wish to please God. To please God is our highest attainment, and we know that the surest way to do this, is to carry out God's merciful designs on our fallen world. We are certain to please God if we let God's peace rule our hearts, and to accept him upon the terms of the gospel.

Now my dear brethren and sisters, has the peace of God ruled our hearts the past year. If not, O, let us try by the help of the Lord to let God's peace rule our hearts in the year 1870. We now have seen the commencement of another year, but whether we will live to the end of it is only known, by him who knows all things. Let us have the peace of God to rule our pens when we write for the Companion; let it rule our thoughts, our words, our tongues, our hearts, our whole inner and outer man. And let us live in peace with one another, and above all let us be at peace with God our heavenly Father, who loves us so dearly, when we let his peace rule in our hearts. May God enable us to live in his peace, and to die in his peace, so we may meet God in peace, in heaven above, is my prayer.

SYMPATHY.—It is a mistaken idea that manliness and stoicism are inseparable—that a tender regard for the feelings and interests of others, is weak and unmanly. A heart insensible to sympathy claims greater affinity with the brute than the man.

For the Companion.

On the Death of the Righteous.

TO THE COMFORT OF A BEREAVED SISTER. *

Dear Sister: I feel to address a few lines to you, through the Companion, to your comfort, and by so doing I may comfort others, who, like yourself, in the past year, have taken the last look upon the cold and icy remains of a loved one. But just let me ask the reader, whoever you are, whether professor or non-professor, have you ever stood by the bed-side and witnessed the death of a true and humble Christian? If you have, have you not beheld in him, in that hour, such a peace within, that all his earthly friends, nor the world cannot give? have you not beheld such a composedness and tranquility in the hour of his departure, while the spirit is yet struggling to be freed from the body of clay in which it has been incarcerated, that you have felt, "O, let me die the death of the righteous, let my end be like his." What but the precious promises contained in the "glorious Gospel of our blessed Lord and Master," can support, comfort, and animate the soul at such a solemn period. When the world with all its ties and allurements is rapidly receding from our view, and the brittle thread of our existence, which binds us to earth, is about to be severed, and while weeping friends and loved ones are silently watching our last agonies, and with all tenderness and love are moistening our parched lips, or removing the clay cold sweats from our forehead; and in the midst of all the sufferings of our now wasted fabric, to feel a holy calm within, gives evidence to the support of one who has promised to all his true and faithful children, "Never to leave nor forsake them." "Yea," saith the Psalmist, "though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and staff comfort me." 23: 4.

Thus supported by the presence of the Savior, our dear departed brother exclaimed in the immediate prospect of his departure: "my prospects are so bright, not a cloud intervenes between me and my Savior." On seeing his companion weep, he said: "don't weep for me, I am only going home to that beautiful city, who builder and maker is God, their to enjoy the society of the blessed, and join in the song of all the redeemed." In all his sickness, and much suffering (which was for several months) not a word of complaint escaped his lips, he bore all his pain and suffering with truly christian fortitude.

How dreadful odious must sin be in the sight of God, when even his dearest children suffer so much in consequence of it, and require such purification in the furnace of affliction. This our dear brother seemed to be convinced of; he thought it fit that this body, so diseased by sin, should suffer. His prayer was: "O Lord how long yet, but thy will be done." He seemed to look upon his affliction of the body as necessary to purge and purify the children of God. He felt willing that all that was not "gold, silver and precious stones" should be consumed, in the fire of affliction, "that like gold tried in the fire" he might be fit for the Master's use.

And what was it that enabled this christian to bear all his sufferings so patiently? It is because he hears the voice of one that spoke over eighteen hundred years ago, and he believes, for it is the voice of the Blessed Master, saying: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he was dead, yet shall he live." "And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." St. John 11: 25, 26. He also remembers the words of the Apostle: "If we believe that Jesus died, and rose again, even so them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Thus he feels satisfied to wait patiently till his change come. The humble, faithful christian, may truly say: "O death where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory." "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1st. Cor. 15: 55, 57.

"I heard a voice,"—and that voice was heard by one who was commanded to register the words that all the world might hear—saying unto me: Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

What a comfort to you, my sister, what a consolation to you dear children, when you reflect, and call to mind his sufferings, the wasting away of his flesh, his strong desire to depart and be forever at rest, now that his desire is granted, his wish obtained, his liberated spirit which was once incarcerated in clay. Can never again taste this bitter cup of affliction,

O to be emancipated from corruption, to join in singing the praises of the Lamb. That was slain, and lives again, and to be permitted to sit down at the marriage supper, is, and should be greatly desired. But the mind is lost when we try to contemplate the joys that are in store, and await all the faithful.

We cannot now attempt to portray the glories of heaven, for it is written: "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 1st. Cor. 2: 9.

But is it not a delightful thought, that there we shall (if permitted to enter) be no more subject to cares, temptations, and all the vicissitudes of life. "And if it be so sweet" saith a certain writer, "to think on the love of Jesus here below, what shall we feel when admitted to his presence in glory; and if we delight to sound his praise on earth, how shall we rejoice when our tremulous voice, now checked by frequent sighs, shall be aided by celestial harps."

But in the removal of our friends, and our loved ones, on whom we have leaned for support, is often designed by our heavenly Father to teach us some important lessons, and among others, the withering nature of all earthly happiness, for so prone are we to evil, that we sometimes idolize the gifts of an indulgent God, regardless of the Almighty and bountiful dispenser, who thus, in mercy casts a veil of sorrow over those enjoyments which, had he allowed to remain unclouded, would have weaned us from himself, and thus he bids the bitter tears of deeply-wound feelings to flow in much love to our souls, that all the disappointments we meet with or experience below, may loosen our hold on creature comforts, and beget a willingness to flee away and be forever at rest. Though God has most graciously declared that "he doth not willingly afflict and grieve the children of men," yet we well know that he doth see good in very many instances to grieve and afflict his dear children most heavily, and we none of us know what he may be pleased to lay upon us, in order to bring us unto him before we are ready to depart. But this should be the principle, and the will, deeply-seated, fixed and rooted in our hearts, that whatever comes in the way of affliction is from the hand of a Merciful God, and we ought to feel to say "It is the Lord let him do what seemeth him good."

In conclusion, dear sister, among the many consoling and comforting passages in the blessed word of God, there is none to my mind so beautiful, so adapted to meet thy case, and the case, methinks, of all sorrowing and afflicted Christians, as the words recorded by the apostle Peter: "Cast all your cares upon him, for he careth for you." 5: 7. This is addressed to all believers, under every trial and circumstance in life. Then it meets your case you that are now mourning the loss of a dear husband who has been removed by the cold hand of death. He was the companion of your home, with whom you so often took sweet counsel. He was also a kind father to his children; but he is now gone forever from your sight in this world. But remember, O, ever remember, that he sleeps in Jesus. A blessed sleep, and you surely ought to rejoice, even in the midst of all your sorrow, that he is now safely delivered from all sin and sorrow, trial and afflictions, of this sinful world. And if by the loss of your companion you are left lonely and desolate you have a friend in him who has promised that he "will never leave thee, or forsake thee." Remember that he has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless, and commandeth the lowly to trust in Him.

"Then cast your care upon him for he careth for you." Wait in humble faith and patience, a little time yet, and he will be with thee, when thou, too, shall be called to pass through the valley of the shadow of death, and be reunited with all the loved ones gone before, never again to take the parting look.

One by one of our loved number,
Now enjoy the sweetest slumber,
In the silent tomb.
Hopes the brightest fade the fleetest,
Flowers the fairest are the sweetest;
Joy is held in gloom.
Thus care-worn mortals gladly own,
That this dark world is not their home.

My Fathers Will.

A pious old man was one day walking to the sanctuary with a New Testament in his hand, when a friend who met him said:

"Good morning, Mr. Price."

"Ah, good morning," replied he; "I am reading my Father's will as I walk along."

"Well, what has he left you?" said his friend.

"Why, he has bequeathed me a hundred fold more in this life; and in the world to come life everlasting."

This beautiful reply was the means of comforting his Christian friend, who was at the time in sorrowful circumstances.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Trifling Efforts.

A word may break the stubborn will
Where labored sermons fail;
Where'er'eqaal poised the good and ill,
A look may turn the scale.

Down in the heart depraved a smile
May send a blessed thought—
And in the depths of craft and guile
A glorious change be wrought.

Where reason hardens, tears may bring
Repentance to the heart,
And cause the shoots of grace to spring,
And love divine impart.

Guard well your actions and your speech,
And check the sins that rise;
The influence of your life will reach
Beyond the crumbling skies.

Use Plain Words.

A clergyman, while composing a sermon, made use of the words "ostentatious man." Throwing down his pen, he wished to satisfy himself before he proceeded, as to whether a great portion of his congregation might comprehend the meaning of these words, and he adopted the following method of proof: Ringing his bell, his footman appeared, and was addressed by his master. What do you conceive to be applied by an ostentatious man?" "An ostentatious man?" said Thomas, "why sir, I should say a perfect gentleman." "Very good," observed the vicar; "send Ellis, the coachman, here." "Ellis," said the vicar," what do you imagine an ostentatious man to be?" "An ostentatious man, sir" said Ellis; "why, I should say an ostentatious man meant, saving your presence, a very jolly fellow." It is hardly necessary to add that the vicar substituted a less ambiguous word.

"Just As Well."—In conversation several days since with a Pedobaptist minister, he made the statement that a few years ago he was sent for in great haste to go and sprinkle a dying child. But before he reached the house the poor little sufferer had passed away, leaving the act unperformed by this clerical gentleman. The parents were in grief at the death of the little one; but in a slight measure consoled by the hope that though the official had not arrived in time to put the drop of water on the dying child's face, they had done it themselves, and that, under the pressing circumstances of the case, it would answer just as well as though he had done it. But to assure themselves more perfectly about it, they stated the case to this minister—who by the way was neither a Romanist nor an Episcopalian—and asked him if he thought it was not just as well as though he had performed the deed. After a due and solemn consideration of the theological problem,—not, however, by "searching" the Scriptures, and prayer—he replied to them that he thought it was just as well.

A Strange Story—A Boston Lady Sees a Vision on the Housetop.

[From the Boston Evening Times.]

On Friday morning last, at about 4 o'clock, a lady resident of the West End of this city, having occasion to ascend the roof of her dwelling, beheld a brilliant reflection of a light of many colors, like the rainbow, on the white linen hanging on her lines, and raising her darkened eyes in bewilderment to the sky, was obliged to cover them with her hands on account of the dazzling effulgence and splendor which met her view and transfixed, as with a dart, her very soul.

Quivering with astonishment and fear, she hastened down stairs and alarmed the inmates of the house, who, eager to behold what she had failed to portray in words, were astounded at seeing in the firmament the blazing form of a man as resplendent as the sun in its meridian glory. Round about him the forms of gorgeously attired infants of angelic beauty hovered, and beneath them were seen the profiles of two women in a kneeling posture.

One man, a Mr Wiggin, also a resident of the West End, and a very trustworthy gentleman, possessing more esprit present than the others, burnt a piece of glass through which were perceivable these words: "Come, now is the accepted time; come, now!" These were in very large green letters, which he says he plainly saw. There were other words, but our informant could not decipher them.

"In the last days there shall be signs in the heavens." Surely, the end must be approaching when justice shall no longer be tempered with mercy, but with the wrath of the Great Judge of all judges—

"Who shall not fail nor be discouraged
Till he hath set judgment in the earth."

We have made inquiries concerning the parties alluded to above, and find that they are not Spiritualists or Second Adventists, and are not given to nightmare. They are worthy Methodist people. Had only one person seen the sight it might not be considered remarkable; but several saw the forms distinctly, and the sight made an impression on their minds. We leave it for the meteorologists to determine what the phenomenon was.

A Lapse of Memory.—Not long ago, in New England, when the present pastor of a Congregationalist church was under examination as a candidate for ordination, a member of the council, a neighboring minister, requested him to mention some passage of Scripture in favor of infant baptism. He paused a moment, then replied, "None occurs to me." And so that momentous subject passed without further notice. But it was a cruel question, hard to be answered by one yet a novice in the art of extracting sunbeams from stones. Older ministers, however, might well imitate the young candidate's discretion. He did the best he could—the best any one could really do; for how could that occur to him which he had never seen? And, pray, who ever read a passage of Scripture which enjoins, or even alludes to, in so many words, infant baptism? The old minister did well not to press the question. But what shall we think of ministers and churches practising that for which they require no Scripture warrant? What if other doctrines were passed over in like manner? And why not, if infant baptism is accepted as a divine institution?

"Fabricated Sins and Duties."

Under this title The Radical, after first denying that Jesus ever enjoined or practiced the observance of Sunday as a Sabbath, says of public prayer:

"Looking at Jesus as a lawgiver, what he said of prayer was:

"1. Negatively. That his followers should not pray standing in public religious assemblies; should not use repetition in their prayers; but, on the contrary.

"2. Positively, When they prayed, it should be in secret; in the closet, with the door shut.

"Looking at Jesus as an exemplar, his own practice corresponded with the above directions to his followers. We never hear of his praying in the Sabbath assemblies of the Jews, though a part of his business was to preach there; and we never hear of his calling his disciples together, either daily or weekly or occasionally, to unite with them in prayer." Not a single case is recorded in which Jesus held what is now known as a "prayer meeting." The only case of even apparent exception is that once he prayed for his disciples, in their presence; apparently that they might better understand his desires, expectations, and purposes. On the other hand, all the testimony shows that he was assiduous in secret prayer, going away from his disciples for that purpose.

"The voice of the New Testament on this subject consists of the precept and example of Jesus, since all its writers refer to Him as the Supreme authority.

"It appears, then, that no sanction is given either by Jesus, regarded as lawgiver and exemplar, or by the Bible, regarded as the Supreme and efficient rule of life, to either of the two practices which are considered by our orthodox church as the chief external indications of piety; namely, observance of Sunday as a Sabbath, and attendance on periodical public prayer. Both these belong to the class of pretended duties; that is to say, customs which are not duties at all, and would never have been regarded as such except through the error and sin of the church which has followed "the traditions of the elders" in the matter, in direct opposition to the two authorities which she pretends to hold as supreme—Jesus Christ and the Bible."

Words and Deeds.

Words spring from thoughts, and tend to acts. Vile words lead to vile deeds. They familiarize the mind with vice, and break down the barriers of purity. Modesty is a safeguard against sin; evil words effectually destroy it. A dollar broken into is soon spent, and a pure purpose once polluted by sinful words soon melts away. Many a man has talked himself into sensuality, crime, and ruin. Intimacy with evil in thoughts and words blinds us to the vileness of iniquity, and prepares us for sinful indulgence.

The lesson is obvious: avoid the dialect of sin. Keep the mouth as with a bridle. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minster grace to the hearers."—Eph. iv. 29. Repeating wrong things is as really wrong as originating them. "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." "For every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my Redeemer."—Ps. xix. 14.—Heavenly Tidings.

How soon Forgotten.—So lately dead, so soon forgotten. 'Tis the way of the world. Men take us by the hand and are anxious about the health of our bodies, and laugh at our jokes, and we really think, like the fly on the wheel, that we have something to do with the turning of the earth. Some day we die and are buried. The sun does not stop for our funeral: everything goes on as usual; we are not missed on the street; one or two hearts feel the wounds of affliction; one or two members still hold our name and forms; but the crowd moves in daily circles, and in three days the greate wave of time sweeps over our graves and washes out the last vestige of our lives.

Morgenlied.

In deinem Namen, Jesu Christ,
Steh' ich vom Lager auf;
Zu dir, der allenthalben ist,
Richt' ich mein Herz hinauf.

Nun wartet wiederum auf mich
Viel Arbeit, Sorg' und Müh';
O lieber Herr, ich bitte dich,
Lehr mich vollenden sie.

O lehr mich thun nach deinem Sinn,
Das kleinste,—größte Werk;
Sei, wenn ich im Gedränge bin,
Nur du mein Augenmerk.

Und drängt mich der Geschäfte Last,
Will ich entlaufen dir:
Der du den Sturm gestillet hast,
Still auch den Sturm in mir.

Lehr mich in Allem dich versteh'n,
Nur seh'n auf deinen Wink;
Heiß'st du mich auf den Wogen geh'n,
So halt mich wenn ich sink'.

Ach laß' im Sinken, Herr, mich nicht!
Du weiß'st, ich bin ja dein;
Und wenn mir's an Muth gebricht,
So ruf mir: Du bist mein!—

Nun, ihr kleinen Knaben und Mädchen, sagte ein Lehrer zu seiner Klasse mit einmal recht still, so still, daß man eine Nadel fallen hören konnte! Einen Augenblick war Alles ganz still, als ein kleiner Knabe plötzlich rief: „Nun lassen Sie die Nadel fallen!"

Look Out for Him.

For the great adversary who always aims at the open joint in the harness. A shrewd writer says:

"Does not Satan attack us in our weakest point? How he suits his mode of temptation to the disposition of the victim! Are you vain? In how dazzling a lustre will he place the pleasures of this poor world before you! Are you ambitious? In what splendid letter will he make the great things of man appear! Are you discontented? In what exalted light will he place the advantages of others before your eyes? Are you jealous? In what strong contrasts will he place the kindness of the person you have reward another than you! Are you of an ill temper? How he will make you think everybody hates you, neglects you, despises you, or intends to slight you! Are you indolent? How wearisome will he make the slightest effort for another's good seem in your eyes! Are you too active? How useless all he make the quiet hour of prayer, and thought, and reading seem to you! He tempts us to what our nature is most inclined; he suits his allurements to our inclination. If we are of a quiet temper, he will not tempt us there; if we are only ambitious, he will take care to make us jealous; if we are too active, he will not tempt us to be idle. He knows as well; he drives our inclination to its last extreme."

MAN IN CREATION.—In the Jewish writings called the "Mashna," the following question is asked and answered as follows:

"Why did God create only one man in the beginning? It is for many reasons: 1st. That we may learn from the fact as the earth was once in existence for the benefit and happiness of one human being, the ruin of one pious and honest human soul is equal to a destruction of a whole world with all its forces, and the preservation of a human soul from perdition is equal to such a meritorious work, as if one had preserved a whole world with all its manifold creatures. 2d. That no man shall be elated with pride of high pedigree, & that one shall not say to another, my father was of nobler blood than yours."

Tyrone City, Pa., Feb. 8, 1870

A note from brother C. H. Balsbaugh, dated 27th ultimo, informs us that since his last communication he has been very severely afflicted. He says: "My sufferings have been excruciating, and my strength has been greatly reduced. I can scarcely hold my pen, and am writing on my bed."

We know he will have the sympathy of our readers in his affliction, and their prayers for his recovery. We hope the Lord will speedily restore him, and spare him many years to labor for his honor, and defend his cause.

For ourselves we have to say this week that we are about a day behind time, occasioned by sickness of one of the printers. And at the time of closing these columns we are just able ourself to be up.

Supply of Books.

We have now replenished our stock of Books, and can fill orders promptly. Answers to Correspondents.

D. T. ARNOLD. The Debate we refer to was between Mr. Snyder, a Lutheran, and brother Quinter. It formerly sold at $1.10, but we now offer it at 75cts prepaid, by the single copy, and at fair reductions to those who buy to sell again.

I G. HARLEY. "Miscellaneous" should have been below instead of above the poem. The best will make mistakes, and we are not the best by a great ways.

B. A. M. Thank you for the correction. If you two are one, you will need but one paper, for when one is reading the other may listen. We regret that you shall never again have your name on our books; but so it is when our sisters consent to lose their identity. But our loss no doubt is brother W.'s gain.

LYDIA SHOWALTER. Yes it has come to hand.

SAM'L H. NEHER. All right. "At the mouth of two or three witnesses," &c.

STEPHEN HILDEBRAND. Will be glad to have you visit the Companion office, as we regard you as one of its strong supports.

C. G. LINT. Sam'l D. Livengood's subscription ended with volume 5. It is so on our books at least. Should be pleased to hear from him and a few hundred others who are in the same unpleasant situation. We are yet prepared to start them in with the beginning of Volume Six.

BACK NUMBERS. We will send back numbers to new subscribers until after the end of the first quarter, April first, whether ordered or not. After that time if they are desired they may be ordered.

From Brother John Wise.

Brother Henry ; I will give you, and the readers of the Companion, a brief report of my visit to Mifflin, and Blair counties, Pa. I left home on the morning of the 7th of January 1870. Went by way of Brownsville to Pittsburgh. The Steam Boat being behind time, I missed the train that I should have taken East, and was thrown behind time, all through my journey. I arrived at Lewistown, the place of my destination, at 8. 25. P. M. Too late for meeting that evening. Brother Graybill Myers, my colleague, having arrived, filled the appointment that evening. I made my way to the house of friend Wm. Panabaker, in Lewistown, where I was taken in, and cared for, for the night. Sunday morning I was taken by friend Panabaker to the Dry Valley Meeting house, for meeting at 10 A. M. Here I met the brethren and sisters assembled for worship, we continued to meet here every day, forenoon and evening, until Thursday evening the 13th. I considered this a model meeting. The most interesting day was Tuesday ; made interesting by the following circumstance. There were two schools in session near the place of meeting ; the brethren invited the teachers to bring their scholars to meeting, to which they responded, and the pupils of both schools came into the meeting house together, and were seated right in front of the preachers. The sight was beautifully solemn, above fifty small children, all sitting before us, to hear of Jesus, produced a very solemn sensation. When I arose to address them I could not refrain from tears. That day will be long remembered. I recommend that wherever it may be possible brethren should "do likewise."

On Friday morning brother Myers returned home to fill his appointment at Warrior's Mark ; and I was taken to visit Brother Isaac Price, (a Deacon) who had been sick for some time. Brother Charles Royer, and John Beaver of Buffalo Valley, assisted at the meetings in Dry Valley, and they, with Elder Jacob Mohler and others, were with us at brother Price's. From brother Price's I was taken by brother Archy Vandyke to his residence, in Furgeson's Valley. This was the first time I ever visited this kind and interesting family. There was meeting at the school-house, near, in the evening. Brother Archy took me to meeting, and then back to his house after meeting, where I was kindly cared for, and enjoyed good rest. Next morning meeting at same place, at 10 A. M. Here Brother Wm. Howe, one of the ministers of Dry Valley congregation joined us. Dined with Brother Geo. S. Myres, a young minister in the same congregation. This closed my visit in Dry Valley branch. My visit among the members of this congregation was very pleasant, and I added many to the list of those whose names "I love to remember." In the afternoon of the 15th I was taken by Brother Vandyke to Spring Run congregation. In the evening commenced meeting at Spring Run meeting house, and had a pleasant meeting.

Sunday morning I was taken to Myres school-house, where we met a small but very attentive congregation. Dined with Brother Abraham Myres, one of the ministers of Spring Run congregation. In the evening visited a sick sister, and attended meeting at meeting house in evening. On Tuesday Brother G. Myers joined us again. On Wednesday evening I was taken to Mattawanna school-house. Thursday morning returned to meeting house. Thursday evening closed our meetings at Spring Run. I was pleased with the members in this congregation, especially the young sisters, who observe the Scriptural order, of appearing in the worship of God with their heads covered, with a neat, plain covering. I was happy to find the members in this congregation generally awake, and active. On Friday morning I took my final leave of the brethren of Spring Run. And stepping in the cars at 11. 22 A. M. was soon moving onward toward Tyrone, where we arrived at 2. 15 P. M. Walked over to the Companion Office, and found brother Holsinger and family well, except the older daughter who had the Mumps but was quite cheerful notwithstanding. In the evening we had meeting in brother Henry's "hired house." Inasmuch as it is known to the readers of the Companion that there have been some "hard words" in some of the articles published in the Companion, from brother Holsinger's and myself and as some think hard feelings exist between us, I will just say, whatever may have been indulged heretofore, we talked our matters over, and as far as I know, we have no feelings but those of love and good will toward each other. On Saturday the 22nd I took the train for Hollidaysburg. As we passed El Dorado brother G. Myers stepped into the car. At Hollidaysburg we took the Stage to Martinsburgh. Here we were met by brother Snyder who took us to the Clover Creek Meeting house, where we held meeting that evening. Next morning at 10 A. M. met at same place. After meeting I was taken some 8 miles North, where there were appointments Sunday and Saturday evening. I filled these while brother Myers remained at the meetinghouse. On Tuesday we met in Hollidaysburg in the place where the brethren worship. Had meeting at 10 A. M. and evening. Lodged with brother [illegible], at whose house I lodged six years ago, during the [illegible] M. We were well cared for by this very kind family. On Wednesday morning we took the stage to Hollidaysburg. Took the cars for Altoona. Stopped at El Dorado with brother Myers, and spent the afternoon pleasantly with his kind family. At 1. P. M. I took the cars again for Altoona. Took to Pittsburgh. Arrived at 2. P. M. the next morning. At A. M. I took the stage for Washington county town. Arrived at 1. 15 P. M. Here I met my eldest son with a buggy to take me home. Arrived at home at 3 P. M. Found all well. Thanks, my kind Heavenly Father for thy great mercies to us. And thanks to my dear brethren and sisters for their great kindness to me.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only

Dear Brother Holsinger ; I have often thought of writing for the Companion, but feeling such a delicacy, never ventured to do so until now. Sometimes when I read such interesting, soul-refreshing articles from some of our dear Sisters and Brethren which show so much talent and wisdom, I very reasonably conclude that I have but one talent ; but then the Scriptures teach us that although we have but one we should strive to improve it, I think sometimes that the most feeble of us could write words of cheer and comfort to others, if we were to make an effort.—Having often been compelled by poor health and various other circumstances to remain at home instead of attending church. I have at such times been edified, enlightened and greatly comforted by reading articles in the Companion. And now, Brother, I wish to offer a few words of encouragement to you for the effort which you are about making to furnish suitable reading matter to present to the youth of our land, for it is my humble opinion that this will be the noblest work in which you could engage. Who among us does not greatly desire the salvation of our children ? And do they not need spiritual food and nourishment for their never dying souls as well as we that are older ? Dear sisters and brethren, you who have the care and training of young children I would especially appeal to you, should we not all strive diligently to assist and encourage our brother in this good work, and pray that it may influence our children to virtue, and finally to salvation. I have two dear little children who were called away in their infantile innocence, who I feel confident are at rest on that peaceful shore. But I have others who are growing up in this sinful world, and if they live I know they will be surrounded by many temptations to hinder them from good. Oh that we may strive earnestly to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and may we all meet at last as an undivided family in heaven, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

Visit to the Shanesville branch.

Left home Jan., 15th, last. Arrived at Shanesville same evening, preached in the M. E. Meeting house ; stayed over night with Sister Kline. Next morning went with brother John Neff's family in the wagon to the Sugar Creek meeting house.—Preached five discourses there. Tuesday night preached in Rogersville ; also next day at 10 A. M. Same evening in Shanesville in the M. E. house. On Thursday evening preached in the Pleasant Valley meeting house, near brother Peter Neff's. Remained with brother until next morning. At two o'clock brother Samuel Burger, a young minister, took me in his carriage to Dover Station. Took the cars about six in the morning ; arrived home about eleven o'clock. Found all well ; thank God. All the above meetings were pretty well attended, and the best of order. There are four Ministers in this branch. Namely Elder G. Neff, J. Neff M. Shutt, and S. Burger. I feel very thankful to the kind brethren and sisters for their hospitality and kindness which I shared so largely at their hands.

The Pious Youth.

The first No. of the above named periodical is before me, and I am highly pleased with it. One article (war on Christian Principles) is worth to me the whole years subscription. And now brethren and sisters, let me appeal to you to give your assistance in this work. Much good will be done through its columns if supported as it should be. It will be as "Bread cast upon the waters" which may be seen many days hence. Then let us take hold of the work and all throw in our mite, and we can give to our children interesting as well as wholesome reading matter.

It is to be feared that, as parents, we are not so careful as we should be. Perhaps we neglect our duties towards our children. The mind is never idle. It must feed upon something, and if not fed with good and wholesome food, it will feed upon that which is the reverse. Subscribe for the "Pious Youth ;" induce your children to read it ; draw their attention to it by citing them to certain portions of it, and through these means you can feed them with that heavenly food, which cometh from above. How much better this will be than to have them carousing with their fellows, to pass time away, or rather wasting their precious time, where if you furnish them with something interesting and at the same time useful, you will find them around the hearth at home, trying to unravel a Scriptural Enigma, or Puzzle, thus weaning them from their more than useless, perhaps sinful, amusement.

"Bring up your children in the fear and admonition of the Lord." If we neglect this duty the account in the Book of God's remembrance will be a dark one. Our children will rise up in the Judgment and testify against us, saying "I never heard father pray ; I never heard mother pray ; they never taught me the right way of the Lord ; they never furnished me with suitable reading that would draw my attention to thy truth." I have often thought that we (at least some of us) live too much for this world ; we are too much concerned about the affairs of this world ; more concerned about the welfare of our children in this life than we are about their eternal welfare. This should not be so. Seek ye first the kingdom of God," &c. And again, dear brethren and sisters, does it not occur to your mind that perhaps we could by getting the Pious Youth for our children to read, assist in stemming that demon pride, which is fast gaining ground and with bold strides entering into the church. "Train a child in the way it should go and when it is old, it will not depart therefrom." If we instil into the minds of our children the "Good old way," rest assured they will not forget it, and in their riper years they will call us blessed. And above all we shall be with them among that happy throng that will meet the Lord in the air, when He comes to collect His Jewels home; and we all will chime in to swell the loud Hosanna to the Lord. Amen.

JAC. L. WINELAND.

Clover Creek, Pa.,

Brother Holsinger; I have lately noticed that a good many seem to be well pleased with the Companion. I therefore thought I would also communicate a few thoughts in regard to this matter. First I must say that I have been a careful reader of its contents for several years, and can truly say that I have received many good and valuable instructions therefrom, and do sincerely hope our dear brethren and sisters will continue to contribute to its columns, and write such articles as will tend to our edification, and to the saving of precious souls.

Farther I wish to say that I could hardly be better pleased with it than I am at present. I would not do without it for twice the amount of money it costs. It does what it claims to do; it comforts the poor pilgrim on his way to Zion. It contains a great deal of church news. O how I love to read those beautiful lines. When I hear of the success of the spiritual life and the prosperity of our beloved Zion it does me more good than all other reading, except the Bible. Why is it that the brethren and sisters do not appreciate the Companion. When asked the question some will say, I can't afford to pay for it. Others say, I have need of so many things which are of more benefit than the Companion. To all such apologies I would say: brethren and sisters let us dispense with some of the vanities and luxuries of life and we will surely find it an easy matter to procure a few cents for the Companion. Being alone today with my little brothers and sisters I have been engaged in reading the Companion and the Pious Youth, and thought what a blessing it is, when I am deprived of attending meetings to have the privilege to read such periodicals that tell me of that

OSAWKA, KANSAS. }
Jan. 23rd, 1870. }

Brother Holsinger; You will please announce through the Companion that the Brethren of the Grasshopper Valley District will hold their District Meeting, the Lord willing, on Saturday the 16th day of April next, in the Brethren meeting house in the Town of Osawka, Jefferson county, Kansas. All ministering brethren that expect to be with us, are requested to be at the place of meeting on Saturday before the meeting, as the Brethren intend holding meeting prior to the District Meeting. All Brethren coming by railroad will stop off at Medina, and they will please give notice through the Companion, or by private letter, of them starting, that preparation may be made to convey them to the place of meeting. By order of the Brethren.

A. PEARSOLL.

A Door is Open unto Us.

BROTHER HOLSINGER: Will you permit me through the medium of the press to call the attention of our brethren and sisters to the Pious Youth. The Youth will compare favorably with any juvenile paper in America, in size, price, or matter. The Little Corporal, perhaps, has the largest circulation of any child's paper in our country. It is published monthly, at one dollar a year, and claims to give more matter for the money than any other juvenile. The size and number of its pages are nearly identical with the Youth. By this comparison it will be seen that the Youth at one dollar is cheap, and when we take into consideration that the Youth will be sent for seventy-five cents in connection with the Companion, it is very cheap. The matter in the Corporal is said to be all original, and it has for its contributors some of the best writers in our land. The Youth has no Harriet Beecher Stowes or Grace Greenwoods, to write for its neatly printed pages, but no doubt there are Harriets and Graces in a number of families where the Youth visits, who could write to edify childhood, if they could be enlisted into the work. "Oaks from little acorns grow," is as true today as when Miss Beecher wrote her first essay. Let all write compositions and send them, until brother Holsinger announces that the Youth Manuscript Box and the Companion Manuscript Box will hold no more. And if our queries, essays, &c, never see the light our labor will not be lost, if we persevere, for in time practice will enable us to write matter that will be acceptable.

One of our little girls is a great lover of books and papers. On this account we have papers sent to her address. Another has been careless and took but little interest in books or papers. To encourage her we had the Youth sent to "Emma," which had the desired effect. She has carefully read every word in the Youth, and puts much emphasis on "my paper."

S. M. MINNICK.

Antioch, Ind.

Thank you, brother Minnick, for your words of encouragement. We are right glad to know that our labors are appreciated by those for whose good they are intended. The Pious Youth is really a cheap paper, and need not fear comparison with any other magazine of the kind.

We also agree with your remarks to contributors and hope they will be heeded. We should be pleased to have our friends, old and young, learned and unlearned, make the attempt at writing for us—providing we could instil into them a feeling of indifference as to its publication. But if we are to lose a friend for every manuscript we reject, we would prefer to have but few attempts. You say: "And if our essays never see the light our labors will not be lost." This is quite true. The scholar who writes compositions at school, obtains as much benefit from the exercise of composing if his productions are thrown into the fire, as if they would appear in the "New York Ledger." An essay can be of no more advantage to its author (mentally) after he has completed it—unless its errors should be pointed out. This we will do for those who are willing to pay for it; but our time is too precious to correct rejected manuscript and return it for nothing

From Brother D. D. Sell.

Brother Henry: I last wrote at my mother's, in Bedford county, 20th of January. Spent Thursday and part of Friday with uncle and cousin Samuel Kagerice, who is no member but seems to be one of "those that are sick." The time passed pleasantly. Saturday 21st, was conveyed by cousin Daniel S. Sell to Woodcock Valley. Took supper with Brother Henry Clapper and family. Went to the meeting house; met a congregation and tried to preach to them; good order and attention. All night with Elder Jacob Steel who has been afflicted with a sore hand for some time, but is now on the mend. Next day ten o'clock met at the meeting house again; had a good meeting and we hope a profitable one. Dined with brother Clapper. Thence to Beaver Creek meeting house. Had meeting in the evening of the same day. Brother Steel and Clapper in our company; also brother Andrew Snowberger and Jacob Miller. It carried my mind back to days of my childhood, when I used to see the old Brethren take their seats behind the tables. Had a good meeting.

Sunday 23rd, meeting at the same place. A large congregation: Order good, and every thing besides that it takes to make an interesting and profitable meeting. One received by baptism. With my relatives here till Monday.

Thence to Snake Spring Valley congregation. Had an evening meeting in their large meeting house. A very good turnout considering the rainy evening. Lodged with brother Andrew Snowberger. In the morning made a call visit to the family of brother Henry Hershberger. Had a pleasant interview. At 10 A. M. had an interesting meeting at the meeting house. Dined with brother Daniel Hershberger in company with Henry Hershberger and D. Sell. Went back to Beaver Creek, and on our way stopped to see our aged brother, Isaac Bixley, who was very ill, and has been for some time. Hope the Lord may give him strength for his day and trial.

25th. This evening we met in a social capacity, to organize a social society for reading and meditating upon the word of God. And what gave me more than a little delight was that all the young people took part in it. By this means the young minds will be drawn out in the word of God and seek after truth, and not fables. All night with cousin Jacob Koons.

26th. Visited brethren Levi Replogle, S. A. Moore, and Jacob Furry. In the evening came back to Yellow Creek. Had an evening meeting. Large turnout of Brethren and spectators. This was our last meeting in the cove. Conveyed home by cousin Lewis Sell. On our way called to see the paper mill establishment of Daniel M. Bair. Had a pleasant interview with the proprietor and saw the clean white paper spinning out. I am now at home and enjoying good health. Will start for Philadelphia next week.

More anon.

DANIEL D. SELL.

From Brother J S Flory.

Meeting at night, January 24th, at the school house near Elder Jacob Trostles. Met brother Trostle there just on his return from a visit to Pa. Went home and spent the night with Brother Jesse Roop; meeting next day at school house again; home with Brother J. Trostle. Very rainy, so I tarried with him until next morning, when he conveyed me to the Brethren's meeting house at Monrovia, where there was two meetings that day. All night with brother S. Utz. Next morning brother Trostle took me to sister C. Cronices, where I awaited until 11 A. M. when I took the train for Harpers Ferry, where I arrived at 1 P. M. Left at 2 P. M. for Winchester, where I arrived at 3.30 P. M. Left at 4 for Strawsburg. The ride was not very comfortable, being aboard one of those lumbering old stages, and very much crowded. There were two runaway couples in the stage that were homeward bound, and were speculating on what their fathers and mothers would say. Arrived at Strawsburg at 7.30. P. M. Put up at the Virginia Hotel.

Left Strawsburg, Va. at 2 P. M.; the 18th, of January aboard the cars again, and arrived at Harrisburg at 4 P. M. Met Elder John Wine and brother Joel Flory at the depot. brother Flory conveyed me to his home. Meeting next day at Garber's meeting house. At night in the meeting house at Dayton; home with brother John Miller. Next day brother Abraham Early met me and took me to brother A. Stanks on Dry River. Next day to the new meeting house of the Brethren at Beaver Creek. Elder John Wine conveyed me to his home. Night meeting at Briny Branch house of worship; all night with brother John Wine, who next day conveyed me to the place of meeting at Sangersville. All night with Brother John Sanger. Brother David Garber met me at brother Sangers and took me to Emanuel's meeting house, where there was a large concourse of people. After meeting, went home with brother D. Garber; meeting at night at Pleasant Hill. Was taken by brother Samuel F. Miller to his home; here brother C. Hartman of Mill Creek met me took me to the Brethren's meeting house at Mill Creek. After meeting at night went home with my brother, J. F. Flory. Next morning visited a sick sister, and at 11 o'clock attended the funeral of Mrs P. Jones. After preaching was taken by brother Peter Showalter to brother D. Stoner's, uncle of mine. Next day had meeting at the Valley meeting house. Home with brother Garber, where I now am, January the 26th. I am truly thankful to all who were so kind to me as to bring me on my way, and in many other ways administering to my wants. I have since I arrived in Va., met with many relatives, brethren, sisters and friends, in this the place of my birth. The beautiful blue mountains that I so often looked upon I once more can behold, and think of my youthful days, now past no more to return, but refresh my memory as to the vicissitudes of those days

ANSWER TO BROTHER BAILEY.

"Did God create Eve before the seventh day?" We think the above query requires but little comment. If we acknowledge that the first man and woman God created, was Adam and Eve, (which we all doubtless do) the query is already answered. In the first chapter of Genesis we read; And God said, "Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness." &c. 26 : 31. In the 31 verse we read "and God saw every thing that he had made and behold, it was very good. And the evening and the morning were the sixth day. This gives us to understand definitely, that the work of the Lord was finished on the sixth day. And again: Gen. 2 : 1 "Then the Heavens and the earth were finished. And all the hosts of them. 2nd verse "And on the seventh God ended his work which he had made;" How did God end his work? To this we would say, by resting from all his works and hallowing it as a day set apart wholly for rest. Also the latter part of the fourth commandment reads thus: "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it. Ex 20 : 11.

In meditating upon the foregoing scriptures we must readily conclude that Eve, as well as all of God's creatures were thus created in six days. See also Lev. 23 : 3. Ezek, 20: 12.

JOSIAH G. WINEY.

Brother Holsinger; I desire through the columns of the Companion, to ask the Brethren a few questions. Some brethren occupying prominent positions in the ministry, positively assert that Moses is lost and that he appeared with the Savior on the Mount (Hermon) as the representive from the "bad world." What say the Brotherhood to this idea? I have always thought differently, but am ready to exchange error for truth.

Do the Brethren in general hold to the idea that weare under positive obligation, according to the gospel, to leave our daily vocations and attend public worship on "Thanksgiving day." whenever proclaimed by the Governor or President?

Scripture Questions.

What house was Jeremiah the prophet commanded to take into the house of the Lord into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink?

What prophet was commanded of the Lord to get a linen girdle and put it upon his loins and go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

How many were the proverbs of Solomon? and how many of his songs? and of what did he speak? and what did all people come to Solomon for?

In the Elkhart Branch, Somerset Co., Pa., January 22nd, of Apoplexy, ELIAS SAYLOR, of the Mennonite church; aged 57 years, 10 months, and 3 days. Services by H. Blough, (Meno) and the writer, from Rev. 14 : 13.

In the same branch, January 20th, of Apoplexy, brother JOSEPH SCHROCK; aged 53 years, 7 months, and 16 days. Services by the writer, and Jonathan Keim, from Job 14 : 14, 15.

C. G. LINT.

In the Pine Run congregation, Bucks Co., Pa., January 24, 1869, father HUGHBERTS; in the 69 year of his age. He left a disconsolate companion and children who were very painful; but when he was with them that forbade, and he went away. He exhorted his children to meet him in heaven, and his hope bright, and he gave satisfactory evidence that he sleeps in Jesus. Funeral services by brother Israel Pennepacker, at the house, from Job 14 : 14: "If a man die shall he live again?" In which he connected the funeral; at the meeting house he took occasion to warn the living from these words, "prepare to meet thy God."

ISAIAH C. HAMPTON.

January 15th, in the Conewago congregation, sister BARBARA SELLER; aged 45 years, and 7 months. She leaves one son and two daughters to mourn their loss. She was confined to her bed for two years, and her sufferings were very great, but she was then with Christian fortitude, and died in hope of immortal glory. Funeral services by the brethren, from Rev. 14 : 13.

School Notice.

Since there is a growing desire among the Brethren that a College or some such institution of learning should be established in the Church, and after having consulted a number of brethren in Ohio and Indiana, we have set the tenth day of February, 1870, for brethren to meet at Antioch, Ind., to take said school enterprise into consideration, and to adopt the best means of making it a success.

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the power that be, to give it the most unqualified praises and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

[illegible] who are prejudiced against anything [illegible] know that Dr. Fahnestock's Blood Searcher [illegible] was first in practice by our Dr. P. Fahnestock of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1790. It is now put up in bottles, but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever. From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants certainly, it has stood the aged and feeble, and is rapidly wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. Many have been cured by ordering. For particulars and references address Dr. P. Fahnestock, No 56, North Dearborn st. Chicago, Illinois.

A Christian's Voyage.

I am floating on the stream of time,
Toward an unknown shore;
I'm but a frail and tender craft,
And scarce can guide my oar.

Temptation's tide sets round me strong,
And bids me go astray,
But wisdom's sun of righteousness
Awakes to show the way.

Fierce winds of worldly pleasure blow,
From every quarter near;
Kind mercy's compass—cheering hope,
Is mine—I have no fear.

High breakers rise, I'm asked to give
Ere I can pass this sea:
Take all I hear on earth possess,
Charity lives in me.

Ah! land at last; 'tis true I'm here,
Heaven's blessed land at last,
Eternity shall find me here,
Faith's chain will hold me fast.

A Note of Warning.

I wish to say to the unconverted readers of the Companion, that all along in your life, you have, by resisting the gospel, been resisting the expression of tender love. You know what I mean. When you stand up against a tyrant, you feel that you are right in resisting him.—But how do you feel when you resist the kindness of a father, and slight all the expressions of his love for you? How do you feel when you have broken a mother's heart, and when all the expressions of her love could not keep you from the ways of sin, and she would die in grief! O then the scene, the fact is changed. There is guilt; and there the heart feels. So you have resisted God. You have disregarded his love.—Your life has been little else than a constant resisting the appeals of his compassion. His love in redemption you have slighted, and his offers of mercy you have shunned. O, the cross, the cross of Christ! O, the bleeding victim there! O, the pangs and sorrows of that dark day when he died! How it shows the love of God—his tenderness for man—his desire that you should be saved! And O, what a rock is the human heart that has no feeling, when God's incarnate son—the beloved of heaven—hangs on the cross and bleeds; is forsaken; is pale; is exhausted; is convulsed in agony—and dies!

"Hearts of stone, relent, relent,
Break, by Jesus' cross subdued;
See his body, mangled—rent,
Covered with a gore of blood;
Sinful soul what hast thou done!
Murdered God's eternal Son!

Yes our sins have done the deed,
Drove the nails that fixed him there;
Crowned with thorns his sacred head,
Pierced him with a soldier's spear;
Made his soul a sacrifice,
For a sinful world he dies.

Will you let him die in vain?
Still to death pursue your Lord?
Open all his wounds again,
Trample on his precious blood!
No! With all my sins I'll part;
Savior, take my broken heart."

Brotherly Love.

It has been impressed upon my mind, sometime past, to write something on the subject of our near relationship as true brethren in Christ. And I feel to say, in the outset, that, since I was received into the Brotherhood, it has seemed to me that no other ties of affinity, aside from my own family, can ever be equal to that of love to the brethren. I have ever felt that to be ill-treated by a brother in the Church, would be infinitely more crushing than if it came from quite a near relation in the flesh. It is widely different with us, from those of other churches, who do not keep the commandments. For instance: let us illustrate: In the observance of the salutation, if I should salute my brother time after time, and yet feel that he had wronged me, or was doing very wrong toward others, then, most truly, would I feel that I was acting the part of a deceiver and hypocrite. The vows we take before entering the fold of Christ should be felt to exclude us forever from such an act; yet, alas! alas!! we see, in some instances, such acts have been committed. It would seem to be beyond the power of man's imagination to comprehend, what would be the feelings of one that was guilty of such an act. It is, at the least, an evidence undisputable, that one so doing is not right in heart or mind—one or the other. If the latter, it would seem that the mind must be shrouded in the most deplorable darkness.

Salvation.

Our salvation is a complete one. Our great Deliverer has made it so. He came from heaven to this sin stained world for that purpose and no other. He labored hard to redeem fallen humanity from under the curse of a broken law, He died the ignominious death of the cross tha tall might again, by obedience, have access to the tree of life. So long as men get along smoothly in the world being blessed with health and strength, and having their thoughts centered altogether upon worldly affairs, or on intellectual pursuits they little think they need a salvation. But the heart is not at ease nor the conscience at rest. Gold and silver sometimes satisfieth not. When men become concerned about this salvation, the whole universe will not satisfy them. The devil can deceive, but he can not console or comfort. Though a man, under the dominion of his power, should gain the whole world, he will torment his soul unto death. If a man should persue or advance in intellectual culture until he fully understood the whole nature of man, and beast, and every flying and creeping thing in the earth, and not accept the plan of salvation which Jesus Christ the Son of God has purchased with his own blood, he has no promise of eternal life. "For Christ has become the author of eternal salvation to none but those who obey him."

It is a great salvation. Paul says "how shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation!" It is great because Jesus the Son of God who created the heaven and earth purchased it with his own blood. We read in many places in the Bible of deliverance or salvation, which signifies the same thing but none is so great as the salvation by Jesus Christ. "Stand and see the salvation of God," Moses said to the children of Israel, who were closely pursued and about to be captured by the Egyptians. And, notwithstanding the perillous condition that they were in they did stand, and saw a way to escape from their enemy. God caused the great ocean to divide asunder and let the children of Israel pass through on dry ground. O was not that a great salvation. And it was gladly accepted too. Of course the children of Israel would have been very foolish to have stood and allowed the Egyptians to slay them all, I called this a great salvation, and so it is. And I suppose all my readers acquainted with the history of that lamentable occasion will agree with me. But it is not as great as our salvation; the great gospel plan of salvation which Jesus Christ brought from heaven to save the whole human family. And the time was when the salvation by Jesus Christ was not near so great as it is now, it was once only extended to the Jews. When Christ sent his Apostles out to preach his word he sent them to the Jews, or "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and not to the Gentiles. But it was said "in his (Christ's) name shall the Gentiles trust." Matt. 12: 21. And after Christ was crucified after he had shed his precious blood, and died the ignominious death of the cross, and rose from the dead, he gave his disciples the command to teach all nations. Now "in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Yes the way to the Tree of life is now open, and by obedience all can have access to it, and live forever. O how important then is salvation. Yet it is only promised upon conditions. Without complying with the will of God it will benefit none. Man violated the law of his Maker and brought death upon the whole human family, consequently man must again become obedient, to be saved from eternal damnation. But thanks be to God, by complying with the will of heaven, man's condition will be better than if sin had never entered into the world. Although here we have many trials and troubles to encounter beyond this vale of tears God has prepared a home for the righteous that shall never perish. They that bear their cross here shall forever wear a crown in glory.

Sinner let me entreat you not to refuse this great salvation. Suffer not yourselves to be deceived by the enemy of your own souls. Serve satan no longer.

The Commission.

Many of our dear ministering brethren, while traveling, report different places, stopped at, number of meetings, and number of additions to the church. This is proper: and I also believe that all friends feeling an interest in the cause, love to read such reports. I notice where brethren are standing ready to receive and welcome, is the place, where the brethren mostly stop. And it must be delightful to christian ministers traveling, to find brethren and sisters in places they visit, to tarry and labor for the welfare of precious souls. But affection for such should not be so indulged as to neglect so many places, where the brethren, as yet, never made an effort.

I shall endeavor in my weak attempt, to direct my thoughts to our cities and towns. I consider those places, among many others, too much neglected by the Brethren The Brethren have a church in Philadelphia. And now I would ask, why not have one established in other large cities? Is it because the Brethren are afraid to go into the large cities of our land and preach up the humble ordinances of Jesus? Let us remember that Jesus said on one occasion to the people living in the city of Capernaum, when they wish him to tarry with them; "I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also, for therefore am I sent." And the Apostles too, did not pass by the cities, but fearlessly proclaimed the gospel. We see other christian associaitons fulfiling the commission in going, but not in teaching of the all things, as the Savior directed. Where is there a city, town, or village, or even a country school-house, that they have not endeavored to the uttermost of their ability, to proselyte souls to their religion. While we, who profess to teach all things and practice them, come short in fulfiling the commission, not only among all nations, but in our own land and country. There are tens of thousands of souls in our cities throughout the branch. And that not only in the remotest parts, but right among us, that have but a faint, if any knowledge of the gospel as taught by the Brethren Christ not only calls his ministers, but assigns them their place, when he saith, go preach the gospel to every creature. Were Christ to come among us now and give that command, personally to the church. We think we would all make a great effort to spread the gospel. The Savior is here in his word, and that word is truth, clothed with power. And the time alloted for such a work, may not be long any more. And were it a thousand years yet, we should give heed to the command. May we all seriously meditate, and come to the conclusion that it is a work for all of us, and be willing to lend a helping hand.

Speaking Well of Others.

If the disposition to speak well of others were universally prevalent, the world would become a place of comparative bliss. The opposite disposition is the Pandora-box, which, when opened, fills every house and every neighborhood with pain and sorrow. How many enmities and heart-burnings flow from this source! How much happiness is interrupted and destroyed! Envy, jealousy, and the malignant spirit of evil, when they find vent by the lips, go forth on their mission like foul fiends, to blast the reputation and peace of others.

Every one has his imperfections; and in the conduct of the best there will be occasional faults. It is a good rule, however, when there is occasion for fault-finding, to do it privately to the erring one. This may prove salutary. It is a proof of interest in the individual which will generally be taken kindly, if the manner of doing it is not offensive. The common and unchristian rule, on the contrary, is to proclaim the faults of others to all around but themselves. This is wrong because there is no love in it, and one of the first of the great commandments is, that we should love one another, and only in proportion as we do love and seek to do good to our associates, shall we be rewarded with real enjoyment. Ah, I tell you, it is a hard and sad business, this looking up the faults and frailties of those by whom we are surrounded! Better by far had we all try to hunt up their virtues and good qualities, because we shall be most likely to find in every one some that will improve us in striving to imitate. Should you meet with a person in sorrow, give him a word of cheer; you are weaving links in affection's chain that will not end with life. And if we are tempted to speak evil of another, call it to mind as a kind of help in the way of duty.

What are other's faults to me,
I 've not a vulture bill,
To pick at every fault I see,
And spread it wider still.
It is enough for me to know
I 've follies of my own,
And on my heart the care bestow,
And let my friends alone.

Answer to Brother Ohmbert's Query.

Our brother desires an explanation of the 20th, 21st, & 22nd verses of the 4th chapter of Matt. The language of our Savior, in that part of the chapter which gives rise to the brother's query, was evidently spoken in reference to the destruction of Jerusalem. See 37 and 38 verses of 23 chapter and 1 and 2 verse of 24 chapter. From the 28 verse to the end of the chapter, he speaks relative to his second coming and the end of the world. The 20th verse reads, "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Brother Ohmbert wishes to know, "what flight? and where to? The 16th verse contains the desired answer: viz. From "Judea" or Jerusalem, "into the mountains."

By the Savior's language, his disciples, no doubt, well understood that they would be permitted to escape from the city, even when they already saw "the abomination of desolation stand in the holy place." And such was indeed the case. The abomination of desolation, by which is understood the Roman Army, under the command of Cestius Gallus first laid siege to Jerusalem. "But in a manner that surprised every one, when ye could have taken the city, turned about and fled; leaving the way open for those who believed in Jesus to "flee to the mountains." He was afterwards succeeded by Vaspasian, whose son Titus continued the siege until Jerusalem was finally destroyed. It was while Titus was besieging the city that there was "great tribulation." &c. The reader will find, in part, how great that tribulation was by reading the "Closing scene of the fall of Jerusalem," on page 673 of Companion, vol. 5. In addition to which, I will give an extract from Josephus, the Jewish historian; relating chiefly to the great destruction of human life. He says Manneus told Titus that there had been "no fewer than a hundred and fifteen thousand eight hundred and eighty dead bodies carried out through the one gate, which was entrusted to his care, in the interval between the 14th day of the month Xanthicus, and the 1st of the month Panemus: about 3 months and a half. Others told him also that "no fewer then six hundred thousand were thrown out at the gates, though still the number of the rest could not be discovered; and they told him further that when they were no longer able to carry out the dead bodies of the poor, they laid their corpses on heaps in very large houses and shut them up therein."

To give a description of the extreme suffering to which they were reduced by famine would be, indeed, wondrous and if those days should be long continued, "there should no flesh be saved;" all the inhabitants would inevitably have perished.

Mothers.

The mirror does not more truthfully reflect the features of the face, than does the child the moral lineaments of the mother. We know the character of the mother when we have learned that of the child who has grown up at her feet, and walked with her many days along the household paths. The mother's words, and smiles, and examples and manifold influences are absorbed by the heart of the child; and just as the tree drinks in the dews and raindrops and sunlight, giving them all forth again in bud and blossom and rich fruit again in after days, so does the child's manhood or womanhood yield back her influences with generous fruitfulness in the years to come

The Morning-Star.

By D. B. Mentzer.

In the natural order of creation, the morning-star is the harbinger of day. When the sun of nature looms over the orient hills, and takes its first peep over the waking world, the morning-star is invisible. But how bright, cheerful and beautiful is that star just before the dawn of day! How it stands like a sure prophet, prophesying of the coming day! How significant its upward course! But this is Nature's morning-star.

There is another morning-star. It is the Morning-star of heaven. This is the Star of which the Revelator writes, Rev. 2: 28; and this is the Star of which your unworthy writer is writing. The Holy Scriptures, which are the Word of God, contain heaven, so to speak; or the prospectus of heaven. Yea, it is the gate of heaven to the soul. And as the morning-star of Nature is to our bodies, so is the Morning-star of heaven to our souls. (I write to Christians.) We were in the dark: we were so enveloped in the darkness of sin that there was not so much as a bright star to give us light. Our souls were shrouded in the darkness of condemning guilt. We turned and saw a Star in the East. O how our anxious souls hailed its rising. How bright was its appearing! How it cheered us! How joyful we feel as we view it rising higher and higher! How it makes us hope for the dawn of the full day when the glorious, eternal Son of Righteousness shall appear to us in the firmament of "the New Earth!" Come, O sacred day.

"I will give him the Morning-star." What a gracious promise! O my yoke-mates in Jesus, can you appreciate the grace and preciousness of this promise? Does it not become all the more so as you continue to contemplate it?

But what is meant by this morning-star? and to whom is the promise of it? If you do not know, they will become themes of deep consideration. But I trust you have received the Morning-star, for the promise is to the faithful believer. If you have Christ in you as your hope of glory, you have received the Morning-star. If you have ceased your baneful rebellion against God and his cause, and have consecrated your all to his service, and find it your meat and drink to do his will, your soul has the Morning-star. If you have received Christ as your all-sufficient Savior, and you love and obey him, you have that star. If you have the light of Christ and his pure word in you, you have the Morning-star—you have Christ, and his fadeless glories in prospect—heaven and its joys in hope.

But not only the living have this Morning-star. "The dead in Christ" have it. The Christian's mortal body may moulder back to original dust, but the soul continues to have its Morning-star. To the dead in the Lord this Star is the hope of resurrection unto life, but to the living it is "the hope of glory." And as the morning-star is the earnest of daylight, so ours is the earnest and immutable pledge of his eternal inheritance. If we have it our salvation is begun; yea, we are saved. Our joys are of a heavenly nature and differ only in degree. Our present joys are a fortaste of those over yonder, in the Land of Promise. But when this tabernacle falls, and our souls will be forever released from earth and it sorrows, then we will enjoy the full joys we anticipate. The Morning-star will then have brought on the full day of eternity. Suffering and service will then be exchanged for the joys of our Lord. O happy day!—The race will then be run. The prize which we held in view will then be won. The reward, which was certain and great, will then be received. And the foretaste of glories unrevealed will then be exchanged for the fruition of the great, and glorious promises of our Heavenly Father.

Christian pilgrim! Do you have trials? Keep the right, and meet your trials courageously.—You are engaged in a warfare. The war lasts long; and so terrible is it that it is not safe for you to lay your weapons down for an hour; yea for a moment. The enemy is incessantly on the alert to attack you. But fight on. Though you should grow weary, give not ground, but think of the day about to dawn,—think of what that bright morning-star foretells. Bear up, and be not discouraged nor weary. There is a rest reserved for you. A reward awaits your arrival at the door of glory. A crown, bright as the Morning-star, will be given you; and not to you only, but to all the faithful. You are now in the conflict, and in order that you may gain the victory, you must triumph. The wilderness of trial is on this side of Canaan, and you have spiritual battles to fight and spiritual enemies to overcome. But faint not; contend lawfully; bear up composedly; and press forward with boldness and courage. Home is near. Victory is sure. You are a soldier, and let the hope of triumph cheer you. Behold the Morning-star Let it cheer your soul, and let it attract you as did the Star of Bethlehem the wise men. May it guide and cheer in your journey of trial and conflict, and soon its glory will rest upon you.—It simply shows this world is not yours—not your home. It is not the christian's shelter. It is a place of discipline, trial and conflict. Dangers are on every side. Enemies are prowling or lurking around to deceive or destroy. The world, the flesh, and the devil are to be overcome, and to such as overcome is the promise.—They are away from home. Here is no perfect rest. We are strangers and pilgrims. Our exalted destiny and high calling should absorb our whole interest. But, how many forget! Many professed Christians live for the world and for time. Many are doing nothing for God! and seem scarcely in earnest for themselves! They do not enjoy religious converse. They are seldom seen in the house of worship. They seem never to have seen the Morning-star nor heard of it. O friends of Jesus, can we think of falling into such a state? May God forbid. Look around, and up! See the Morning-star rising in glory! How it sparkles, and spreads its rays far and wide! Up and up, it aspires, bringing on the dawn of day! Love and imitate Christ, and you will have it, your glorious hope. It is an emblem of your reward. You are born from above, therefore, let it wean you from earth.—You are a citizen of heaven. Crowns and thrones are yours. Can you love the world? and live for it? Be consistent. Ye who love the Morning-star, lift up your heads, for the day will shortly dawn. Array yourselves in the beautiful garments of righteousness, and make you ready for the early dawn. And ye who have not yet received the Star of the Morning, seek for it.—"Search the Scriptures," for in them you will find Him. "Blessed is he that readeth."

Regeneration.

Regeneration is that work of the Holy spirit by which the soul, previously dead in sin, is created anew in Christ unto righteousness. It is expressed in scripture by being "born from above," John 3: 3—7; becoming a "new creature," 2 Cor. 5: 17; being "quickened to a new life of holiness," Eph. 2: 1; having Christ formed in the heart, Gal. 4: 19; and being made partaker of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 1: 4; the sole author of this change is the Holy Spirit. John 1: 12. 13, 3, 4; Eph. 2: 8—10; and he effects it ordinarily by the instrumentality of gospel truth, 1 Cor. 4: 15; 1 Pet. 1: 23; in this change the moral image of God is brought back into the soul, and the principle of supreme love to him and unselfish love to our neighbors is implanted. Regeneration, producing faith, is accompanied by justification, and by actual holiness of life, or sanctification begun, and completed when the "babe in Christ" reaches in heaven "the fulness of the stature of the perfect man" in him. In Matt. 19: 28, regeneration means Christ's making all things new. In Titus 3: 5, "the washing of regeneration" denotes the purifying work of the Holy Spirit in the new birth. Psalm. 51: 10. Create in me a clean heart, O, God; and renew a right spirit within me. Ezekiel 11: 19, I will give them one heart, and a new spirit in you will I give, and will take away your stony heart and will give you a fleshy heart, in your bodies. 1 Cor. 3: 13. Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it; because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

Being born again; a great change in the heart of a sinner by the power of the Holy Spirit. It means that something is done in us, and for us which we cannot do for ourselves. It is a great change, or else such a term as "the new birth," or "a new creation," or "a resurrection," would not be proper. The greatness of this change consists in passing "from darkness to light;" yea, by "passing from death to life." "You hath, he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. God takes away the heart of stone, and gives a heart of flesh. But this is a change of the whole man. In the understanding there is light instead of darkness. In the affections, there is love instead of enmity. An inward change. It will indeed produce an outward change.

Reformation is not regeneration, though too often mistaken for it. We must be "renewed in the spirit of our mind." Eph. 4: 23. "Man looketh at the outward appearance; but God looketh on the heart." God has promised to give his people "a new heart." Without this there is no true change. "So a man may seem by one or two actions to be a changed man; but the inward spring being amiss, it is but a deceit."

Many people abstain from some sins, and perform duties for the sake of health, reputation or profit. The principle of a new creature is faith —faith working by love; and this abides. But having the Spirit of God within him, and the life of God in his soul, grace is as "a well of water, springing up into everlasting life." The glory of God is the end of the new man.

Nothing is a greater evidence of being born again, than to be taken off the old centre of self, and to aim at the glory of God in everything: whether we eat or drink, whether we are in private or public, whether we are engaged in religious or common affairs, to desire and aim sincerely at the glory of God; we are not our own, but bought with a price, we are to glorify God with our body, soul, and spirit, all of which are his. That the new birth is such a change namely; a universal change, and inward change, will plainly appear if we see the alteration it makes in a person's views and apprehensions. He has new thoughts of God, of himself, of the world, of eternity, of Jesus Christ, and of all divine ordinances.

Sinners to you is the call now. Do you think that outward reformation, or morality, or religious professions, are sufficient? All these are far short of this inward spiritual change. You must be born again, or you can never go to heaven. And can you bear the thought of living shut out? Put the question to yourself. "Can I dwell with everlasting burnings? Can I endure eternal darkness? Can I bear to be eternally separated from the blessed God?" O that you may be so deeply convinced of the immediate necessities of this change, that you may, ere you sleep this night, fall down on your knees before God, and earnestly desire him to make you a new creature. Ask without delay—today God will hear you.

And as for you, my brethren and sisters, who have experienced this blessed change, forget not to give the glory to God, and take the comfort to yourselves. Then heaven is yours. The righteousness of Christ is your title to it. Thank God for it, we are renewed for this very purpose that we should show forth his praise. God has made us to differ from the mass of man kind.—He has made us sons of God and heirs of glory —"heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." Oh let us be concerned to live and walk as renewed persons; so shall we prove the reality of the change; adorn the Gospel, edify our neighbor and glorify God.

"As a Little Child."

While gazing upon sleeping innocence I thought; what a beautiful subject is the spiritual life of a child, as Christ develops it, when he sets this little one forth and says, "Humble yourself like that!" And how it should incite us to nurture the spiritual natures of our children.

Oh, man, chafing with pride; tremulous with passion, too haughty to repent, too ignorant of your own welfare to stoop for a moment and bow down in penitent prayer.

Oh, man, running a wild career of passion, shame, and wrong, would that thou wouldst consent to be a little child; come back in lowly penitence and lie in the arms of the Almighty, Oh, in this trust, in this confidence are the springs of our relations with God; the relations that he is endeavoring to establish. And without this confidence there is no peace, no hope, no comfort, and no enjoyment. There is say-so religion: there is life-service, there is cant and pretense: and there are heavy burdens: but there is no real, heart-felt, spontaneous religion without full assurance and confidence in God's love. The holiest saint that prays to God, must be like the infant in its mother's arms. We must all come into its mother's arms. We must all come into the child-like condition. "For of such is the kingdom of heaven.

I beseech you now, that, instead of quarreling with God and with his word, you will presently receive it, and use it for your good. All you that are yet unconverted, take this as the undoubted truth of God: you must ere long be converted or condemned there is no other way but to turn, or die. When God, that cannot lie, hath told you this; when you hear it from the Maker and judge of the world, it is time for him that hath ears to hear. By this time you may see what you have to trust to.—You are but dead and condemned men, except you will be converted. Should I tell you otherwise, I should deceive you with a lie, should I hide this from you, I should undo you, and be guilty of your blood. "When I say to the wicked man, O wicked man thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his ways that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand." you see then, though this be a rough and unwelcome doctrine, it is such as we must teach, and you must hear. It is easier to hear of hell then feel it. If your necessities did not require it, we would not gall your tender ears with truths that seem so harsh and grievous. Hell would not be so full, if people were but willing to know their case, and to hear and think of it. The reason why so few escape it, is because they strive not to enter in at the strait gate of conversion and go the narrow way of holiness, while they have time; and they strive not because they are not awakened to a lively feeling of the danger they are in; and they are not awakened because they are both to hear or think of it: and that is partly through foolish tenderness and carnal self-love, and partly because they do not well believe the word that threateneth it. If you will not thoroughly believe this truth, methinks the weight of it should force you to remember it, and it should follow you, and give you no rest till you are converted. If you had but once heard this word by the voice of an angel, "Thou must be converted, or condemned; turn, or die;" would it not stick in your mind, and haunt you night and day? so that in your sinning you would remember it, as if the voice were still in your ears, "turn or die;" O happy were your soul if it might thus work with you and never be forgotten, or let you alone till it have driven home your heart to God. But if you will cast it out by forgetfulness or unbelief, how can it work to your conversion and salvation? But take this with you to your sorrow, though you may put this out of your mind, you cannot put it out of the Bible, but there it will stand as a sealed truth, which you shall experimentally know forever, that there is no other way but "turn or die," O what is the matter then that the hearts of sinners are not pierced with such a weighty truth: A man would think now, that every unconverted soul that hears these words should be prick to the heart, and think with himself, This is my own case, and never be quiet till he found himself converted. Believe it, this drowsy careless temper will not last long. Conversion and condemnation are both of them awakening things, and one of them will make you ere long. I can foretell it as truly as if I saw it with my eyes, that either grace or hell shortly bring these matters to the quick, and make you say "What have I done? What a foolish, wicked course have I taken?" The scorning and the stupid state of sinners will last but a little while; as soon as they either turn or die, the presumptuous dream will be at an end, and then their wits and feelings will return.

But I foresee there are two things that are likely to harden the unconverted, and make me lose all my labor, except they can be taken out of the way; and that is the misunderstanding on those two words, the wicked and turn. Some will think to themselves, it is true, the wicked must turn or die; but what is that to me, I am not wicked; though I am a sinner, all men are. Others will think, it is true that we must turn from our evil ways, but I am turned long ago; I hope this is not now to do. And thus while wicked men think they are not wicked, but are already converted, we lose all our labor in persuading them to turn. I shall therefore, before I go any further, tell you here who are meant by the wicked; and who they are that must turn or die; and also what is meant by turning, and who they are that are truly converted. And this I have purposely reserved for this place, preferring the method that fits my end. And here you may observe, that in the sense of the views a wicked man and a converted man are contraries. No man is a wicked man that is converted; and no man is a converted man that is wicked; so that to be a wicked man and to be an unconverted man, is all one; and therefore in opening one, we shall open both.

A Good Wife.

The following sentences from Arch-bishop Secker's "Wedding Ring" are worth reading twice:

"Hast thou a soft heart?—it is of God's breaking. Hast thou a sweet wife?—she is of God's making. The Hebrews have a saying, 'He is not a man that hath not a woman. Though man alone be good, yet it is not good that man should be alone. Every good and every perfect gift is from above.' A wife, though she be not a perfect gift, is a good gift, a beam darted from the Sun of mercy. How happy are those marriages where Christ is at the wedding! Let none but those who have found favor in God's eyes find favor in yours. Husbands should throw a mantle of charity over their wives' infirmities. Do not put out the candle because of the snuff. Husbands and wives should provoke one another to love; and they should love one another, notwithstanding provocations. The tree of love should grow up in the midst of the family, as the tree of life grew in the garden of Eden. Good servants are a great blessing; good children a greater blessing; but a good wife is the greatest blessing: and such a help as him seek for that lacks one; let him sigh for that hath lost one; let him delight in that enjoys one."

Mercy.

Mercy is goodness in tears. Goodness is kind to the great; mercy is kind to the bad. Goodness extendeth a helping hand to him that can already walk; mercy to him that is prostrate and cannot rise. Goodness makes good men out of nothing; mercy makes good men out of bad men. Goodness puts living men in a beautiful garden, and bids them dress it; mercy erects the cross, and bids dying men look and live. Goodness gives to the younger son the portion of goods that falleth to him; mercy sees the prodigal a great way off, and has compassion, and runs and falls on his neck and kisses him. He that makes light of goodness sins; he that makes light of mercy, is doubly damned.

"Straining at a Gnat."

Two noted Greek pirates were once captured and condemned to death at Malta. It was observed that the beef and anchovies among the stores of a captured English ship had alone remained untouched. They were asked the cause of this singular procedure, and replied that it was the time of the great fast of their church. They would not commit such a sin as tasting fish or flesh. They were plundering and murdering men, women, and helpless children, but they would not transgress the canons of their church by eating meat upon fast-day. They looked to their strict observance of these things as a merit for which God would grant them succes in their infamous work.

A man came down from the hills to a Neopolitan priest to confess a sin which lay heavy upon his conscience. In the busy season of Lent, while engaged in making cheese, some of the whey had fallen upon his lips, and, miserable man that he was, he had swallowed it.

"Free my distressed conscience," he besought, "from its agonies by absolving me from my guilt,"

"Have you no other sins to confess?" asked the priest.

"No, I do not know that I have committed any other."

"We often hear of robberies and murders committed in your mountains. Have you never been concerned in these?"

"Yes, but all of us do these things. We never account them as crimes needing confession and absolution."

We may smile at such a type of conscientiousness, but if we search strictly our own hearts, may we not find there some similar "straining at a gnat," which with our greater light, is far more inexcusable?" Are we not all tempted to think more of a strictly outward observance of our religious duties, than deep, inward, hourly communion with Jesus?—S. S. Times.

YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT

Who Will Tell.

Who among the many young readers of the Companion will first ascertain and report to the Editor, in what part of the Bible the following chapter is found.

ROSIE SNOWBERGR.

New Enterprise, Pa.

1. "And it came to pass after these things, that Abraham sat in the door of his tent, about the going down of the sun.

2. And behold a man, bowed with age, came from the way of the wilderness leaning on a staff.

3. And Abraham arose and met him, and said unto him. "Turn in, I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry all night, and thou shalt arise early on the morrow, and go on thy way."

4. But the man said "Nay, for I will abide under this tree."

5 And Abraham pressed him greatly, so he turned and they went into the tent, and Abraham baked unleavened bread, and they did eat.

6. And when Abraham saw that the man blessed not God, he said unto him, "Wherefore dost thou not worship the most high God, creator of heaven and earth?"

7. And the man answered and said, "I do not worship the God thou speakest of, neither do I call upon his name; for I have made to myself a God, which abideth always in mine house, and provideth me with all things."

8. And Abraham's zeal was kindled against the man, and he arose and fell upon him, and drove him forth with blows into the wilderness.

9 And at midnight God called unto Abraham, saying "Abraham where is the stranger?"

10 And Abraham answered and said, "Lord, he would not worship thee, neither would he call upon thy name: therefore have I driven him out from before my face into the wilderness."

11 And God said, "Have I borne with him these hundred ninety and eight years, and nourished him, and clothed him, notwithstanding his rebellion against me and couldest not thou, that art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night?"

12 And Abraham said, "Let not the anger of the Lord wax hot against his servants; lo! I have sinned; lo! I have sinned; forgive me I pray thee."

13 And Abraham arose, and went forth into the wilderness, and sought diligently for the man, and found him, and returned with him to the tent: and when he had entreated him kindly, he sent him away on the morrow with gifts.

14 And God spake again unto Abraham, saying, "For this thy sin shall thy seed be afflicted four hundred years in a strange land;

15. "But for thy repentance will I deliver them; and they shall come forth with power, and with gladness of heart, and with much substance."

Answers to Correspondents.

"A LITTLE SLOW." You are excusable for being slow, but, really, brother, the excuse was not sufficient, in our estimation. Let us look at it. If your reasons were lawful—or just—for you, they would have been for all. Now suppose all would have done as you did, where would we be to-day A paper that you admit you "love to read," and that is hailed with gladness by hundreds and thousands of readers, would have been left without a patron, just because it had the courage to stand up for the rights of its patrons, and defend itself against its opposers.

Again. Perhaps you are a minister—and for all we know, a bishop. You preach what you believe to be the truth. Very well. You preach from the words "The love of money is the root of all evil." You show the sin of covetousness. The "shoe fits" some among your congregation. They take it home, and they stay there. Next time you preach on Pride, and hit a few others, who also stay at home. Perhaps at another time you show up the sin of neglecting families, and each delinquent in turn refuses to give ear to any farther reproof. In this case, and in this way, would you be likely to effect a speedy reform? You say, "no"; and herein we agree. Just so it is with our paper. If, just so soon as we expose and oppose what we believe to be an evil, we are to be dropped by all who are directly or indirectly connected with it, or intimately related to those who are, then indeed we may expect to drift rapidly down the common current to corruption. We know it is not pleasant to be under the hammer of conviction; yet we have had to endure it, and will do so until the last spark of dross has been driven away.

We give you the welcoming hand, and hope we shall never part again. We all expect to go to heaven, and we ought to be fully reconciled here. If not, one or the other will be rejected. One thing we know, he that is right, he that is just, he that is righteous will be accepted. May we all labor to attain to that blessed end—"even unto holiness, withou twhich no one shall see the Lord."

JACOB BARE. William owed 80 cents on last year. That will leave 70 cents to be credited to you, and pay your paper to 6–32.

S. W. BOLLINGER. Can tell better when I read it. If good it will be acceptable.

S. A. WALKER. We overlooked D. S. Fisher, accidentally. Have sent him the back numbers.

D. N. YOTHERS. He will not think it too dear when he has read it awhile. You have taken the right plan. There are few who read the Companion that do not admire it.

S. T. BOSSERMAN. You need not send them back. Give them to some one to read, and they bring in others.

D. J. MYERS. Neither will you be without the Pious Youth for twice its cost when you become acquainted with it. Have sent you a package of specimens, and hope to hear substantially from you before a great while.

QUESTIONS. Questions that are desired to be answered by the editor should be so specified.

I. N. Crosswait. It was our fault: beg pardon. It will be all right now. Brother Jesse Crosswhite is booked for this year.

V. E. GARY. Half-price will do under the circumstances, though it can hardly be of much advantage to us. But if it does him good it will pay.

E. WILLIAMS. The "reminder" has been accepted and the errors corrected. You are not to blame

WM. H. BAILY. According to our book it would be $2 to Jan. 1, 1870, or $3.50 to the end of Volume 6.

CHRISTIAN GOOD. You are right. Have sent you the back Nos. and hope for forgiviness.

SUBJECT. Yes, sir; every article ought to have some point, purpose, or subject in it, sufficiently distinctive to be placed above it as a heading: even down to queries. The case now before us more directly refers to queries. These are frequently headed by "answer to brother or sister," &c We prefer that they should be headed by the subject or point they comprehend. They may then point to the querist, and the page on which the query is published &c If there be no definite subject let the heading be "On John 3: 11," or what it may be. And we prefer that the writer should select the heading for his articles. If he can find no subject or point in his own composition, how can it be expected that we shall find any? First decide what you will write upon; then what you will say. And when you have said what you know, then stop, without any excuse or apology. And if you have anything to say to the editor, write it on a separate paper, and not on the back of your communication. This is a very reckless habit. Write every item on a separate slip of paper.

WM. SADLER. But you sent Nine names, did you not?

BENJ. BENSHOOF. We are out of the 25 cent Revised New Testament. Will be on soon. The Youth has been sent.

The above have been shoved out for several weeks. The books have now been sent, and we have a supply of the books remaining, subject to order.

FISHES IN THE ARK.

"Did Noah take fishes into the Ark? This has been a subject of discussion among us.—Please answer."

We think he did not, for the following reasons:

1. Because they are not mentioned in the records of that event. We are told that God said: "I will destroy both man and beast, and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air" Fishes not mentioned. Noah was told to take into the Ark with him, "two of every sort," "of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, of every creeping thing of the earth after his kind." No fishes mentioned. We are told there went into the Ark with Noah, besides his family, "every beast after his kind, and all the cattle after their kind, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind, and every fowl after his kind, every bird of every sort." No fishes. Of the effects of the flood we are told that "all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died." Fishes were not injured.

II. From the nature of the case. 1. The waters received no part of the curse, hence the inhabitants thereof were not required to suffer. 2. The destructive element was the source of their existence. 3. The Ark could not have contained them, as the great Leviathan alone would have filled it.

SPILLED. We do not admire, and never use the word spilt in reference to the blood of the Savior. Spilt embraces the idea of being wasted or destroyed, which cannot be said of the blood of redemption. We prefer 'shed,' but avoid both, unless actually required.

Little Things.

Minutes are but a very short space of time, and yet they help to make up the hours, days, and months. It takes but a very short time to read a letter, if it is short and plainly written. It takes but a short time to find a subscriber's name on our books when we know who we are to look for, and what his address is. It takes but a short time to find an extra number of Companion, containing a certain article when we know in what Number and Volume it was published. And then it costs us only two cents to send that number. That is not much. But a dozen make nearly twenty-five cents, and four times that amount makes a dollar. We delight in accommodating our friends, and will do it even at a sacrifice; but we will give them an opportunity at least to spare us the sacrifice. We have the facilities for affording much information to our patrons, besides that which belongs directly to our business, and are willing, even desirous of imparting anything that may be of advantage to any of our fellow creatures, but there is a possibility of overdoing a good thing. It will be seen that if these little favors amount to so much as to demand extra assistance in our office, that they will no longer be small things to us. To meet this demand we propose simply that our friends contribute a trifle for each item they require. If you want a brother's or sister's address, send us the postage for return letter by all means. And a few pennies for our trouble, while they would be but a very insignificant amount—and perhaps will appear to some almost too trifling to mention—to those who give, they would amount to a substantial item in a year. "Little and often fills the purse." This applies only to extras. We ask nothing for correcting our own errors, or accidents.

Brother P. R. Mertz, El Paso, Ills., wishes to know whether there are any Brethren in the southern part of Missouri, or northern counties of Arkansas.

Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book.

Our proposition to publish the above work is meeting with almost universal approbation. In regard to the various inquiries concerning it, by the different correspondents, in this week's paper, and others, we will say, that any selection from any of the popular Sacred Music Books, need not be copied. Give the name of the Book, the name of the tune, and the page on which it stands, and the No. of the hymn in the Brethren's Hymn Book with which it is desired to be placed. We have the Christian Minstrel, Harmonia Ecclesia, Juvenile Minstrel, and several more of J. B. Aikin's works, and our musical editor, brother Benjamin Funk, of Virginia, no doubt has many more.

We shall give, generally, three parts to a tune.

We expect to adopt the characters used in the Christian Harp and Song Crowned King.

The characters used in J. B. Aikin's works are patented—that is the three new characters, viz: Doe, Ray, See, and cannot be used by any other than the proprietor, Mr. T. K. Collins of Philadelphia. But pieces may be copied for us after his system, or in the Round Note system, if the Key Note be distinctly named.

We learn through brother Silas Thomas that a number of our brethren's children in Philadelphia are afflicted with Scarlet Fever and some of them quite severely, though no deaths have yet occurred.

THE MANUFACTURER AND BUILDER, for February, contains a history of the draining of the Haarlem Lake, and a description of the wonderful engines and pumps by which the work is accomplished. Also a description of the great East River Suspension Bridge, between New York and Brooklyn, now in course of construction. Also other valuable information, all for 15 cents. $1.50 per annum. Address Western & Co., 37 Park Row, New York.

THE ILLUSTRATED BEE JOURNAL. N. C. Mitchel Publisher, Lock Box 137, Indianopolis, Ind; 2$ per Annum. It is full of instructions in the art it labors to advance. Bee keepers should have it if they wish to keep pace with their profession.

CORRESPONDENCE

FALLS CITY, Neb.
January 31st. 1870.

Brother Henry; After considering a long time, and feeling a desire to have some information from the Brethren, I thought I would communicate a few words to the Companion; perhaps some kind brother would then take up the subject and give light to me, and perhaps to some more of my brethren. When I read the word of God I find that it teaches all men to manifest the same spirit that was in Christ, and that if we have not that spirit we are none of his. What spirit did he manifest? If I understand the spirit of Jesus it was like this: He always felt to do good where it was needed; deprived himself of all the enjoyments which he could have enjoyed; came down from heaven; laid aside all his glory to teach us how we must do if we would be saved. He compared his church to his body. Here comes up the dark picture to me. Brethren are permitted to take mortgage on property which belong to members of that same body, and when that poor brother becomes hard pressed they will take or sell by the power of the law all the property that this poor brother and sister hath to rely on, for the support of their family. Is it natural for us to harm any member of our own body? I think not. And much less would the Spirit of Jesus harm any member in his body. What is the Spirit of Jesus? Let us hear him: Suffer with them that suffer; weep with them that weep; mourn with them that mourn." How can I unless I partake of their affliction? If we are permitted to take by law from our dear brother, that little he hath, much more can we use the law in every other point, when we have to do with the world. This is the point I would like some of my dear Brethren to write upon. I can assure you that I write this in love, and feel a sincere desire that some one will clear up the subject to me; not that I have suffered any such thing, but my heart has felt for some of my brethren and sisters.

P. MEYER.

Brother Henry; We are unknown to each other in the flesh, yet through the spirit, as christians, we do know one another, for as Christ said to the Apostles (John 14: 7.) if ye had known me ye should have known my Father also. I think that brethren bear a spiritual relation to each other nearly as the Father and the Son. As to our welfare, we can say we have a strong zeal for God's work, love the Brotherhood and all mankind, and are still desirous of growing in grace and a knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. We moved from Shelby Co. Ohio, in the fall of 1864; have been to hear the Brethren preach once in the last five years. There are none of the Brethren near us, (to our knowledge). Myself and wife are all the "Dunkards" (as they term it) living in this part of the state. We can sympathize with brother J. T. Lewis, for our lot is cast about the same as his. We have been thinking of writing to brother Michael Forney, or brother Ira Calvert to see if they would not come and preach here a few times. The people here are anxious to hear the Brethren; but as the Apostle says in Rom 10: 14, 45, "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Perhaps this may fall under the notice of some that can and will visit us. I tell you sincerely, I fear there are many here starving for the sincere milk of the word. I am a faithful reader of the Companion, but dare not give it the praise due it, on account I think it causes unbelievers to be prejudiced when they read articles of this kind. And now as I do not wish to criticize or rebuke any one, I will merely tell what I like, and hint at what I do not.

I like to read short articles filled with the spirit of God, and backed up well with the scriptures of divine truth; and not too many big overflowing words, so that the unlearned can understand. The Apostle Paul said he would preach with the understanding also.

I have been watching to see the names of some of the brethren with whom I am personally acquainted, but have failed to see any yet. Could I urge them to write through the Companion? Would love to read their articles.

And now as to the Brethren's Tune Book spoken of on page 59, present volume. I am strongly in favor of it. Have sung a great deal in the Christian Minstrel, and think there are a great many good tunes in it. Could send them, or if you have a book will cite you to some few favorites. I suppose you will aim to insert two parts of each tune. Fearing I may worry your patience I subscribe myself your brother in bonds of love.

JOHN E. MEGIE.

Princeton, Ind.

Brother Henry: We are much pleased to hear of the Tune Book, and as you wish some suggestions, we will offer a few: We would recommend instead of the seven character the numeral system of writing music, as combining all the advantages of both the round note and the patent, or seven character system, and much more simple than either; and the music can be written on less than half the space. We have a western teacher here who has studied over twenty different systems, and he pronounced this the best. If you have not finally decided we will send you some specimens, written in the numeral system for publication and inspection by the Brotherhood. We may also send you some favorite tunes for the book.

JESSE ROOP.

We shall be pleased to receive the specimens, and will endeavor to lay them before our readers. But for the Tune and Hymn Book we shall most likely use the seven character notes, as they are already more generally in use in the Brotherhood. We hope also you will send us all your favorite tunes. See remarks to brother M. T. Baer, elsewhere in to-day's paper.

Brother Henry: Since I read brother P. J. Brown's remarks on "where is Paradise," I feel like asking an explanation of John 10: 16. Who were the sheep that were not of this fold? And where did he bring them from? Was it from the Gentiles? Or were they in the prison where he preached unto the Spirits in prison?

I think there can be no harm in giving our views on scripture. In that way we can all learn.

JOHN BAUSMAN.

Greason, Pa.

Brother Holsinger: I have been a reader of the Companion for three years, and O, how edifying it was to me. But I feel myself unable to pay for it at present, and so I must make my way heavenward without it. I have no meeting to go to. It is twenty-five miles to the nearest church. I have not seen a brother or sister since I left Pennsylvania—the Conemaugh congregation. How glad we are to hear from those we love; and how glad I would be to hear our brethren preach. I feel sorry to part with the Companion, but must be contented, until we can send for it. "For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding"; (Col. 1: 9) to let the truth be spread far and wide.

From your unworthy

SISTER.

Blissfield, Mich.

You must have the Companion, dear sister, by all means. We have sent you the back numbers, and entered your name for the year. And if you cannot conveniently pay for it—never mind it. Some time when we pay a visit to the Conemaugh branch we may mention the matter, and get our own "with usury." Continue to read and to pray, for yourself and the cause, ever looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."

Write to brother F. P. Lœhr, Bloomingdale, Michigan, or Jacob Berkey, Goshen, Indiana, or C. Wenger, or D. B. Sturgis, at South Bend, Indiana, who are not at a great distance from you, and persuade them to visit you.

And we, brethren, we to whom it is said "Preach the word;" and we, brethren and sisters, we who compose the Church of God, to whom it is said: "GO YE INTO ALL THE WORLD AND PREACH THE GOSPEL TO EVERY CREATURE," how do we feel, and how ought we to act after reading such calls as have been laid before our readers during the past three months? Brethren, do you not feel a missionary spirit? When you meditate upon the charge committed to you—"be instant in season, out of season"—does not a still-small voice say to you, "go." And when you hear the earnest bleatings of the lambs of God's flock, whom the wolf of adversity has driven into the waste places of the earth, accompanied by the repeated admonition of the chief of shepherds: "Feed my lambs," does not that voice repeat with increased emphasis, GO! GO!

Some of these scattered voices say to us: "send us a preacher," as though there were those to whom we could say "go and he goeth, or come and he cometh." If this were true none should be in want, for we would send such a host of "banner bearers" as would engirt the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and have the sound of the Gospel of peace to be heard from the Lakes even to the Gulf.

But because we cannot do great things, we must not despise "the day of small things." And as the spirit said unto us: "write," we have written, and we hope the churches will give heed what the spirit saith unto them.

Close Communion.

Brother Sharp says: "This is one of the greatest questions we have to deal with." We admit this to be the case, but perhaps if we had more of the love of God shed abroad in our hearts we would have a more ready answer to give to such questions. But having so much of the fear of man in us, we are afraid we might offend by telling the truth. "Perfect love casteth out fear." Paul would say, "For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." Romans 10: 2, 3. "Having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof, from such turn away." 2 Tim. 3: 5.

The reason I would give for close communion, is that other churches do not teach the whole truth of the Bible, and consequently we cannot meet the approbation of God by partaking of communion with them. We would by our act sanction their mode of worshipping. Brother Sharp asks:

Were all the apostles baptized when the supper was instituted? Now we find in no place on record that all the apostles were baptized at any time, yet I think it is universally believed that they were all baptized, whether before or after communion we know not. But we do know that Paul was ordered to be baptized before he partook of the Communion. All the baptisms we have on record were performed before partaking of the Communion. When Peter was sent to Cornelius the first he ordered him to do was to be baptized. When Philip met the eunuch he preached unto him Jesus, and baptized him. Jesus himself was baptized before he instituted the Communion. Now as we have no instance on record where Communion was taken before baptism, is it not reasonable to believe it ought to be done prior to Communion. According to scripture the only fit subject to partake of the Lord's broken body and drink his blood is the person who has obeyed his commands.

Now about being called narrow-minded, bigoted, uncharitable," &c., if we lead a truly consistent Christian life we may be sure we will have to suffer persecution. Paul was told "much learning hath made thee mad." The Brethren of the present day are accused of ignorance on account of their faith. Let us try to make our calling and election sure, for we know "if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him."

Notes of Travel.

PHILADELPHIA, February 7th 1870.

Left my home in Blair county on the 31st January, for the city of brotherly love. Stopped off at Tyrone city, and spent a good portion of the day with brother Holsinger in pleasant conversation, and he has my thanks for his instructions concerning the city. Took the train at 3 P. M. for McVeytown; arrived there about dark and put up with brother George Hanawalt who lives near the station. Was conveyed to the Spring Run meeting-house where we had a meeting in the evening; good order and interest manifested. Lodged with brother Peter S. Myers.

Thence to the station ; dined with brother and sister Sheerer. Had an evening meeting in the school-house. Was assisted by brother George and Elder Joseph Hanawalt, with whom we spent a pleasant time when in the valley. All night with brother William Sheerer. In the morning visited sister Margaret Replogle's family, who has my sympathy in her troubles. Hope the Lord will give her strength for her trials.—Took the train for Lancaster city and arrived there in the afternoon. Put up with brother Jacob Reinhold. Here we had the pleasure of meeting brother Graybill Myers. After sharing the hospitality of brother Reinhold, went to meeting in the city at the house of brother Jacob Zook. Had a refreshing little meeting.—Brother Myers did most of the preaching at this meeting ; felt glad to hear him once more, as we did in former days. Lodged for the night with brother Zook. Next day the 4th, started in company with brother Myers from Lancaster city to this city. Was met at the depot by brother Custer who was so kind as to pay our way through on the street cars to brother Jacob Spanogle's home. Took supper with brother Spanogle. He then took us on the street cars to Crown street meeting-house. Brother Myers informed me that it was expected of me to preach and I tried to be obedient, and had an attentive meeting. Lodged with brother J. S. Thomas, on Green street No. 1102. In the morning had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of his family sister Sudie M. Thomas with whom many of the readers of the Companion and Pious Youth are acquainted, and little Iva their little daughter whose loving voice enlivens the house.—Saturday went with brother J. S. T. to his place of business and made other visits. Sunday morning went with brother Thomas to Crown street to the Brethren's Sunday School. We were solicited to talk to the children. We enjoyed the school much. After school, meeting at half past ten o'clock. Here we had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of our senior brother John Fox. It fell to our lot to preach again, although two elder brethren by my side elder Fox and Spanogle. Had a very good meeting. Home with brother Spanogle. Spent the afternoon in walking around as brother Jacob thought I ought to see the dark side as well as the bright. We visited the Bedford Mission, and we think the gentlemen who have the care of this institution deserve credit. They are engaged in a good work and we hope they may be the means of doing much good. In the evening had an evening meeting on Crown street, assisted by elder Spanogle. Home with brother Silas Thomas, and was cared for during the night. Am now at the business place of J. Spanogle. Will start for Germantown in a few hours.

More anon.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Brother Holsinger : I subscribed for the Christian Companion through brother N. Mercel I received my first No and can say that we are all pleased with it. It brings to us good news and glad tidings of joy to all true believers. Many thanks to our valued friend and brother for the renewed proof of his attachment to the Companion, and his undiminished satisfaction with it as the religious paper of his first love. May he long live to do his Master's will, to add to the Church strength by his influence in the Gospel of Christ May the Lord bless his labors. I am living about 8 miles from any church of the Brethren, and no members any nearer. I came here September last. I am alone; although four different fashionable churches have been built here, and preaching every Sabbath, but I cannot tell the members of the Church from those of the world, for pride seems to be the leading theme. Let us be in earnest. Pray for me.

"Heaven is earnest ; solemnly
Float its voices down to thee.
Oh thou mortal art thou gay !
Sporting through thine earthly day.

God is earnest ; kneel and pray
Ere thy season pass away ;
Ere he set his judgment throne -
Vengeance ready, mercy gone.

Christ is earnest ; bids thee come ;
Paid thy spirits priceless sum.
Will thou spurn thy Savior's love
Pleading with thee from above

Yours in love

ISAAC H. THARP.

Brother Holsinger ; I see in Companion No. 4. that you propose to publish a hymn and tune book for the benefit of the brethren. Now I heartily rejoice that you have proposed to engage in so important a work. It is a matter that I have thought much about ever since we have had our new hymn book. But how to introduce the matter I have been at a loss, knowing the great precaution of Brethren against anything new, for which I also much respect the brethren, for I know that we are naturally inclined to drift into the fancies and notions of a wicked world. I had thought sometime ago that I would mention the matter of such a book to some of our principal singers, and if they thought best we would bring it before our District Council, and if they would approve of it let it go before the Annual Council, and if they would favor the project let them select a committee of brethren who are well posted in music, and well acquainted with the music books in general circulation, and let them make a selection of a suitable tune for every hymn in our book, with a variety of tunes for the most common hymns. Now, brother Henry, I have onlytold you what I had been thinking about, to let you know that others as well as yourself have seen the necessity of such a book. But as you have started the ball I will promise to lend my feeble hand to keep it in motion until the work is accomplished, hoping that no brother or sister will be so ungenerous as to frown upon or oppose so noble a work. Much might be said on this subject but I forbare saying any thing more at present. Hoping that you may be able to get up a book that will meet the general approval of the Brotherhood.

Now for a few questions. What system of notation do you propose to adopt ? I shall want to send you a few tunes, and if I will have to copy them it will be necessary to do it in the way that it will be printed in order to save you labor. I would suggest J. B. Aikin's system, as the easiest that I am acquainted with. I think it would be well, if it is not to much trouble if you could set your type and print a part of a tune, and send it out with the Companion so that we could see the shape of notes and the system then we that copy tunes out of other books could copy them by the system you want. Another question: What books have you access to? If you have such as I have it will only be necessary for me to cite you to such tunes as I would recommend. Lest I become tedious with my questions, I will close wishing you God's blessing.

M. T. Baer.

For remarks upon the above subject see editorial department.

A Word to our Teachers.

When you are asked a question, why are you so dilatory about answering the same? These queries are undoubtedly put to the ministry; and I am confident, they, for the most part, originate from motives unquestionably pure. I think it your duty more than your privilege to expound the scriptures to those who seek after the riches of God's word and the mystery of godliness. Were I to ask a civil question of my fellow-man, and he manifest an indifference as to whether I were answered or not, would this not be a great mortification as will a disappointment to me? Perhaps one will excuse himself on this wise, and say were I to give my views on the query in question, others might cavil and criticise my exposition.

Another will turn aside from duty with the impression that others are more adequate to the task, and so all will file excuses and the matter is delayed until the greater portion of the interest is irredeemably lost. Brethren, you can, if you will, make the query column the most interesting and useful of any department of the Companion.

In conclusion, let me suggest a plan, which, I think, if properly carried out, will produce a happy reform.

Let as many as feel impressed with a revelation, make the same known to the editor immediately, who may, after comparing the many views, publish one or more, which, in his judgment comes nearest in accordance with the word. This method would, not only facilitate but greatly improve the present system. Brethren, think of these things, and if this don't compare with your notes, revise and improve it, until we have a system vastly better than the present.

D. A Lichty.

Editor Companion: In perusing your paper I notice you have commenced the publication of a paper for the young. Although the present one is beneficial to the minds of both old and young I think it commendable to yourself and the church you so nobly represent, to publish a paper for the young. I think I can speak for many of my friends who will be glad to encourage you in the work, your humble writer included. The Companion is hailed with welcome in our household. Its pages contain valuable instructions. So we hope to see the Pious Youth laden with valuable information and thoughts from the minds of the intelligent sons and daughters of the church. Our needful knowledge, like our needful food, unhedged, lies open in life's common field, and bids all welcome to the vital feast. Hence the church and its followers may be encouraged in the good work of saving souls and promoting education and virtuous elevation to the minds of the young.—The mind that would be happy must be great; great in its wishes, great in its surveys.

Mollie E. Sullivan.

Brother Henry: I am fully aware that the Brethren in general are against introducing new things into the church. They look upon them as innovations, and, I would not be understood as being favorable to innovations, or to the introduction of new things among the Brethren, especially such as are not in accordance with the spirit of Christ; they generally protest against changes, and there can be no better criterion for us than the example of Christ, because if we wish to become like him in the world to come, we must try to be like him, or in other words, we must follow his example in this world already. But, by all this opposition to innovations, dogmas, and whatever is obnoxious to the word of God and the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ; the latest, and the newest that has yet gained ground among the Brethren, is to publish a brother's private character and give a general outline of his qualities and imperfections by describing his temperament, and general disposition—this I say, is the latest, the newest and the most objectionable feature that has yet come under my observation. I have reference to an article in the Gospel Visitor over the signature of R. H. Miller. What an example for an Elder! If he had wished to justify the course of the Standing Committee, he could have done so, and not assail a brother's character Oh! what a pity that meekness is so fast losing ground among the Brethren. Was it the common people, or was it the priests and rulers of the people that brought desolation upon the children of Israel, and provoked the Lord to anger? Judge ye what I say.

Information Wanted.

Information is desired of a brother in Canada, by the name of Seider. A share of the estate of Sarah and Magdalene Seider is due him, and it is believed he is in need of it. I think a brother who wrote in the Companion, of his travels in Canada, over a year ago, met brother Seider, but I have lost that paper. Any information that may lead to his discovery will be thankfully received.

Brother Holsinger; Why is it that we dont get to hear anything about New York State and City? Why is it that the Brethren don't go there to preach? They all appear to go West and South. I don't remember that I have read anything in the Companion about New York City. Are there no brethren living there?

Catharine Longenecker.

Why is it?

Some brethren in giving obituary notices, only give the name of the congregation, and not of the county and state. We would like to know where those churches are. Please give us the full residence.

The District Meeting for Missouri will be held (the Lord willing) in the Walnut Creek congregation, Johnson county, on the 13th and 14th of May, 1870. A general invitation is hereby extended to the brethren and sisters to be with us at that time, and especially do we crave the presence of the laboring brethren, not only from Mo., but also from other States. Those coming by R. R. will stop off at Centre View, where they will meet with conveyances to the residence of the brethren. They will please give the time of their arrival, if they wish to reach this point before the time of the meeting. By order of the Church.

Address A. Hutchison, Centre View, Johnson Co., Mo.

Queries.

An answer desired on the passage of 1st Peter 3 : 20, arising from a communication of Brother P. J. Brown, (in first number present volume Companion) and others in reference to the thief on the cross, Paradise, and the Spirits in Prison.

1st. Did Christ in the spirit after his crucifixion preach to "those only" that lived and died disobedient while the ark was preparing ?

2nd. Were the disobedient of any other age of the world before Christ suffered, denied the advantages claimed to be given to the above class ? If so.

Why did those antediluvians that had all the advantages of Noah's preaching to them in the flesh, also have the advantages EXCLUSIVELY of Christ preaching to them in the spirit ?

If the above queries can be answered satisfactorily, we shall probably know more about Paradise.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near De Graff, Logan county, Ohio, sister REBECCA ROOF, daughter of brother John and sister Barbara Snyder, and wife of brother John Roof. Deceased aged 22 years, 6 months and 4 days. She leaves a kind husband, one child, and many friends, to mourn her loss ; but we hope their loss is her great gain. Funeral services by Elder Jos. Kauffman and J. L. Frantz, from Rev. 14 : 13, to a large and attentive congregation.

Visitor please copy.

At the residence of his father, on Beaver Creek, Md., on the 16th of November, 1869, JOSEPH H. HOLLENBERGER, son of brother John and sister Prissilla Hollenberger ; aged 26 years, and 16 days. It is hoped that this will fall into the hands of a dear brother somewhere in the west, and when he hears of the sudden death of his brother, will either write or return to his father's house. The deceased was followed by a large concourse of mourning relatives and sympathizing friends. Funeral improved by brother Leonard Emmert and ELDER A. COST.

In the Indian Creek congregation, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, sister ELIZABETH SIPE, consort of brother Peter Sipe, on the 24th of October, 1869, of Dropsy, which she bore with christian fortitude, and her desire was to depart and be with her Savior ; aged 75 years, 5 months, and 17 days. Funeral occasion improved by Elder Jacob M. Thomas and the writer, JOHN L. HOOK.

February 2nd, in the Snake Spring Valley branch, Bedford county, Pa., sister CATHARINE, wife of brother Jonathan HOOVER, aged 24 years and 17 days. She leaves a husband and three small children to mourn their loss. Disease, Consumption. Funeral occasion was improved by Elder J. W. Brumbaugh and H. Clapper, to a large concourse of people, from Rev. 14 : 13.

S. A. MOORE.

In Solomon's Creek congregation, Elkhart county, Ind., January 30th, brother JOHN HUBLER ; aged 29 years, 3 months, and 10 days. Funeral services, by his request, by brethren Daniel Shively and Jesse Calvert, to a large and attentive congregation, from 1 John 2 : 17.

Brother Hubler was especially and providentially arrested in the prime of life. The Lord saw fit not to bring upon him a slow, scorching fever, by which he might gently and gradually be brought upon his dying bed ; but in an instant he was made as helpless as a babe in its mother's arms. He was engaged in making saw-logs about 7 miles from home, and in falling a tree, a limb was thrown back by which he was struck, or rather crushed to the ground. He was taken up dreadfully mangled ; his back dislocated ; the spinal cord contracted, so that he had no use of, or feeling, in the lower part of his body ; his right leg broken ; besides internal and external bruises. For nearly two months he laid, able to move only his arms and head ; though his mind, after he recovered from the shock, was not in the least deranged. As soon as he became sensible of his condition, he sent for brother Shively. He was then living as many others outside of the fold of Christ, yet, as I have since learned, the coming summer was his set time to begin a life devoted to the cause of his Master. Brother Shively visited him frequently, and conversed with him on the subject of religion ; sang and prayed with him, and once after we had sung the 786th hymn, he said, "Daniel, that was a nice hymn." After laying a few weeks in this condition, he made application for baptism. His condition being so critical, some brethren doubted whether baptism could be administered, and some of our friends even declared that he "would not come out of the water alive." But he was baptized, and after his baptism he became refreshed in both soul and body. His home being now in order, he resigned himself to the will of God, and desired to go to his heavenly home. As he was nearing the verge of life he was asked, on one occasion, if he desired anything ; his reply was, "to get to heaven as soon as I can." We have every reason to believe he is now enjoying that rest for which he longed while here in the flesh. But while his spirit is now basking in the realms of glory, singing songs which angels cannot sing, his earthly kind and devoted companion is left to mourn her loss ; and what is most painful to us all, she is still without the fold of Christ. We hope and pray that she may become qualified to meet her husband beyond the cold and stormy billows of Jordan. And may the Lord bless her three little children, that they may live as Christ's, and finally be received by him in his kingdom.

Also, near Cassopolis, Mich., September 12th, 1869, brother Jacob Shelly ; aged 86 years, and 27 days. Funeral by brother Daniel Shively, from Rev. 14 : 13. Brother Shelly adorned his profession by a Godly walk and a chaste conversation. He left this world respected by all who knew him, and we are assured he is now resting from his labors. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

J. H. WORSTER.

February 5th, at the residence of her son, David Branstetter, residing several miles east of Tyrone, Pa., Mrs. ROSANNA BRANSTETLER ; aged 80 years, and 28 days. She was born and raised in Lebanon county, Pa., and her maiden name was Osby. She was buried in the family burying-ground, on the homestead, in the presence of many relatives and friends. She was the mother of a large and respectable family, who mostly reside in this vicinity, and had been a widow for a number of years. Occasion improved from 1 Cor. 15 : 16-23, by the Editor.

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the power that be, to give it the most unqualified praises and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

The Mother.

The pleasing memories of childhood, the long gone-by, days of our boyhood, a dear mother's love and prayers, the sweet voice of a dear little brother or sister long laid in the grave, in all their sweet and hallowed associations, come upon the heart in the hour of sin, as well as in a joyous time, like the passage of a pleasant dream, and cast a ray of their hallowed purity over them. How mighty, for good or evil, is the influence of a mother. During infancy, when the hours are passed in unavoidable seclusion, then it is that the affections and mental powers can be molded into any form, by maternal love; it is then that the bent is taken for weal or woe, which all after life can not alter. The father, let him hold a public station, or in a private capacity, sees but little of his children, and has hardly time to salute them with a hurried kiss of tenderness, before his avocations summon him again into the world, to engage in its engrossing pursuits. But the mother who chooses a domestic life, to whom her children are all the world, exercises over them their nascent powers and influences them proportioned to her own good sense; and it is not too much to say, that all the kindly sympathies and swelling affections of youth and mature man, can be traced to their rise when lying at a mother's feet, or listening to her kind yet awful rebuke. The confiding voice of childhood appeals to the mother in doubt, in ignorance, danger, or distress, she then feels by her child that she is invested with a divine attribute; and while it is nestling itself in her arms, she perhaps is thinking of the words of our dear Savior when he said: "for of such is the kingdom of heaven; and, if a christian mother, she searches with almost agonizing anxiety, for the best means of transferring the earth-bound devotion of her child to Him, who alone is worthy of worship. "A good boy generally makes a good man," said the mother of Gen Washington, "George was always a good boy." Here is one great secret of his greatness, he had a good mother who made him a good boy. Byron had a mother just the reverse of lady Washington: and the character of the mother was transferred to the son There is something indescribably lovely in a devoted pious mother, something that reminds us of those bright angelic spirits which surround the throne of God.' Then, if the excellency and love of a mother surpasses all other greatness, you, who are a son, ought with a full measure of gratitude, return her affection. You are bound to her by the strongest ties; treat her then with never-failing tenderness. Cause her to glory in her child. Disappoint not her hopes, nor plunge a sword into her bosom, do not break her heart, don't compel her to wish that God would hide her in the grave. Look to Jesus the pattern of every excellence, love your mother as he loved his mother; obey her, honor her, cherish, and protect her, as he obeyed his earthly parent. Finally, imprint on your mind the words of the wise man: "He that is obedient unto the Lord, will be a comfort to his mother." Thou wast born of her, how canst thou recompense her the things she has done for thee? Forget not, then, the sorrows of thy dear MOTHER.

"Unsound Doctrine."

Brother Holsinger; In reading the Companion Feb. 8th, I was much pleased with brother Joseph Hoover's article on "Unsound Doctrine." It is certainly very wicked and wrong, and I think displays brains of very poor calibre, for men who have set themselves apart from the world, to make a special study; to devote their lives to the investigation, the reading, studying, and the preaching of the scriptures to their fellow men, to put such fearful misconstructions on such important and essential passages as relate to baptism. John the Baptist, the forerunner of Jesus, preached in the wilderness of Judea, saying, "Repent ye, the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." "Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Matt. 3: 5, 6. If the baptism that John preached and practiced was necessary for the salvation of the soul then, it must be now; for we, as he did, live under the christian dispensation. Again we have the example of Philip baptizing the Eunuch, "And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch: and he baptized him." Acts 8: 26–40 Christ in his conversation with Nicodemus says, "Marvel not that I said unto thee ye must be born again. Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." John 3rd. This is the direct and positive assertion of the Son "whom the Father so loveth that he has given all things into his hand. And he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John 3rd

And those only who comply with these requirements have the promises of eternal life. Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Mark 8: 38. Other instances of baptism are given us in the Bible, but I will only mention one more which I think should satisfy any one who desires to hear and obey the word with an unprejudiced heart and mind, and that is the baptism of Jesus by John in the river Jordan. "And Jesus when he was baptized, went up, straightway, out of the water, and lo! the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him And lo! a voice from heaven saying, this is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased." Matt. 3rd I fear and tremble for the preacher of "Unsound Doctrine" when I read from Revelation 22nd chapter: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophesy, God shall take his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus."

Answer to Brother Neher's Criticism.

In an article from my pen, published on page 766, No. 50, the last Vol. of the Companion, the following passage occurs:—"The Savior never founded his parables upon fable, but always upon fact; hence the certain man who had two sons was not a myth, but the father of a family in real "life."

To this assertion the Brother takes exceptions, and expresses a wish (page 45 pres. Vol. Com.) that an explanation in accordance with this principle be given by me of the 30th verse of the 25th Chapter of Matthew: "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." He asks, Where, and what kind of a place, is outer darkness; and what is weeping and gnashing of teeth in "real life?" The answer, that will be given to this question, may not be satisfactory to the querist; but the opinion is ventured, that if he will candidly and prayerfully meditate upon this subject, that Spirit, who leads into all truth, will convince him, that the Son of God had no need, like novel writers, to draw upon his imagination for subjects for his parables. Jesus knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man. (John 2: 24 & 25). Having this infinite knowledge of fact, why should he resort to fiction? In consideration of the majesty and purity of his character, it borders on irreverence, even to suppose such a thing; and the only excuse for it is, that, we, being finite and fallible creatures, are naturally short sighted; and, hence, apt to attach failings and limits to a Being, who is absolutely holy in his character, and infinite in all his attributes.

The attempt will now be made to answer the Brother's query, "Where and what kind of a place is outer darkness?" But before proceeding, I must respectfully request him, and all who may take an interest in this matter, to read carefully the parable of the Talents; which commences with the 14th verse and runs through the entire remainder of this chapter, namely, the 25th of Matthew; so that they may decide intelligently upon the correctness of this reply. They will find that the narrative, upon which this parable is founded, extends from the 14th to the 30th verse inclusive; and that its spiritual application commences with the 31st verse and ends with the chapter. That part of the narrative, however, which concerns this response more particularly, is the sentence which this travelling earthly lord passed upon his unprofitable servant, as follows:—"His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I have not sowed, and gather where I have not strewed; thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming, I should have received mine own with usury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it to him which hath ten talents; for unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away, even that which he hath; and cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

It seems from the tenor of the above decree that this reckoning or settlement took place at night, and that the order to cast the slothful servant into outer darkness, or, as another translator renders it, "into the darkness outside," was given to the other servants present at the time. The conclusion therefore is, that the darkness into which this servant was cast, was the natural darkness of night; the same as that in which the foolish virgins were left after their lamps had gone out.

Bro. Neher also asks, "What is weeping and gnashing of teeth in "real life"? This expression is several times figuratively used in the New Testament to denote extreme anguish; and doubtless this angry lord employed it to convey both his wish and his conviction, that the servant whom he had thus ejected from his house, in the darkness of night, without a home, would be greatly distressed.

Weeping and mourning, no doubt the dear brother will admit, is a sad reality in the life and experience of every son and daughter of Adam. We may however rejoice, that the time will come, when "God sahll wipe away all tears from the eyes" of his people; after they have passed from the tribulations of earth to the joys of Heaven.

The conclusion is that Christ in the parable of the talents, likens the dread fiat of the Heavenly King, "Depart from me ye cursed," to the order given by this earthly lord, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness."

Bro. Neher "contends" that the history of the rich man and Lazarus is a parable, and not a real fact; otherwise the rich man was sent to his reward before the judgment." If this narrative is a parable to what did the Savior liken the condition of those two men after they had died? He does not say that the happy state of the one, and the unhappy condition of the other are a similitude of something else; but gives them as being in reality a description of the reward of the just and the punishment of the unjust: and as commencing immediately after the death of the body. Even admitting the narrative in question to be a parable, will not alter the case, for the existence of hell is a fact, and Christ represents the soul of the rich man as being there at the time of the burial of his body, which he would not have done, if there could be no such thing in reality. The inevitable inference therefore is, that the souls of the wicked endure the torments of hell between the time of their death and the judgment; just as criminals are imprisoned between condemnation and sentence; because it is the only suitable place for them. The words of the Redeemer elsewhere substantiate this view to a demonstration. He that believeth on the Son of God is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already, (John 3 : 18.) At the judgment then, there will be no trial—man's time of probation constitutes his trial—but sentence only will be passed; for, as a convicted culprit is placed in the dock of our courts to be sentenced, so the unjust have a place assigned them at the left hand of "the judge of quick and dead," to hear from him the award, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire"

There is a strong impression upon my mind that as the Son of God foreknew men would seek to pervert his Gospel (Gal 1: 7) upon this, as well as upon other subjects, to establish their own theories, he gave the history of the rich man and Lazarus upon the earth, and extended it into the spirit world; so that his people need not be misled, if they will but take him at his word, but know to a certainty the conditions of the souls of those who have passed from time to eternity. Scripture evidence is abundant and strong that there is no such thing as an intermediate state of dormancy for the soul; which is in fact an emanation from Deity, that can, from its very nature, no more sleep than it can cease to exist. The apostle Paul says: "We know that if our house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens." (2 Cor. 5 : 1) If God's people know this, even while in the tabernacle of clay, they will certainly realize, in full fruition, the joys of Heaven, when they leave their earthly abodes and are ushered into that "building of God, not made with hands." If the wicked, even in this life, have a foretaste of the tortures of condemnation—See Dr. Young's account of the death bed horrors of "Altamont," published in the English Reader—much more certainly will their souls know they are lost, when like that of the rich man, they are banished from the reconciled presence of God; suffering the torments of unquenchable fire.

This view of the state of the soul's of the dead is entirely consistent with the account the scriptures give of what will take place at the judgment day. Christ tells us that all the holy angels will then descend with him. This must include "the spirits of just men made perfect," (Heb. 12: 23), that innumerable throng which the Revelator saw before the throne of God; who had washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, (Rev. 7 : 14) for the prophet Zechariah foretold the coming of Christ to judgment thus: The Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee, (Zech. 14 : 5). The apostle Jude quotes from the prophecy of Enoch to the same point, as follows: Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints to execute judgment upon all. (Jude 14 & 15 verses. The above two passages relate to the souls of the just, which will be re-united to their bodies immediately after the latter have risen from the dead, and take their place at the right hand of the great Judge.

Let us now turn to the account of the resurrection of the dead and the final judgment, as given in the Apocalypse (20 chap. 11–15 ver.) In the 13th verse it is said, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. "Death delivered up the dead that were in it," denotes that all, however and wherever their dust is deposited, will arise; thus corroborating the words of the Lord Jesus: The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation, (John 5 : 28 & 29). "Hell delivered up the dead which were in it" signifies that all the souls of men which are spiritually dead, and, like that of the rich man, experiencing the horrors of that dread abode, shall be called to judgment; and being re-united to their risen bodies, placed on the left hand of the "Arbiter of all nations." Now it matters not, whether there shall be one day or a thousand years—for one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day—between the resurrection of the just and of the unjust, all will be there, and receive according to their works.

The conclusions of this article are predicated upon the fact of the immortality of the human soul, and its consequent unceasing and unsleeping capacity to enjoy unspeakable happiness in the presence of God; or, to suffer unutterable woe, banished from his reconciled countenance.

The Better Land.

There is a place of blessedness. No storms ever beat upon its shores: no famine or pestilence ever stalks around its cities; no tears are ever wept there; no disappointments crush the heart. You have friends and loved ones there. In the night visions, "when deep sleep falleth upon men," they are present with you in dreams. There is a ladder like that which Jacob saw at Luz reaching from heaven to earth; and they go to and fro upon it. They stand beside you in the night watches and utter the old words of love. Their voices have caught something of the music of heaven though they have not lost the old love tone. Their eyes glow with much of that light which bathes the heavenly world, but have not lost the melting tenderness of the former times. They shake celestial odors from their wings when they come in these dream visits, and for days leave all the air about you redolent of heaven. We wish they would come oftener and bring with them a chart that we could follow and find the land whither they are gone, and whither we are going.

Admonition to Well-Doing.

Dear Companion: As I have been solicited by a good many of my beloved brethren, if I could not come to them in the flesh, to preach to them; I could come in spirit; through the Companion. And now I come to you asking a small space on your pages to speak to them by way of admonition or advice. Then in the first place let us watch and pray continually against pride. If God has cast pride out of our hearts, let us keep it out; it is full as dangerous as evil desire; and we may slide back into it unawares: especially if we think there is no danger of it.—For it is pride, not only to ascribe anything we have to ourselves, but to think we have what we really have not. We ascribe all the knowledge we have to God; in this respect we are humble. But if we think we have more than we really have; or if we think we are so taught of God as no longer to need man's teaching, pride lieth near us. Let us not say to any who would advise or reprove us, "you are blind: you cannot teach us." Let us not say, this is your wisdom, your carnal reason; but let us calmly weigh the thing before God. Let us always remember much self-esteem does not imply much light. These do not go together,—where there is much light there is little self-esteem, and love will flow from breast to breast. The heart has more heat than the eye; yet it cannot see. God has wisely tempered the members of the body together, that none may say to another, "we have no need of thee." To imagine none can teach us, is a dangerous mistake, let us not give place to it, for it will lead us into a thousand other mistakes, and that irrecoverably. Let us regard and obey them that are over us in the Lord; and not think we know better than they; they know their place, and let us know our own place, always remembering, that charity beareth all things. The non-observance of these things has led some into many mistakes, and into the appearance of pride. O let us beware of the appearance of pride; let there be in us that lowly mind which was in Jesus, and let us be likewise clothed with humility, let it not only fill, but cover us all over; let modesty and self-diffidence appear in all our words and actions. Let all we speak and do, show that we are little, and base, and vile in our own eyes. As one instance in this, let us always be ready to own our faults.—If we have at any time thought, spoken, or acted wrong, let us not be backward to acknowledge it. Let us not think it will hurt the cause of God: but will further it. Let us therefore be open and frank when we are taxed with anything: and not seek either to evade or disguise it; but let it appear just as it is, and we will not hinder, but adorn the Gospel. Therefore let us not believe every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God. Let us try all things by the word of God, and then let us all bow down before it. We are in danger if we depart ever so little from the Gospel: or from the plain meaning of any text, taken in connection with the context, and so we are, if we despise, or lightly esteem reason, knowledge, or learning; every one, of which is an excellent gift of God and does serve a noble purpose. Let us beware of the sin of omission, and be zealous of good works. Let us not willingly omit our duty either of pity or mercy, and do all the good we possibly can to the bodies and souls of our fellow men; particularly, "thou shalt in any wise reprove thy neighbor and not suffer sin upon him." Let our whole behavior refute all the slanders that are brought against us. Let us be always employed; let us lose no shred of time; let us gather up the fragments, that none be lost; and whatever our hand findeth to do, do with our might. Let us be slow to speak, and not talk too much, neither long at a time. Few can converse profitably above an hour. Let us keep at the utmost distance from pious chit-chat, from religious gossipping. "Let us desire not anything but God, and our desire be nothing else, keep ourselves pure, so shall our eyes remain single, and our whole body shall be full of light. Let us have no desire of pleasing the eye, or the imagination, by anything grand, or new, or beautiful: no desire of money, of praise or esteem; we may have these desires but we need them not; we need them no more. O let us stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. Let us be a pattern to all, of denying ourselves, and taking up the cross daily; let the world see that we make no account of any pleasure which dose not bring us nearer to Christ; nor regard any pain which does; that we simply aim at pleasing God, whether by doing or suffering; let our language with regard to pleasure or pain, honor or dishonor, riches or poverty, be all alike to us, so I in our Lord may live and die!

And above all, let us beware of schism; of making a rent in the Church of Christ. That inward disunion, the members ceasing to have reciprocal love one for another is the very root of all contention, and every outward separation. Let us keep ourselves from everything tending thereto. Let us have no dividing spirit; let us shun whatever has the least aspect that way.—Let us not say I am of Paul, or of Apollos; the very thing which occasioned the schism at Corinth. Let us not saythis is my preacher; the best preacher among us, give me him and take all the rest. All this tends to breed or foment division, to disunite those whom God has joined together. Let us not run down any preacher, not exalt any one above the rest, lest we hurt both him and the cause of God. On the other hand, let us not bear hard upon any by reason of inaccuracy of expression; or for some mistakes. We must expect contradiction and opposition, together with crosses of various kinds. Let us remember the word of Paul; "to us it is given in the behalf of Christ, for his sake, as a fruit of his death and intercession for us, not only to believe, but also to suffer for his sake."

Let us be exemplary in all things: particularly in outward things, as in dress; let it be plain, modest apparel,not to, fine or costly, more than we are able to afford; in laying out of our money (avoiding every needless expense;) in deep, steady seriousness, and in the solidity and usefulness of all our conversation. So shall we be lights shining in a dark place: so shall we daily grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth as we grow older in days and in years.—The best helps to the growth in grace, are the ill-usage, the affronts, and the losses which befall us. We should receive them with all thankfulness, as preferable to all others, were it only on this account, that our will has no part therein. The readiest way to escape from our sufferings is, to be willing they should endure as long as God pleases. If we suffer persecution and affliction in a right manner, we attain a larger measure of conformity to Christ, by a due improvement of one of these occasions, than we could have done merely by imitating his mercy. One of the greatest evidences of God's love to us who love God is to send us afflictions, with grace to bear them. The readiest way which God takes to draw us to ourselves, is to afflict us in that we love most and with good reason; and to cause our affliction to arise from some good action done with a single eye: because nothing can more clearly show us the emptiness of what is most lovely and desirable in the world. True resignation consists in a through conformity to the whole will of God; who wills and does all (excepting sin) which comes to pass in the world. In order to this we have only to embrace all events; as his will. In the greatest afflictions which can befall us, either from heaven or earth, we should remain immovable, in peace, and submissive to God, by an inward, loving regard to God, uniting in one all the powers of our souls, we ought quietly to suffer whatever befalls us; to bear the defects of others and our own, to confess them to God in secret prayer, or with groans which cannot be uttered; but never to speak a sharp or peevish word, nor murmer or repine. Let us be willing, that God should treat us in the manner that pleases him. We are his lambs, and we ought to be ready to suffer, even to the death, without complaining. We must bear with those we cannot amend, and to be content with offering them to God. This is true resignation, and since Christ has borne our infirmities, we can well bear those of each other for Christ's sake. We must abandon all, and strip ourselves of all, in order to seek and follow Jesus, naked to Bethlehem where he was born; naked to the hall, where he was scourged; and naked to Calvary, where he died on the cross, is so great a mercy, that neither the thing, nor the knowledge of it is given to any, but through faith in Christ the Son of the living God.

There is no love of God without patience, and no patience without lowliness and sweetness of spirit. Humility alone unites patience with love, without which it is impossible to draw profit from suffering; or to avoid complaint, especially when we think we have given no occasion for what man makes us suffer. True humility is a kind of self-annihilation; and is the center of all virtues. We that have returned to God, must be attentive to everything which is said to us on the head of salvation, with a desire to profit thereby. God's command to pray without ceasing is founded on the necessity we have of his grace to preserve the life of God in our souls, which can no more subsist without it than the body can without air. Prayer continues in the desires of our hearts. Our souls filled with love, the desire to please God is our continual prayer. We ought to be in the Church as the saints are in heaven. Let us worship God with our whole hearts. Yours in the bonds of love.

Improvement of Time.

Time is the most precious thing in the world. So valuable it is that not a moment of it should be lost. Then how important it should be that we improve our time, while young, that we may be useful in life and happy in eternity.

Youth is the spring of life, and if we neglect to sow the seed of knowledge while young, our lives will be like a barren waste; nothing useful will grow in it, but brambles of vice and folly will grow where the plants of knowledge should be implanted. Then how important it is that we store our minds with useful knowledge. If we neglect this, our minds will be inactive; our reasoning powers limited, and if we are required to talk on a subject of importance we cannot do it, because we have nothing of importance to say.

We should seek religion while young, or we will not care for it when we get older, for it is natural that we care more for this world than for the world to come. If, just as youth shows its buds and blossoms, it should be snapped of by the hand of death, O, how important that it should be transplanted from earth to flourish forever at the foot of the tree of Life, and beside of the water of life in heaven. Our time in this world is short, when compared to that of eternity. Our object and great work in life should be for the enjoyment of a fast approaching eternity, for "all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass, the grass withereth and the flower thereof falleth away."

"How short and transient are our days,
The passing moments say:
We bud and bloom,
Drop to the tomb,
Time hurries us away,
It matters not how soon we die,
If but prepared we are,
In heaven to dwell
Where all is well
And live forever there."

SUSANNAH HESS.

The Bible.

The value of the Bible, that Book of books, cannot be comprehended. Its worth remains untold. He who undervalues the Bible, and sets at naught its holy teachings is only exposing his ignorance, as respects his Creator. Man did not create himself. But there is a first cause in the creation of man. The heavens and the earth, and all creation can be traced back to no one but God himself; and we wish to know how it can be done without the aid of the Bible.

He who disbelieves the Bible has no knowledge of the character of God, and knows nothing about the future condition of mankind. He is a very ignorant being, and if he knows any more than the barbarian does, who has never heard of a Bible, it is only because he has been bred among a civilized people where the gospel is proclaimed, and hence the knowledge which perhaps he may have more than the heathen, he obtained, either directly or indirectly, from the Bible, although he may apparently be ignorant of the fact. If he who sets at naught the truth of the sacred volumn would consider he might yet learn that he himself is a reliable witness in its favor. The truth of the Bible might be known from circumstantial evidence. Men may say it disagrees or contradicts itself, in various places, which cannot be consistently reconciled. But we contend that this is only for the want of a clear conception, and a better understanding of its teachings. That the Bible is what we claim it to be might be known from known facts.—Banish the Bible from our land and we shall soon be on a level with all those other nations who are strangers to the sacred volume. Heathenism will be the result. What is it that civilizes man, but the Bible? Indeed the laws of our land, to a certain extent, are based upon it, and it is just what we need to make of us good and peaceable citizens.

The Path of Virtue.

The path of virtue those who trace
Have got the robe of richest dress;
It sweetly calms the rugged way,
And leads us to eternal day.

'Tis solemn that so many choose,
The broad and beaten path, and loose
The endless happiness and rest,
Which is prepared for all the blest,

Here we have no continued stay,
How soon by death, are call'd away;
Our spirit then must take its flight,
To endless day, or gloomy night.

How solemn then must be that hour,
In which there is no earthly power,
Can inward peace and comfort give,
Like Christ who died, but now doth live.

'Tis true that hypocrites will say,
We too are on the narrow way;
Thus they go on to their own loss,
And bring reproach upon the Cross.

The mere professors. too, will claim,
We too, Oh Lord, professed thy name,
By which they hope, to enter in,
Unpardoned of their load of sin.

How will they feel in that great day,
When all things here have passed away;
Hear from the Judge, "I know you not,"
With me you have no share, nor lot,

Go now, and take up your abode,
With all that came on the broad road,
I gave you time, you left your way,
You shun'd the cross, did not obey,

How awful must that sentence be,
My God, that drives the soul from THEE.
And shuts it up in dark despair,
To dwell with all the wicked there.

Then let us walk the narrow way,
And keep the path, from day to day;
We then shall find a happy end,
And find in death a faithful friend.

By And By.

By and by; we say it softly,
Thinking of a tender hope,
Stirring always in our bosoms,
Where so many longings grope.

By and by; Oh love shall greet us
In a time that is to come,
And the fears that now defeat us,
Then shall all be stricken dumb.

By and by; The mournful sorrows
Clouding o'er our sky to-day,
Shall be gone in glad to-morrow—
Shall be banished quite away.

By and by. We say it gently,
Looking on our silent dead,
And we do not think of earth-life,
But of heaven's sweet life instead.

By and by; We look in yearning
Toward the harbor of the blest,
And we see the beacons burning
In the ports of perfect rest.

By and by, our ship shall anchor,
If the tide and wind run fair,
Some day in the port of heaven,
Where our lost and loved ones are.

By and by; Oh say it softly,
Thinking not of earth and care,
But the by and by of heaven,
Waiting for us over there.

Incentive to Holiness.

Selected for brother J. S. FLORY
By D. M. HOLSINGER.

How blest the righteous are!
When they resign their breath;
No wonder Balaam wished to share
In such a happy death.

"O! let me die" said he,
"The death the righteous do,
When life is ended let me be Found with the faithful few."

The force of truth how great!
When enemies confess,
None but the righteous whom they hate
A solid hope possess.

But Balaam's wish was vain,
His heart was insincere:
He thirsted for unrighteous gain,
And sought a portion here.

He seemed the Lord to know,
And to offend is loth:
But Mammon proved his overthrow,
For none can serve them both.

May you, my friends and I,
Warning from hence receive;
If like the righteous we would die,
We righteously must live.

PROFESSED CHRISTIANS often get into a morbid state of mind about their personal salvation. The best cure yet offered for this disease is to transfer our solicitude from ourselves, and set bravely to work for the salvation of others. When we are incited to act for God, all fears of His love to us at once cease.—Anon.

I HAVE had occasion to observe that a warm, blundering man does more for the world than a frigid, wise man. One who gets into a habit of inquiring about proprieties, and expediencies, and occasions, often spends his whole life without doing anything to the purpose.—Cecil.

The above is a selection of our own We believe it every word, and have expressed the same sentiment often. In our "blunt" way of saying things we generally come at it in saying that a man who makes mistakes is a better man than he who does not. And we prove it by showing that he who commits no errors does no work. The man who never goes on water will not be likely to be shipwrecked. Give us the man who, when he believes he is right, will go ahead. "Nothing ventured nothing won."

Christian Family Companion

Brother J. S. Flory's notes arrived a little too late for this week. Our readers will be glad to know that he arrived home safely. He will be heard in our next.

We are now making our collection of matter for the March number of the Pious Youth. We are lacking original articles, but hope to receive several yet before we go to press. We had hoped that our brethren and sisters would feel so much interested in this good work that we would be crowded with essays. If you have any good thoughts we will be much obliged if you will drop them on paper in a readable shape and send them to this office for publication.

Tune Wanted.

We have heard a tune to the 658th hymn in the Brethren's Hymn Book, which we desire to have set to notes, with at least two parts. Who knows what we want, and where we can get it.?

Answers to Corespondents

JOSEPH STUCKEY. It was a mistake of ours. Have sent you all the back numbers, and you have now paid to 7—13. The address of the Visitor, on business, is Henry J. Kurtz, Dayton, Ohio.

GEO. COCANOWER. Ninety cents will pay your subscription from 6—21 to end of Volume six.

A. SUMMY. Can not visit you at that time, but will endeavor to do so on some other occasion.

GEO LONG. Death warrant of Jesus Christ was published on page 291, Volume 1, of the Companion.

A. H. SNOWBERGER. It was 16.25.

CAIN'S WIFE. There can be no discussion in regard to the history of Cain's wife. All is mere conjecture, and one man's speculations are as likely to be correct as another, therefore there is nothing to be gained by repeating their vagaries.

JACOB M. GARBER. Your subscription is paid to 6-30 which will be about the time you mention, August 8, 1870.

ELDER C. WENGER. A. Stover's paper is being sent regularly with the rest of the pack to South Bend. Have again sent him a package of back numbers.

Doty's Washing Machine.

It is a part of our contract with our patrons that we will not notice favorably an article which we do not know and cannot recommend. And we are strictly conscienscious upon this matter. And hence we are somewhat tardy in our notices.

We have received through Mr. R. C. Browning, the General Agent, No. 32, Courtlandt St. New York one of the above Machines with the "Universal Clothes Wringer," upon such conditions that obligate us to give publicly through our paper, the result of our experience in its use, whether favorably or otherwise. We have now used the machine a number of times, and have personally assisted and overseen the work, and believe it to be a means of saving much physical labor by a little more mental application. It is an improvement, which, in the saving of labor in the duties assigned to women, compares with the threshing machine in those belonging to the "sterner sex." When intelligently used and according to directions, they will do what they are represented to, namely: save much hard labor. Any one wishing employment in which he mas be useful to others, can safely engage in selling these machines. As to the Universal Wringer, we have had one in use for six years, and believe it would be a saving in any family to have them. They will pay for themselves in saving of clothing in a short time. For particulars see advertisement, which goes out with this paper.

Model Business Letter.

We love short business letters, and would gladly encourage any measure that would be likely to increase their number. Below we give one lately received as a model:

"Brother Henry; all right now; Companion on hands; numbers all read, looking for the next. Enclosed find six dollars for Companion for myself, &c"

Brother Holsinger; You will please find enclosed two dollars and twenty-five cents for one copy of the Companion and one of the Pious Youth for one year to be sent to the address of ——. He is a man with a large family in limited circumstances, and could hardly afford to get the paper, and I know him to be a fond reader, and there are few Brethren near him.

I was considering yesterday how I might do some good to some poor friend; so this person came first to my mind, and I hope by reading the paper he may be led to reflect and thank God that he has put into your heart to publish such a good sheet, which advocates the unadulterated word of God. I am not able to do much outside of my own family, but felt like making some poor soul glad; and the "Pious Youth" may also have a word to encourage his dear little ones."

We divest the above of everything that could identify the sender, knowing it to be his desire that it may not be known. In this action of our brother we observe a motive or principle, that to us looks very much like what we conceive to be Religion—pure and undefiled. "There's a divinity which shapes our ends." We are not "sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God." 2 Cor. 3: 5. "For it is God who works in you both to will and to perform of his good pleasure." Phil. 2: 13. If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Romans 8: 9. We are told to "try the spirits whether they are of God." Man acts from motives. These may be reason or impulse. Religiously we believe in the influence of the spirit of God. It operates upon the minds of men and women; not in the flesh "for in the flesh dwelleth no good thing." There is also an evil spirit or influence which operates upon the same faculty. Hence by the action of the mind, as shown by the doings of the man, we may know by which of these influences the mind of an individual is being controlled; as says the apostle: "For they that are after the flesh, do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit, the things of the spirit." With these scriptures before us, and the light of reason to enable us to draw from them, we think we may ascertain what spirit suggested this good act toward a fellow creature.

He was "considering how he might do some good to some poor friend." How like the spirit of Jesus, who ever sought to do good to the children of men. It is also in accordance with the injunctions to "seek out another's good," "do good and communicate," and with the general spirit of love to our fellow men. He is not able to do much outside of his own family, but such as he has he is willing to bestow. This spirit the Master approved of when he sanctioned and recommended the bestowal of the widow's mite.

Brethren, we may not be exactly orthodox in all theological dogmas—though we are pretty tenacious on plainly revealed Bible ordinances and institutions, but we have often thought—so often that if we are not mistaken we now believe it—that this spirit of Jesus, this spirit of doing good—real—substantial—tangible good, that may be seen, felt realized—and that will impel men to "glorify our Father who is in heaven," is, after all the fundamental principle in the religion of Jesus Christ. We have enough praying for the poor; there are words enough—what we need are deeds, actions, in the shape of pennies, dimes, dollars, barrels of flour, clothing, cattle, fields, Bibles, books—anything that is needed, and that can conduce to the good of our fellows and the honor of our God. We think there is much Christianity in such works.

They were the great burden in the teachings of the Author of Christianity.

If then, we conclude that such deeds are prompted by the spirit of Christ, we ought all to labor to "be of the same mind," and let this same spirit dwell in us. It must not needs be manifested in the same way. If a man needs bread, give him bread; if clothing, clothe him; but if he have the means of supplying those things, ana lacks food for the soul, as you value his soul and your own, administer to his wants promptly.

Brethren, we want that you should consider how you may do good. If you have an abundance of this world's goods, think—consider—how you may "make some poor soul glad." When you are seated around your bountifully supplied table, think of the many hundreds—yea thousands—in our land who would rejoice to receive the fragments that you are wasting, and consider how you may do them good. When you are enjoying the comforts of warm houses, clothing, and beds, remember the houseless, and destitute, and consider whether you can do them good. And lastly—though not least—when you enjoy your well stored library of books, or richly supplied tables of periodicals and papers devoted to useful literature, teaching of the goodness of God and the wonders of his works, with your children around you, all en gaged in the pursuit of knowledge, and pleased with the light of it—then consider the homes of the desolate, and think if you coulddo them goodby sharing of your abundance.

And above all—being of value immensely beyond all these—when you enjoy the soul-sustaining truths of the religion of Jesus—from the knowledge of his blessed word—and the hope of eternal life beyond the grave, then will you not think how you may do good to those who are yet in darkness, by sending to them the light of Divine Revelation. Think how you may do good.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger; The undersigned moved to this part of God's moral vineyard, the 3rd day of April 1868. Found 2 brothers and 4 sisters here; they were as lambs isolated from the flock. But they received us with much brotherly kindness. Elder Wm. Ealem and brother John Goodman came to us from Bond Co., Ill., and held two meetings and left two appointments for preaching. And also left us then to continue our appointments. In the fall the brethren from Bond county came to us and held a lovefeast. Our neighbors liked the order of the Brethren very well. Continued our meetings and outsiders called on us to preach, and it was not long until we had all the time taken up, and now we have meeting every Lord's day. And the Lord it appears has added his blessing and the church has prospered. We had a lovefeast last fall and also held an election, and the church called brother Andrew Neher and brother H. Hershbarger to the ministry, and brother Shanafelt to the viset. So now we have a fine and well organized church here, with 18 members, and the prospects are very good at this time. We have a good country here. We can raise wheat, corn, oats, potatoes, and fruit in abundance of all kinds. We invite brethren to stop here when they are coming from the east, on the O, and M R. R. Salem is the point. I live only one mile west of this point. The conveniences are very good for traveling. Brethren wishing to locate themselves in southern Ills., will find good oportunity in Marion co. Land can be bought low. We invite brethren to come and see for themselves.

Brother Henry; The ark is still moving onward. On the 27th of Jan. I left home for Marsh Creek congregation, to meet brother Daniel Deardorff, of Ill's, to assist him in filling some appointments in that church. Came to brother Richard Mummert's Meeting in the evening, in Rocky Grove school-house. Brother Deardorff failed to meet me, so I tried to interest the congregation as best I could. Next day, 28th, meeting in the evening at Two Taverns school-house. Brother Deardorff met me there, but was unwell. Lodged with brother John Trostle.

29th, visited old brother John Pfoutz and the old sister, both very frail in body, but strong in the faith, and full of love. Meeting in the evening at Marsh Creek meeting-house; lodged with brother Samuel Pfoutz. Next day, 30th, meeting same place. Evening meeting at Mount Union Chapel. A very full house, and good attention. Lodged with sister Tilly Bitler. Next morning (31st) took leave of brother and sister Deardorff, with a serious farewell. Arrived at home and found all well. "Thanked the Lord and took courage."

Brother Henry; The gospel ship is still moving slowly. The harvest truly is great and we have prayed, and the Master has sent us another laborer. The lot fell on our brother David O. Brumbaugh. May God be with him and enable him to declare unto us the whole counsel of God.—We have meeting three times a month Brother Jacob Snyder and Washington Wyland were with us on the 18th and 19th, had one meeting and attended to some church matters. We were made to rejoice and feel strengthened by their encouraging words.—May God bless them and their labors of love, and may others visit us and settle among us, as we are but few in number. Come on Brethren; here is room and a large field open. We have had to rise before people here that have not heard the gospel preached for 20 years, not so much as a prayer. May God help us to go and preach the gospel to every creature.

J. P. MOOMAW

Brother Henry; I am getting the Companion, and I find it a great help to the pilgrim on his way to Zion. I read of the ministering brethren's travels, which is very interesting. May God help them to declare the whole counsel of God, fearless of the face of man. May they have souls for their hire, and in the end eternal life is my prayer.

Biography of Brother Abraham Rothrock.

[See Obituary Department.]

Brother ABRAHAM ROTHROCK was born in Northumberland County, Pa., and when yet young in years his father, Elder JOSEPH ROTHROCK, moved with his family to Mifflin County, Pa., near Lewistown. Here deceased lived and labored through many vicissitudes of this life, went through the different stations in the ministry, and when, in the year of 1858, a decline in his temporal circumstances caused him to look for a new home, he bent his steps for a double purpose to the then new country of Kansas. Arriving here he found much to do, both in making a new home for his large family, as also to visit the scattered members who had preceded him, and settled in different parts remote from each other. But his love and regard for the welfare of others, and the duties devolving on him, as the first and only Elder in this remote and extended field of labor, he surmounted, and attended to all with a willing cheerfulness. He organized a Church here, but it extended, and included a circle in some directions from 70 to 80 miles from his home. To make these journeys required not a little interest in the cause of Christ, and no small sacrifice on his own part, yet he gave himself wholly to the work, and did all he could trusting to God that he alone could sustain him in the discharge of his duties, till more laborers would come into this extended field.

The drouth in the year 1860, and consequent want of the people, moved his compassion, and a desire to relieve those who he so often admonished to trust in God as the author of their existence and also their preserver, caused him to leave his family and flock in God's care, and go East among those in whom he had confidence, and so solicit their aid. This he also accomplished, to the doing of much good The christian liberality of the Brethren everywhere, was thereby proclaimed, and many thanks and praises tendered to the willing givers, and also to the Great Giver of every good and perfect gift.

Next again were his christian virtues more fully exhibited, when after his partial recovery from the shots he received by a wicked hand, for no other reason, that we can know, than that he was a preacher of the Gospel of Peace. (For the would-be assassin said that there was one less of such preachers, after he had shot him, and as he fell through the cellar door under the house now in flames.) He lay for many days unconscious, and as it seemed between life and death, upon reviving, and on being made acquainted how he got into this condition, his astonishment was only expressed that he had no thought that man could be so wicked: and when he in after time was asked whether he did not wish those severely punished who were the cause of his crippled condition, he would say: "No, he would like to see them repent, and obtain forgiveness of God for the evil they did to others as well as to himself." He endured his consequent affliction with submissiveness and a patience rarely witnessed His nearest and dearest wish was the care and prosperity of the Church in the field where he so sincerely labored. Although age and infirmity would not permit him to travel as he was wont to do, yet he would not stay at home when he was able to go out. He had the satisfaction to see and know, at last, that within the circle of his first field of labor, six churches are now organized, and still more in prospect. The end of his earthly days came not unexpectedly to him; he was prepared to leave this world, in full faith and hope, to take up his abode in another, in a better and more glorious, sphere, and there we hope, trust and believe, his spirit has arrived to receive the reward of all true servants and followers of him, who has the reward with him.

On the 8th the remains of the deceased were conveyed to their last resting place. The funeral services were conducted by brethren J. E. Hilkey, Peter Brubaker and J. W. Hoppings. They improved the occasion, and spoke from Rev. 14: 12, 13, to a larger number of brethren, sisters, and friendly neighbors, than the writer can recollect of having seen on any similar occasion. Deceased leaves sorrowing, but not dispairing, as some do, a wife, a mother in Israel, 5 sons and 3 daughters, all married, except the youngest son, who lives with the mother. The others live at a short distance from the old home. They all have the faith of their parents, yet only some of their number are united with the church. And while they see it so vividly manifested that life is uncertain, and that it is needful to make preparation to meet those dear departed ones in the realms of bliss and happiness, it is hoped and desired that they and others may not longer delay, but make their title sure to the eternal mansions above.

Brother Holsinger; The Companion still makes its regular arrivals, and is welcomed by all those of us who can comprehend its good design. We truly regard it as a great means by which we may be encouraged on our pilgrimage toward that destination at which we should all aim,—"on the other side of Jordon." Yet we must also confess that it sometimes brings with it thoughts which in a measure mar that joy and comfort with which we usually search its pages. And for the encouragement of both its editor and readers we will venture to refer to an item which (no doubt by many) was read with a greater or less degree of regret. And that is, that our editor brother was made to "rejoice in the prospect of being freed from his office prison, to which" he says, "we have been confined for the past two months, day, and night, and in which we did not hear a sermon—save one of our own." This perhaps many of us could not be allowed to say, unless we were encompassed about with circumstances of a nature more formidable than confinement in our office, store, shop, or farm, prisons. Nevertheless, my dear fellow readers, let us not be too hasty to conclude that the brother is getting too economical to lessen his confinements and privations, by employing assistants. Yet rather let us conclude that perhaps he has been so liberal in his offers, and is furnishing so many poor with his paper gratis, that in order to keep up the Companion in its present size and splendor, such a degree of economy has become indispensable. And that if we who operate (which should be us all) for him as agents and friends in behalf of our papers, would now and then drop on our lists a name (accompanied with the necessary demands) of such ones as we could most expect that God would reward us for, we would be most likely to alleviate those privations which the brother is undergoing. And would also be a means by which many souls would be encouraged to feed upon the bread of life who instead are feeding upon the wind, and are left to themselves "without hope and without God in the world."

Brother Holsinger: May it please the Brotherhood generally and honor God in particular—to have a little space in the Companion filled with a history of the meeting that transpired in the Rock Run congregation, Ind., which is as you find: Saturday Feb. 5th. The brethren came together—counciled and transacted all necessary business in which they found it to be an imperative duty to make choice for a speaker, which choice was gratified by the appointment of brother David Hochstettler to the ministry. After the above had been satisfactorily settled, then came over all quite a rejuvenized spirit that carried the all important work into a series of meetings which were well conducted, and attended. The work was so beautifully carried on by brethren Jesse Calvert and D. B. Sturgis and so richly blessed by the Lord, that 46 new members were added to the Brotherhood.

Brother Holsinger; I feel thankful that we are blessed with so much good instruction as we get through the reading of the Companion. Therefore, I feel like making known to you, through its medium our hopes of success in the Master's cause.—We, being 35 or 40 miles from any of the ministering brethren, are deprived the pleasure of hearing much preaching. Five ministering brethren were with us the second week in October, arrangements were made that we should have preaching every 3rd Sabbath in the month, which we have had since that time. We now feel very much encouraged. One more has been added, by baptism, which increases our small number to eight. We are desirous of having some ministering brethren locate among us, feeling conscious that much good may be the result. Brethren we ask an interest in your prayers, that we may remain steadfast unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Therefore let us be his faithful servants. Yours in love

LUSINA SHICK.

Buckhart, Ills.

Dear Brother; This blessed Sabbath day I have been enjoying the privilege of reading the Companion while no one else is near, and I can heartily say, it brings a welcome message in my behalf, and I do think it is as good as preaching to me when I have no opportunity of going to meeting, for at this time I feel almost forsaken. As God knoweth all things best he has seen proper to call my two loving children away into eternity and thus I am left to mourn their loss, which is great. Oh, brethren, pray for me, that I may endure my troubles and trials unto the end, and then meet my loved ones never more to part. And may the God of grace ever be with you and help you to carry on your work rightly, and acceptably in the sight of God is the prayer of your sister in Jesus.

Brother Holsinger; We have no preaching here by the Brethren, and I would be quite lost if I should not get the Companion once every week. I notice in Companion, No 5, that brother Roland, of Dallas county, Iowa, states that they have organized a church and that brother Christian Long is one among them, and also brother John Diehl. There are no other members here but my wife and myself. If the Brethren don't settle here soon, I shall move to Dallas Co. I arrived here a year ago within 2 days. W. E. FADELY.

Colfax, Iowa.

Brother Holsinger: By request of some of our brethren I again drop a few lines for the consolation and satisfaction of some of our brethren. The Lord has again been at work here, in the Washington branch of the church.

On the 15th instant we held a choice for one speaker and one visiting brother, which fell on brother Joseph Hartsough as speaker, and brother Joseph Harto as visiting brother. Joseph Leedy, from Antioch, and Samuel Murray met with us. And while the brethren stopped with us we had meeting for a few days, and 5 more were made willing to put on Christ by obeying him through the holy ordinance of baptism. May the Lord bless brethren Leedy and Murray in their labors, and strengthen and enable them to still grow and stand firm in their calling, and declare the whole counsel of God, that many more may be constrained to turn to the side of the Lord. The High School Movement.

ANTIOCH, IND.)
Feb. 10th, 1870.)

According to previous notice, a number of brethren met at Antioch to take into consideration the propriety of establishing a College or High School among the brethren, the result of which to submit to next Annual Meeting for its approbation.

The meeting was organized by the appointment of elder Samuel Murray, Moderator, and Daniel Smith, Clerk, when the following resolutions were passed:

Whereas we feel solemnly impressed with the conviction that the time has come when the Brotherhood should provide facilities for the education of our sons and daughters among us, Therefore:

1st. Resolved, That this meeting approve of the establishment of schools amongst the Brethren where our children may receive a better and more thorough education than they can at our common schools.

2nd. Resolved, That we present this subject to our next Annual Meeting, respectfully asking that body to devise some means to meet the wants of the church relative to educational facilities.

3rd. Resolved, That we ask the Middle District of Indiana to submit the above preamble and resolutions to our next Annual Meeting for its consideration.

4. Resolved, That we ask the editors of our periodicals to publish the proceedings of this meeting in their papers.

RAY COUNTY, MO. }
Jan. 27th, 1870. }

A Council Meeting was held by the Brethren of Ray county, Missouri, for the purpose of taking into consideration the building of a meeting-house and for other purposes. It was unanimously agreed that it was highly important that a house should be built, and that we would build one as soon as possible, and being few in number, and feeling our inability to bear all the expense it was unanimously resolved to appeal to the Brotherhood for aid, and I was appointed to address the Brotherhood upon the subject, which I will proceed to do.

The Savior says: "go preach the Gospel." This is a command as emphatic as when the Master said thou shalt not commit adultery. I tremble at the weight of the responsibility resting upon the church of the living God. To preach the Gospel requires persons to preach it, and places to preach in, and hence the great responsibility resting upon the Church of giving every aid possible to carry into effect the provisions of the great commission. The Gospel is to extend to all the world, commencing at Jerusalem. How far these sublime truths, as taught by Jesus Christ, are as yet extended over the world, "judge ye." My opinion is the world has heard but little, comparatively speaking, of the doctrine as taught by Jesus Christ and the Apostles. They have heard the popular religion as taught in the world, and well adapted to the natural inclinations of man; hence the delusion. Admitting this, brethren, contemplate with me the fearful responsibility resting upon the true Church. The eminent Apostle Paul, in writing to his Thessalonian brethren, bearing directly upon the subject of the coming of Christ, warns them not to sleep as do others, but to watch and be sober. 1 Thess. 1: 6. One very prominent cause of sleeping is ease and luxury. When bountifully supplied with all the comforts of life it is natural to slumber and sleep, dead to the great responsibility resting upon them as individuals The piercing winds of dreary winter are chilling the life-blood of thousands and millions of human beings. Famine, disease and misery have found their way into the miserable abodes of suffering. The widow is struggling to provide something to feed and clothe her suffering children; their cries for bread melt her heart, yet no power to alleviate their distress. Yet amidst all these scenes of misery and woe, the sleeper is slumbering away, surrounded, temporarily, with all the means to make themselves comfortable. The winds may howl and moan, her icy touch may penetrate the miserable habitations of the suffering, still they sleep, and continue to sleep until the coming of the bridegroom is announced: "go ye out to meet him," when they wake and find no oil in their vessels. As with individuals, so with the Church; for the Church is composed of individuals bound together by the principles as taught by Jesus Christ, and promulgated by the Apostles, "Christ being the chief corner stone." In the Apostolic days the Church was a living Church, full of life and vitality. Soon the seeds of corruption were sown, soon the principles as taught by the founder were buried in avarice, and the sublime doctrines of our Lord and Master were lost in a miserable superstition. Yet whilst the principles were lost it still existed, for it is immutable and unchangeable, being divine. It may be buried, and by the same means, for "like causes produce like effects." The responsibility of the Brotherhood is beyond the power of conception. ("Ye are Brethren.) The opportunity of extending Christ's Kingdom is greater, especially in the United States, than at any former period. We have passed through a dreadful war; its ruinous influences and effects are felt and feared; the minds of the people are prepared to receive the doctrine of Christ; "if your enemy hunger," &c and that Christ's Kingdom is a Kingdom of universal peace, and 'good will.' But, alas! the sectarian, and the man of war have unfurled their banners; the doctrine still is proclaimed; Christians can draw the sword, and bury the glittering blade in the vitals of christians and still be christians. These anti-christian principles have to be met, and how? By preaching the Gospel, which is the command. Brethren, do you not see how extended is the field of your labor? look at your Master's vineyard; see how many noxious weeds are growing up and choking out the wheat! It then requires united effort on the part of the Brotherhood, with a firm reliance on our heavenly Father for support, for he has promised to be with us "even to the end of the world." To accomplish the responsible mission before us, the labor is great, but the reward is beyond all calculation: "a crown of eternal life."

Only a short time since I was in the valley of Virginia (Rockingham county) where the Brotherhood is extensive—good and comfortable meeting-houses, and ministering brethren in abundance, where the people can hear, if disposed, the "words of eternal life." I am at this time in the far west, where there is a small Brotherhood, a vast field of labor, and ministering brethren very scarce, and small and uncomfortable places of holding meetings. The sectarian is here; his standard is floating in the breeze. I am ready to exclaim "come and help us," help us by sending out ministering brethren; help us by your advice and counsel—help us to build meeting-houses—help us by sustaining our religious publications—and help us by every means possible, and more especially by your prayers to our Divine Father. I recollect when I was in Virginia hearing brother Jacob Wine declare, when preaching the word, "we should not stay at Jerusalem." I agreed with him then, and I agree with him still, and at this time feel more powerfully the truth of the declaration. Brethren, may not too many of you be staying at Jerusalem, where you can have ease and comfort. Remember there is no duty so high and holy as teaching "the words of eternal life," and the reward is beyond the power of conception. Two years ago next spring, I was in the State of Ohio, and there formed the acquaintance of a number of brethren, some of their names I at this time remember, and will mention Brown, Earleys, Millers, Funderburgs, Arnolds, and Frances, and having not heard from them since, I now embrace this opportunity of sending them my love, hoping they may extend the same to the brethren generally, and also ask them to assist us in our undertaking. I also propose, as soon as I feel myself able to bear the expenses, to pay them a visit; if the Lord is willing. And in this connection I appeal to the churches in the valley of Virginia for aid, and I do this in behalf of the brethren here—a considerable number are from that section. And brethren Holsinger and Quinter, we ask you thro' your columns to give us your aid, and not only to us, but to all the young branches, as they are being planted in the Lord's vineyard. How much do they stand in need of you—as well as the church's fostering care.

And in conclusion, a word to brethren contemplating emigrating to the west. We invite your attention to this section of the west, I mean Ray county, Mo. This county, as a general thing, is high, rolling prairie, tolerably well timbered. Coal in abundance, plenty of water, easy of cultivation, a rich alluvial soil, a fine grain country, natural for grass. The prairies can be plowed with two horses. It is as healthy as any portion of the west.

Any one desiring information can address brethren David B. Bowman, or John Vantrump, or myself, at Hardin, Ray county, Missouri. The Visitor will please copy.

Any money that may be given for the purpose of aiding in building a meeting-house in the county of Ray, Missouri, can be sent to the care of brethren David B. Bowman, or John Vantrump as above.

Yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

ADDISON HARPER.

From Brother D. D. Sell.

NEWRY PA.)
Feb. 10th, 1870.)

I last wrote from Philadelphia. On the afternoon of the 7th to Germantown. It being remarkably pleasant I chose to walk. The brethren in the city gave me directions, but by misunderstanding on my part I got several miles out of the way. By this I learned something and that is this, when a man is going wrong he feels about as well as if he were going right. I then made inquiry of a gentleman who informed me that I was on the wrong way. Then I retraced my steps as rapidly as possible as the sun was making its way toward the western horizon. The first house I stopped at, to make inquiry concerning the Brethren's meeting-house, was the house of brother William Benson. Sister Benson met us at the door and kindly took me in where we enjoyed a good rest. About dark brother Benson came from the place of his business, and kindly received us. We could not help but feel ourself quite at home.—After supper went to meeting a few steps from the door of brother Benson. Many solemn reflections passed my mind when entering the door of that old meeting-house, that is just 100 years old, and when I took my seat at the old table with my senior brethren Graybill Myers, Jacob Reiner, and others, to look back with the minds eye to the time when the brethren first placed the feet on the American soil. Where are they now? Sleeping in their dusty beds a little ways from the meeting-house under those evergreen trees, which seem to speak to the passer by. "They rest from their labors and their works do follow them!" Meeting was opened by brother Myers. Brother Reiner entertained us for a time from 44 verse 13 chapter of Matt. We then closed the meeting. We had a pleasant and we hope a profitable meeting. We would say here, the church is not in the condition at this place that we expected to find it. There is no minister there, and no deacons. Brother Price has had the oversight of it for a long time, and is now so old that he can no longer labor. We truly feel for the brethren and sisters at this place; we hope they will give themselves to prayer and fasting, that the Lord may send laborers in that field to labor. Brother Myers went for the purpose of doing something for them; we hope that his labors were a success. All night with brother Benson.

On the morning of the 8th we visited the burying ground; although it was cold and snowy we went through to see a number of the graves, and saw many old dates on the head stones. Among them I saw the grave of Alexander Mack, one among the first brethren that came to America. The letters on his tombstone are in the German language. I am not acquainted with the German, but still I made out his name, &c. There is a tree waving over his grave of which I cut a cane, and have it now with me as a relic. I saw the photograph of Peter Kiser, and I am under obligations to sister Benson for showing and giving me a piece of the old meeting-house that was built in 1723, and a piece of the tile they covered the first houses with. They no doubt brought them from Germany. These things I took with me, to show to my brethren in the far west, that I was at the place where the first church was organized in America. We regretted we could not stay longer with the brethren at this place. Went to the city on the morning of the 8th, dined with brother Spangle's family. Then to the business place of J. S. Thomas; took supper with him and family; then to Crown St. to meeting. The night being cold and stormy only a few present; but still more than the number of which the Savior says I will be with you. Put up with brother Fry near the meeting-house. We had the pleasure here of rooming with brother Abraham H. Cassel, who we think is the best read brother we have ever had the pleasure to converse with. He has an immense library. He has about fifty different translations of the bible. We regret that we could not get out to see and examine some of his books. Took leave of the brethren in the city on the morning of the 9th. Many thanks, brethren for your kindness toward me during my stay among you.

Came to Mount Joy, Lancaster co., at noon & dined with elder David Garloch. Had a pleasant interview with him. Circumstances being so I had to leave there sooner than we liked, to came home the night of the 9th. Found all well. My next trip will be westward.

DANIEL D. SELL.

For the Companion.

"Order in God's House"

Since our God is a God of order, and not of confusion, were it not more in accordance with the gospel and order, for the Brethren, at our communion meetings, in reading the 13th chapter of St. John while feet-washing; to read the entire chapter before commencing to wash feet, and then proceed? I suppose we will all admit, that that chapter is read upon that important occasion, to show the people that we have scripture for what we do. The audience generally pay good attention to what is being read; and when the reading brother comes to the words: "He riseth from supper, &c. their attention is somewhat disturbed by the brethren then rising to their feet, taking off their coats, and so on. And while feet-washing is going on there is more or less confusion, and the spectators wanting to see the performance pay attention to the feet-washing. And the reading brother still reads on to the end, so when he is done hardly any know what he did read. I have thought it would be far better to read the chapter to the end, and when done reading, then commence the washing. Then the people could hear what was read, and then also see that we have scripture for what we do. This practice may not be general among the Brethren, but as far as I have come it is.

Brother Holsinger; I send on this second list of subscribers, and if my manner of taking out my commission is not correct please state it, and I will refund. I think I will get more subscribers for the Companion and Youth. I am much pleased with the Youth; think it will do much good in families. Send the back numbers to these subscribers if you have them; the most of the subscribers to the Companion that I get here, are outsiders. I tell them my object in soliciting subscription, is not so much for the small amount the Companion costs, as the sentiment to be obtained by reading it, and if they will not read, and think on what they read, I would rather they would not take the paper.

ELDER GEORGE WOLFE.

Stockton, Cal.

Your method of obtaining amount of commission is correct, and remittance was all right, and we shall be pleased to add as many names as you can obtain at same rates, both for Companion and Youth.

You say: "If they will not read, and think on what they read, I would rather they would not take the paper." That is our sentiment exactly. We want a thousand new subscribers, but we would not willingly accept a man's subscription if we had good reasons to believe he would make no proper use of the paper. We want to give value for what we receive. We accept it as a favor when brethren and sisters labor to secure subscribers for us, but we ask them not to solicit patronage from persons to whom we can be of no service. However, after a man has become a subscriber something may be done for him toward constituting him a reader, and if he can be induced to become interested in the paper, much good may be accomplished by inculcating the principles of the Gospel.

Brother Henry: Allow me to say a few words in support of the Pious Youth. We take it for our son, and find it to more than meet our expectations. We would not be without it. I think it one of the best papers for children that can be published, and would advise all christian parents to subscribe at once, as it is filled with entertaining reading matter, which cannot but please every boy and girl who reads it. We will not ask you to make any improvements on it, but hope (with the help of God) the brethren will give you that support you so richly deserve, that you will be able to keep it as good and entertaining, and as instructive as it now is, I remain yours in christian fellowship.

Questions.

What should I do were I to hear a brother use profane language, or see him reel under the influence of intoxicating liquors?

What is the difference between a public offense and a private one?

D. A. LICHTY.

I should like to have some of the brethren's views, through the Companion, on Matthew 12: 31, 32, which reads as follows: "Wherefore I say unto you all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto man, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto man."

What sin is it? It must be a different sin from all others.

D. L. FISHER.

Will you or some other brother give an explanation through the Companion of Acts 9: 7; "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice but seeing no man." The 22nd chapter, 9th verse reads: "And they that were with me saw indeed the light and were afraid, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." A. PEARSALL

Will you or some one else give an explanation of Luke 6: 23?

D. H. BONEBRAKE.

Brother Henry; Will you or some other brother give an explanation of Luke 16: 9: "and I say unto you make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitation." Who are the friends.

LUCY MEGIE.

By reading the New Testament I find a passage of Scripture that I cannot get an explanation on, so I appeal to you for explanation through the Companion; namely: Cor. fourth chapter 17th verse 7th chapter 6th and 7th verse.

DANIEL WAGOMON.

Chambersburgh, Pa.

Brother Henry; Will some brother or sister give an explanation on Matthew 24 chapter 22 verse.

D. H. WALKER.

"For as many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law. For not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified. Rom. 2: 12, 13.

What law does Paul speak of here, and where is it on record? Will some one answer through the Companion?

DOTY'S WASHING-MACHINE,

LATELY MUCH IMPROVED—AND THE NEW

UNIVERSAL CLOTHES WRINGER.

Improved with Rowel's Patent Double Cog-wheels, and the Patent Stop, are now unquestionably far superior to any apparatus for washing clothes ever invented, and will save their cost twice a year, by saving labor and clothes.

Those who have used them give testimony as follows:

It is worth one dollar a week in any family.—N. Y. Tribune.

In the laundry of my house there is a perpetual thanksgiving on Mondays for the invention.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler.

Every week has given it a stronger hold upon the affections of the inmates of the laundry.—N. Y. Observer.

Friend Doty—Your last improvement of your Washing Machine is a complete success. I assure you 'our Machine,' after a years' use, is thought more of to-day than ever, and would not be parted with under any circumstances.—Solon Robinson.

After a constant use of the Universal Clothes Wringer for more than four years in our family, I am authorized by the power that be, to give it the most unqualified praises and to pronounce it an indispensable part of the machinery of house-keeping. Our servants have always been willing to use it, and always have liked it." Henry Ward Beecher.

PRICES.—A Fair Offer.

Send the retail price, Washer $14. Extra Wringer $9, and we will forward either or both machines, free of freight, to places where no one is selling; and so sure are we they will be liked, that we agree to refund the money if any one wishes to return the machines free of freight, after a month's trial according to directions.

No husband, father or brother should permit the drudgery of washing with the hands, fifty-two days in the year, when it can be done better, more expeditiously, with less labor, and no injury to the garments, by a Doty Clothes Washer, and a Universal Wringer.

Canvassers with exclusive right of sale make money fast selling them.

Sold by dealers generally, to whom liberal discounts are made.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

The Master's Call.

Up and be doing! the time is brief,
And life is frail as the autumn leaf.
To God and thy better self be true,
Do with might what thou findest to do.

Though the day is bright and the sun is high,
Ere long 'twill fade from the glowing sky.
While the evening shadows darkly fall,
There's time for rest, it will come to all.

The harvest is white, the field is wide;
And thou at thine ease may'st not abide.
The reapers are few and far between
And death is abroad with his sickle keen.

O, think of the Master, worn and faint,
Whose meek lips uttered no complaint,
Who toiled for thee mid the noontide heat,
And sought no rest for his weary feet.

Of a Father's wrath who drank the wine,
And bore His cross to lighten thine.
Go forth and labor! A crown awaits,
The faithful servant, at heaven's gates.

For a death of shame the Savior died,
To open those golden portals wide,
That souls, redeemed from the toils of sin.
In his spotless robes might enter in.

Work with thy might! ere the day of grace
Is spent, and the night steals on apace,
The Master has given His pledge divine;
Who winneth souls like stars shall shine.

"Go into all the World."

There has been much written concerning the going and teaching the nations of the earth. Teach them what? Teach them the principles that are embodied in the New Testament Scriptures. The brethren hold that we must "obey all its requirements." That will make good citizens and also good Christians. When I travel over this country and see the great mass of people that never heard the brethren teach the "all things commanded of God," we think that there is a lack somewhere for the furtherance of the good work at home, among our own people. We hear calls from all parts of the United States: "come and help us?" These calls are from the West and South chiefly. I have been through the West and Southwest, and East to the city of Philadelphia, and I find even in that city there is more need of laborers in the ministry than in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, all put together. You may ask me why I say this. I speak of what I have seen and heard. There are three ministering brethren in the city. Among that number one so old that his days of usefulness are about over. So we may say properly only two to labor there in the ministry. There are about one million of a population in the city. I was informed by brother Jacob Spanogle, that a learned minister calculated how many out of that number attended church. It was the small number of one out of every twelve. Look what the two brethren in the city have before them. Would we wonder at them if they would cry for help? I think not. I hope the united prayers will go up to the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into his vineyard to labor for the saving of precious souls. Brethren, the cause is a good one that we are engaged in. Then let your light so shine that men may see your good works. Men ought to see the light manifest itself in the daily walk and conversation and manner of life. By so doing we all become preachers of the doctrine of the meek and lowly Nazarene.

In conclusion I would say to all my brethren, from the Jersey Shore on the east, to the rock bound coast of California on the west, Minnesota on the north to the Gulf of Mexico on the south, rally round the standard of prince Emmanuel. Hold up the doctrine taught by him—live it out in whatever capacity the Lord may please to call you. Then let the stars leave their orbs and fall in confusion, or the world be enveloped in flames, the sea and the waves roar, we will be safe in this and that life which is to come.

Close Communion.

I wish to offer a few reasons why we, the "Church of the Brethren," do not commune with other denominations. Although I have never been much instructed by the brethren why we do not commune with them, I shall, by divine assistance, endeavor to give my reasons.

In the first place we consider the order of the Brethren the Gospel and apostolic order. If we commune with people who teach doctrines which we do not believe, we commit sin. And we will be sinning if we invite people to commune with us, who have no faith in the doctrine which we teach. They will be sinning against their conscience if they commune with us. Therefore we will be sinning by inviting them to sin. We will be sinning if we commune with people that are not "likeminded one toward another" with us "according to Christ Jesus." Our minds must be united in the union of sentiment, and if there is no union there can be no communion.

All christians are to enter in at the "strait gate." Baptism is the initiatory ordinance by which we enter into the church. The apostle Paul says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." If we want to put on Christ and enter in at the "strait gate," we must be "buried with him by baptism into his death," according to his appointed way. Any other way than his, is not gospel order. "He that climbeth up some other way the same is a thief and a robber." We cannot commune with people who do not enter into the church according to his appointed way.

With regard to the ordinances in the church, they differ from us. Feetwashing is claimed by most of the denominations to be a command, but not to be practiced in the public assembly of the church, and many of those who claim it ought to be practiced in the assembly, do not practice it at the proper time and according to gospel order. The Lord's Supper they call a Jewish Passover, and the Holy Communion they call the Lord's Supper. Never have I met with a people but the Brethren that take the Communion as the disciples took it. For they took it after supper, but most of other denominations take it before dinner. Thus far, dear reader, you can see that we cannot commune with a people who do not hold entirely to the doctrine of Christ. The apostle says: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not in your house, neither bid him God speed." (2nd John, 10.)

Growth in Grace.

It is important that the young convert should advance in holiness, that he should become acquainted with his position in a divine life. He has just emerged from the most wretched darkness, is but a babe in Christ, his heart is full of grace and love divine. He looks back over his past life with awe, and wonders why he groveled so long in darkness, as he now feels so great change of heart, which speaks peace to his soul. Oh, he is astonished at the thought, that he did not long ere this embark in the Gospel Ship, which is sailing over our land and will soon anchor with its cargo in the heaven of eternal repose. He sees that many hours have been lost in which he could have availed himself of precious opportunities of drinking deep in the cup of religion, which would enable him to pull down the mighty strongholds of sin, reigning in his heart, and to the upbuilding of his spiritual Zion. A successful growth in grace, brings many peaceful hours to the convert. That yoke of sin which held him in the most abject bondage, he has thrown off. The inebriate who partook of the poisonous cup which equalized him with the brute, thus rendering his family and friends unhappy around him, and robbed them of the necessities of life, has resolved never more to touch, taste, or handle the unclean thing. Oft has he returned to his family enraged by the poisonous draught to abuse his bosom companion and children. Now he has forsaken his wicked way, and has restored peace to his soul and to loved ones around. This growth of grace has now commenced working in his heart, and he is now admitted into the circles of Christian society.—That young man has forsaken his wicked associates, while another ceases to profane the name of God. All emerge from this sin cursed darkness, and dissolve themselves from every besetting sin; enjoy a peaceful mind and are traveling the delectable mounts of gospel light and liberty, to the mansions of eternal glory, which will untimately lead them to the majestic throne of God.

A growth of grace signifies an arduous work in the service of God. All have work in the vineyard of the Lord, that grace might more abound in their hearts. The young convert may not be able to pluck the fruit off the vine, yet he can cultivate the vine and in due time be enabled to gain access to the fruit. Some may not be able to carry the fruit of the vine to their divine Master, yet they can fall down upon their knees in the humble attitude of prayer, and say "Lord enable me to endure the heat and burden of the day." The convert may not be able to comprehend his way; it may yet appear dark, but he can approach his Maker, who has promised that if he asks in faith believing he shall be heard. He will then grow in "grace and in the knowledge of the truth." As he grows in days and years he becomes more holy, Christ-like, walks with Christ and longs for the time when he can be with him; when he can drink to the dregs the "unsearchable riches of Christ." He looks back upon sin with contempt, and in the language of the Psalmist he cries unto the Lord and says: "I will praise thee; for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation."—He then looks forward to that heavenly felicity which he shall enjoy after death, where he shall ever be free from evil both of soul and body; live in the enjoyment of God with the angels of his heavenly kingdom.

I shall be near and like my God!
And flesh and sin no more control
The sacred pleasures of the soul."

Close Communion.

Circumstances over which I have no control, have kept me from going to meeting to-day, and as I cannot be idle I have concluded to offer a few thoughts on "Close Communion," as that is one of the strong (but weak) holds of sectarianism, as it is said by the "various Evangelical denominations," who plead for "Universal Church fellowship." We deny this. They are not Evangelical denominations that plead this doctrine, for there is but one Evangelical Church, and that always was, is now, and always will be right. But it is sectarianism that assumes this false position, and pleads for "Universal Church fellowship." And should the assumption of this doctrine place the brethren in an unpleasant light? I for one think not, for truth on our side can never leave us unpleasantly situated; hence sectarians having no good cause to sustain themselves, cry out: "Uncharitable, bigoted, narrow minded, &c." Here we ask, why this? Surely, a "babe in Christ" can answer this question. It is because we will not compromise the word of truth. Right here the case changes, and we can plainly see who are unpleasantly situated. The burden has shifted itself on the other side, and no way to shift it off without coming to the truth. But this they are too proud or to "bigoted to do," and hence the above epithets are heaped upon us. Well, this we need not marvel at, for Jesus the Lamb of God was censured in the same way; and why? Just because his doctrine did not suit sectarianism. He could not compromise the truth and they would not accept, and thus exposed their self-righteousness, and accused the Son of God with inconsistencies. O, shame where is thy blush? To think that poor mortal man, whose life and breath are in the hands of his God, unto whom he is accountable, will call in question the doctrine of Salvation, as taught, practiced, and established by the Lamb of God, who came to deliver us from the original curse and open up a new and living way whereby we may all be saved.

But it is asked, "whom should we admit to the Lords table? Dear brethren, a momentous question, and should be well understood. And it is with reverence to Gok the author, and Jesus who instituted it, and himself gave the example, that we speak of it and thus honor our God, the giver of life, in all his institutions pertaining to the salvation of our souls, for out of Christ there is no salvation. Hence says Jesus: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood ye have no life in you." Just here comes up the question, are all to eat of these broken emblems indiscriminately, we unhesitatingly answer, NO. Well then, who are the proper subjects? We answer the living members of Christ's Body. And how do we become such member? Paul is plain upon this subject. "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death,—like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father even so we also should walk in newness of life." Music.

Some years ago, I was called aside, after a forenoon meeting, by a beloved brother, and the question asked, whether I did not think that singing bass was wrong, to which I answered in the negative, adding that if I thought it wrong I would not engage in it. The good brother however reasoned that it was only for to tickle the ear, and my bass singing hurt his feelings.—Believing that the brother was as sincere as myself, I promised to not sing bass at the evening services, which satisfied him. But when in the course of the evening, heads laid on the tables and a general listlessness showed itself, and the outside audience showed uneasiness and restlessness, I thought to arouse them, and lined a hymn, requesting the young people to help sing the parts: which being done caused a general revival in the congregation, as I had often seen before. As the brother said nothing to me afterwards, I lost an opportunity to give him my views on the subject. Now since there are still persons conscientiously opposed to singing anything more than tenor, it may not be amiss to say a little on the subject.

First, then, what is singing? Singing is articulating or expressing words by different persons harmoniously, and if there were ten thousand voices, they would all express the same word at one and the same time. Witness the birth of Christ made known by the heavenly host.

What then is the object of singing? It is to please the ear, as the lily and the rose please the eye, and their fragrance the smell; or the apple the taste. And when the ear, the eye, the nose, and taste are pleased, the heart is touched, the feelings are brought to the understanding, thoughts are created, conclusions formed, and the different members are brought into action.—Hence the man that had formed the resolution to drown himself, when he heard the plowman sing those comforting lines:

> In God I trust in all my need,
> For he is good and kind;
> He hears his children when they plead,
> In him their refuge find."

resolved to trust in God and returned to his home.

Now, then, if God variegated the color of the flowers in the field to please the eye, he also has planted in man the variegation of sound and tune, and has given him power to bring them together in sweet harmony to please the ear.—Man is permitted to make use of the same, as he is of the plants, and their harmonious hues, and all this to effect the heart strings as the musician moves or vibrates the different strings or notes of his instrument. Then we ask: where has man derived this art of music? Certainly not from the lower regions of darkness, for there is no harmony: but discord, disunion, wailing and gnashing of teeth. But in the blessed regions above, sweet and harmonious voices are blended together in one. In the first instance of the kind we notice that "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" when God laid the foundations of this earth.—Hence music originated in heaven, is carried on there at this time, and will continue to all eternity, not only by angels, and archangels, but also by the saints in light to a greater perfection than we can anticipate. Therefore how appropriate it is for the saints on earth to learn the art, while pilgrims and travelers here on this mundane sphere of probation. How delightfully sweet doth the sound of music fall on the ear of the servant of God, and how do the words of poetry sink into his heart when he sees and hears the whole congregation engaged in this noble exercise? Is not his whole soul elevated above all that is earthly and vain? Doth it not create new thoughts, and new expressions which he imparts to an attentive audience? Is not every heart also prepared for the reception of divine truth? Truly it is. Who hath not experienced this? Then let all the children of God study this noble art of music, so as to bring it more and more to perfection, as it can be perfected even in this imperfect state of existence here on earth, and thereby draw and induce our fellow men to come nearer and nearer to the house of God and the family of the first born.

But all music has not the effect to elevate the mind and produce holy thoughts; for when satan saw the effect that union had he introduced his ballads and songs, and even it seems at every assembly of the children of God he is present, and if he cannot introduce his ballads and songs he is busily engaged to call the attention of this one, and that one to every movement in the assembly, or points to the dress, the bonnet or the ribbon of this or that young woman.

I pray you dear brethren and sisters to assist me in defeating that great deceiver. We will sing in the spirit and with the understanding also; we will not gape about, looking at this or that object, noticing everybody that enters the house; but have our minds composed, and our thoughts concentrated on the import of the words which we are singing. We will be able like a good reader or speaker, to emphasize as the words may indicate. We will be careful not to drown all other voices, and take pleasure in hearing ourselves only, and thereby destroy the effect that singing should have upon us. When we thus sing we shall be able to drive every evil spirit out of the congregation, as David did the evil spirit that troubled King Saul, for as I hinted at above, evil spirits cannot remain where there is harmony and union, for discord and disunion is their characteristic. Pity that the children of God do not strive more to be in harmony, not alone in singing, but also in word and action. What a power could be brought to bear against the host of hell and the multitudes on earth!

My main object in writing the above imperfect lines, is to make the ministry more effectual, and as there are hundreds of ministers who are benefited by good singing, there are thousands of hearers whose hearts might be better prepared for the reception of the truth as it is in Jesus, if vain and evil spirits (or thoughts) were cast out of their hearts before preaching.

I shall now desist from pursuing this subject any further, with the hope that some one better versed will use his pen to clearer and better views on this subject.

I have thus written, dear reader, at the bedside of my much suffering companion, who is in preparing to leave these discordant elements of sin, by having her heart strings tuned by the finger of God, through suffering, for the sweet and glorious harmony of the saints in light.—And you, my dear brother Balsbaugh, may also belong to that choir, who have been made perfect through much suffering.

Who are the Rich?

In No. 5, page 77, sister Hannah Knauff asks the above question, and desires an answer. We will, by the grace of God, examine the Scriptures of truth, feeling confident that we can arrive at a proper solution.

In Matt. 19, we have an account of a rich young man coming to our Savior in a very humble manner, boasting of his obedience to the law from his youth up. We no doubt suppose this was sufficient, and all that Jesus could reasonably ask of him. He, however, gives the Savior to understand that if there was any thing else, he was willing to obey. We infer this from his request to know "what lack I yet?" Our Lord now puts to him an unexpected test. "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven, and come and follow me." We do not understand that he was to give all to the poor. He was simply commanded to distribute to the poor; no amount being specified. Our Savior well knew that his possessions were dearer to him than eternal life or treasures in heaven, consequently the "certain ruler" went away sorrowful. Had he complied with the request, he could have claimed Christ's promise to him, but when he went away grieved, it showed that his heart was worldly, and needed to be changed. To part with wealth for Christ's sake, and give it to the needy was beyond his attainments, for his great possessions were the idol of his heart, and the more wealth he had, the harder it was for him to yield to such a sacrificing demand.

The idea the Savior wished to convey was that it was difficult and hard—not impossible—for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God, from the fact that it is hard to put Christ's will before his worldly possessions. This should warn us not to covet wealth, nor too eagerly to pursue what may prove to us such a serious obstacle in the way to eternal happiness. This young man lacked one thing. So there is some one thing that keeps many from entering into the church of the living God, which is the pillar and ground of the truth. They have too large possessions or too many gay friends and amusements, or the love of the world. They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition.

May God grant us all grace that we may use our possessions, whether they be great or small, to the advancement of his cause. So that in the ages to come he may show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus, is the prayer of your weak brother, who is endeavoring to esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt.

Having a Name.

"I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead." Rev. 3: 1.

This language of the Revelator should elicit the attention of every member of the Church of Christ; for from it we understand that we may have a name in the Church while living here in the world, and at the same time dead, as I understand, to Christianity. O how imperative it is, while we have names, or are considered members, living in the Church, to know that we are alive and not mere ciphers, being dead to the principles of Christianity.

It will be remembered that the Savior appeared to the Apostle John, while on the lonely isle of Patmos, John was commanded to go to the seven Churches which are in Asia, to correct the gross errors that some of those Churches had lapsed into, and to encourage those that held out faithful. "For thou hast a few names even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments, and they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy." Rev. 3: 4. But it was not so with the Bishop or Angel of this Church, over which he had the oversight. Here, my brethren, will be seen the great responsibility resting on the elder or bishop. "To desire the office of a bishop is a good work." 1 Tim. 3: 1. "The elder that ruleth well is counted worthy of double honor." 1 Tim., 5: 17. O what a contrast between the bishop worthy of double honor, and the bishop of the Church of Sardis, who though no doubt, was exercising the authority and filling the office of a bishop, yet was dead. This should cause our brethren who are so anxiously desiring the office of a bishop, which we sometimes have to see, to think. To fill the office of a bishop is a good work, but he "must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach, not given to wine, (And no doubt if the filthy custom had been in use in Paul's day, he would have added, not given to smoking or chewing tobacco,) not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient; not a brawler nor covetous; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity. But to feed the flock of God, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre's sake, but of a ready mind. Neither as lords ruling over God's heritage, (which sometimes we see too much of.) 1 Tim. 3: 2—4. 1 Peter, 5: 2, 3. But the bishop who is lordly and greedy of filthy lucre, given to wine and the use of tobacco, we think stands eminently in danger of being dead, though living and ruling over the church. John says to this dead bishop: "Be watchful and strengthen the things that are ready to die." Rev. 3: 2. Things that are ready to die, I understand to be the members of the church, over which he has the oversight. The bishop has an overwhelming influence over the members of the Church over which he has the oversight, whether for good or evil, life or death.

O how important it is to us, whether we are bishop, minister in the first or second degree of office, deacon or laymembers, to know that we are not dead, having names, living here in the church, but that we take for example those few in Sardis that had not defiled their garments but were walking with him, for they are worthy.

The "Other Sheep."

On page 107 of current volume of Compauion, brother John Brindle asks for an explanation of John 10: 16. The passage referred to reads as follows: "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice: and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." The question is, where were the "other sheep" to be brought from? Was it from the Gentiles? or were they in the prison where Christ preached unto the spirits? Inasmuch as my remarks on "where is Paradise" brought the question to brother Brindle's mind I take it for granted he expects me to answer this question also, and from this consideration I will give my views in as brief a manner as I can.

In the first place I do not understand that the preaching to the spirits in prison was ever made a matter of doctrine to the disinterested living. That is, it was not taught to the living as a matter of doctrine, neither by prophecy nor by personal instruction; only in the case of the thief on the cross, because he was immediately interested; but the evidences that we have that such preaching was done we gather from the incidental allusions that the Apostles make to it, when they argue other points of doctrine, such points as do concern the living.

In the second place, God has taught as a matter of doctrine, both by prophecy and by Apostolic teaching, that the Gentiles shall be gathered into the fold or church if they will believe and obey the Gospel. "I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." Isaiah 47: 6. Christ, through his death, has reconciled the world unto God, both Jew and Gentile. Romans 11: 15. Christ has broken down the middle wall of partition between the Jews and Gentiles and made both one. Eph. 2: 14. This looks like making one fold out of the two flocks, as represented in the parable, in John 10: 16. Hence we conclude he means the Gentiles by the "other sheep."

Here I must bid an affectionate farewell to brother Brindle, and pay a little attention to brother Harley, of Philadelphia.

On page 111 of same number Brother I. G. Harley desires an "answer on the passage of 1 Peter 3: 20, arising from a communication of brother P. J. B., and others, in reference to the thief on the cross, Paradise, and the spirits in prison. Here again finding my name connected with the subject I infer an answer is looked for from me. Brother Harley propounds three questions; but a negative answer to the first dispenses with the other two, as all three depend upon the disposition of the first one, which is as follows: "Did Christ, in the spirit, after his crucifixion preach to "those only" that lived and died disobedient while the ark was preparing. If brother H. had left the "only" off we would say yes; but with that included we must say no. The Gospel was preached to them that were dead—not to some of them—not to those only who were drowned in the flood, but the indiscriminate dead. 1 Peter 4: 6. Hence no exclusive advantage to any one. Come, brother of the City of Brotherly Love, let us reason together. What was the object of Christ's mission in the world? "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 John 3: 8. What were the works of the devil? Sin and death. How did Christ destroy these? "Through death he might destroy him who had the power of death, that is the devil." Heb. 2: 14. From these testimonies we learn the following facts: The devil had introduced sin into the world, and death by sin, and Christ took upon himself the likeness of sinful flesh, that he might destroy sin in the flesh. But by this only he could not destroy death and take the power from the devil who had the power of death. What more, then, was necessary? Why he had to die that he might reach the dark prison of death. The popular view: that he died and his spirit went to heaven while his body laid in the tomb, would never have accomplished the object of his mission. No, my dear brother, Christ did more than this. If he had not done more the prison doors of death would be as strong as ever; but he died, and as death approached him, as his life ebbed out, the bars of death bursted open, one by one; the dark prison which held those who sat in darkness and in the shadow of death, opened and emitted its darkness so that it covered the whole earth, and the light that was in the world rushed into the prison house, "and they saw great light." The spirit of Christ entered there and destroyed satan's power, and took the power from him and returned into his own body, and came forth triumphant; brought witnesses along him, for "many of the bodies of the saints arose and came out of their graves," &c. Thus he could with propriety say: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth;" and "I am he that liveth and was dead, and have the keys of death and of hell." Peter tells us he preached the Gospel to the dead, and for one I believe it. I would here call attention to the preposition "in," in the declaration of Christ that he has at his command all power in heaven and in earth. I understand this not only to mean on the earth but in the lower parts of or under the earth, and he will ultimately use this power, that "at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow in heaven, on earth, and under the earth" Phil. 2: 10. I quote this last passage according to the original language of Paul, not as perverted by the translators. Let us not forget that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, and in this reconciliation provision is made for the whole human family; those who were dead when Christ came as well as those who were living, and as the Gospel gives the conditions of salvation, and according to its conditions the world will be judged, both those who were in the flesh when he came and announced his will, and those who were in the spirit.

And finally let us remember that all who have this Gospel given to them are required to believe and obey it, or it will prove a "savor of death unto death." That is, instead of releasing us from the natural death it will be the means of adding the second death to it, which is what I understand by "death unto death." Let us therefore be careful that we hold fast to, and contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, so that the power of God unto salvation (the Gospel) may be a means of adding eternal life to our present life, when we fall asleep.

Dear brethren, I shall be happy to give my views on these and kindred subjects at any time for what little they may be worth. Yours in Gospel union.

The Pious Youth.

Will it be a success? This is a question which (I do not doubt,) has arisen in many minds. All such enterprises, unsupported, fail, and brother Holsinger is not likely to produce a prodigy in this. Papers for youths and children can be obtained for less money than The Pious Youth can, and some regard this as sufficient reason for not subscribing for it. We cannot estimate the value of souls in dollars and cents, neither should we attempt to estimate the influence that may be brought to bear upon them, by this fallacious rule.

Paul admonishes us to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, by which I understand that we are to "instruct them in the ways of eternal life," or impart to them the principles of Christian truth; not shunning to declare unto them "the whole counsel of God." Are the periodicals and pamphlets for children now extant, judiciously conducted with reference to this solemn duty? Brethren who have examined them have, no doubt, noticed their defects.

It is not so much my purpose to reprove those pub lications, as it is to awaken in the brotherhood a deeper interest in the spiritual welfare of the rising generation. To this end we should withhold nothing useful, nor fail to make any reasonable sacrifice.

I regard The Pious Youth as a valuable auxiliary in awakening in youths an interest in their salvation. Its success necessarily depends on its patrons. The way to make it a cheap paper is to become a subscriber. As this is the only paper of its kind published by brethren, it ought to have an extensive circulation. When it is received and read at every fireside throughout the brotherhood, I suppose it will be furnished for less than half its present cost, or be increased in size and usefulness, or published semi monthly. As its list of subscribers increases from year to year I expect to see it increase, if my life and health be spared.

REMARKS.

We will allow our brethren and friends to say of the Youth what they think it deserves. We are glad to know that it is commended by most of those who have examined it. The question raised by brother Pearson is, will it be a success? We believe it will. What it needs is the co-operation of its friends.

"Continue in the Faith."

By D B Mentzer.

To continue in the Faith, and to contend earnestly for it, is not only a Christian obligation, but the test of true discipleship. If an individual engages in a certain pursuit or enterprise, and soon abandons it, it is evident that that individual is not suited to the engagement, or the engagement is not suited to him. This is a fact in the sphere of secular business, and we think it is similarly so in the sphere of the Christian Religion. If a person embraces the cause of Christianity, and makes a profession of it to the world at large, and after awhile becomes indifferent and reckless, it is manifest that that person is in such a condition that he does not delight in applying the means which are intended to perfect him, and fit him for a position among the Saints. A person who enlists in the Christian war, and becomes a soldier of the Cross, and then, in time of hardship or of an engagement, deserts the ranks of the Lord's Army, is not loyal to the Divine Government, not loyal to his own best interests, and does not enjoy the service of our blessed and gracious King Jesus. There are only two armies in this warfare, and to one we are lending our influence, if not exerting it directly in favor. Jesus and Apollyon are at war. He that deserts the Army of Jesus, gives more or less aid to Apollyon's cause. The cause of Jesus is the cause of salvation; the cause of Apollyon is the cause of ruin. How can any leave Christ's cause! If the heart were full of faith, and "the love of God shed abroad in the heart," no power in heaven, nor on earth, nor under the earth, could have potency enough to drive a soul from Christ's ranks as a deserter. An Apostle says: "Now abideth Faith, Hope, Charity,—these three; but the greatest of these is Charity." And we hold, if these do abide as a triune principle in a disciple of Jesus, he can never forsake Christ, but will steadfastly "continue in the Faith. It is by indifference to Christian duties, and the imbibation of false doctrines, that so many run away from the Camp of the Saints. O how pitiable is the condition of runaway Christians! O "backsliding Israel!" How can you depart from your God! How can you think of leaving "the Fountain of Living Waters!" How sad their course! If they had inscribed on their shield these blessed words, "Continue in the Faith," they would have been in the Faith today, or would have died in it. But these are examples, not to pattern after, but to warn the faithful of to-day. "Continue!" This is the word. This is the voice of Jesus, our blessed Leader.—First he said: "Come unto Me." We came.—Again he said: "Follow Me." I trust we are still following him in the path of Christian duty. But now it is said, "Continue." Yea, we must continue. We have the promise of a crown of righteousness, but we shall not receive it at the beginning, nor when we are half way on our journey to that "better country;" but if we are obedient and faithful, and continue in his service, we shall receive it. How we should guard against unfaithfulness and disobedience! "Take heed that no man take thy crown," says a voice from heaven; and to do this requires watching and continuing in the Faith. The crown will be ours if we "continue in the Faith."

But what is the Faith?

The circumstances which gave occurrence to the words of the subject of this essay, are briefly as follows: Paul and Barnabas, Gospel preachers well known to all who search the Scriptures, were preaching the Gospel in the province of Lycaonia in western or Minor Asia. They preached to Jews and Gentiles. They encountered many difficulties and endured much hardship.—But they preached the Word of the Lord boldly and in spirit of all opposing efforts; and this all ministers of the Gospel should do to-day. Notwithstanding the opposition, however, many believed. But when persecuted in one city they would flee to another, shaking off the dust from their feet (Acts 13: 51.), even as their beloved Master had commanded them. Matt. 10: 41. The tide was against them, but the "glorious gospel" was their theme, and they held it forth boldly. Acts 14: 3. They preached in Iconium, a city of Lycaonia, and there many believed. Acts 14: 1. It was at this place, and at Lystra and Antioch, that Barnabas and Paul, on their return from Derbe, "confirmed the souls of the disciples, and "exhorted them to continue in the Faith." Now what is alluded to when it is said they "exhorted them to continue in the Faith?" Is it not that which Paul and Barnabas had preached to them, and which they had believed? And did they not preach the Word of the Gospel? Had those believers not accepted Christ's doctrine or the Truth? Then what is the faith? I answer, It is "the doctrine of Christ."

Then, my dear Christian reader, "examine yourself and see whether you be in the Faith." See to it that your hopes of Heaven be based upon the immutable Word of Revelation. If in the doctrine of Christ, then I beg you "continue in the Faith. If not in it, get in as soon as you can. Let practical truth work in you like a hidden piece of leaven until you be entirely leavened and fitted for that glorious existence upon which the Saints enter when translated from this scene of suffering to the joys and bliss of Heaven. It is ours now to believe, to obey, and to "continue in the Faith." Will we just now lean upon the arm of the Lord and believe every word he says? Will we treasure his words in our hearts and make them the rules of our lives? Will we consecrate ourselves entirely to the Lord's service? May God help us to love and obey him, and "continue in the Faith."

Be Ye Ready.

Dear reader ; We are living in a solemn and fearful time. Angels are weighing the thoughts and actions of men, and very soon their cases will be decided. Where are you standing to-day? What course of life are you pursuing? Have you heeded the command that God has given "all men everywhere?" (Acts. 17 : 30) Are you one that has commenced its observance, but have not yet completed the work of reformation? Do you profess to be a free man in Christ Jesus, while at the same time you are bound down in almost—if not quite—absolute bondage to such habits as the use of intoxicating drinks, tobacco, and other narcotics which do you no real good, but on the contrary are sapping away the very life power of both mind and body? If so, do you not feel that you yet have a work to do before you are fully fitted for your Master's use, or are prepared to appear before the judgment bar of God? There is a great need of reform among professed believers in the speedy coming of Christ. The appetite and judgment of many are sadly perverted. Pride, lust of the eye, fashion, and the lust of the flesh are fitting some for destruction. God calls upon you to turn from these things. We are entering a time when you will have need of much patience. How can you be patient in all things? before we can obtain this christian grace we must add to our knowledge temperance. (2 Pet. 1 : 6.) Bible temperance is total abstinance from everything bad, and a moderate use of everything good. Beloved reader, do make one mighty effort in the name of the Lord, to free yourself from servitude to the lusts of the flesh, that you may enjoy the freedom of the gospel here, and obtain eternal life in the coming kingdom. Do not delay this work a moment longer, for soon it may be eternally too late.

Home.

"Sweetest bonds of friendship, here
Bind our hearts together ;
Where our fire-side comforts cheer,
In the wildest weather."

What a thrill of emotion awakes to life at the thought of home. What pleasing accents greet the ear at the sound of that word, in which is often embodied the memory of dear ones of earth. While roaming abroad through the wide world, amid the busy throng, how oft does the mind fly back to the spot we call home.—Should the gloomy cloud of sadness or sorrow cast its shade over the brow, how soon it is dispelled by the fond remembrance of dear ones at home, whom hope tells us we shall meet again.

In our late, long mission, truly did we often feel the force of the word, home. Amid the stir of busy life or in the presence of dear ones, we felt there was one place more dear than all others. Sweet were the moments we spent in communion and fellowship with brethren sisters and friends but our fondest endearments centred around those at home. Prompted by duty, encouraged by hope, and strengthened by faith in God we awaited patiently our time and at last arrived at home, our humble home or place of abode on earth. Knowing this world is not our home indeed, we look forth with bright anticipations of a heavenly home where we may meet all the dear ones of our heavenly Father's family in one universal association.

Dear brethren and sisters, we are on our pilgrimage now, we hope for a better country. And though we have seasons of joy here at times, let us look forward to the time our cup of joy may be full, when we arrive at home. Though the clouds of despondency seem at times to hover near, let us think of home in heaven and the dear ones there, and thus go on and stem the tide of sorrow and opposition—boldly face every obligation and duty. Cling to hope as our anchor, and having confidence in God we may be brought on until we arrive safely at home—sweet home in heaven! Happy the weary traveler as he nears his home on earth after a long absence—emotions of mingled joy and thankfulness spring up in his bosom when he sees at last the place he calls home. Thrice happy he is when he crosses the threshold once more and in signs of happy greeting he is welcomed home—home to the domestic circle where peace and happiness reign. But our pen can not portray the happiness of the heaven bound traveler as he nears his heavenly mansions, and sees at last the glorious city, and is ushered into the bosom of God's love, and hears the heavenly angels chanting in sweetest melody "welcome home!—Home at last in Heaven!"

"Glory to God, all our dangers are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore ;
Glory to God ! we will shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last."

The Reporter Question.

For the satisfaction of our friends who still keep writing upon the Reporter Question, we will say that we do not wish to press the matter any farther for the present. The arguments have been about exhausted, which is evident from brother Miller's vindication in the January Visitor. Of personalities we have had enough.

We still think that we ought to have the privilege of laying before our readers as much of the business of our Annual Council, which is given to the public assembly, as we can gather, and in the most accurate and reliable manner. But we have ventured enough upon our own responsibility. If our patrons desire such a report let them obtain our permission to take it, and we will serve them cheerfully. It is surely not of any more interest to us than it is to them.

And as the time is approaching for the District Meetings to be held, we would propose that it be laid before the churches and considered, and the Delegates to the District Meetings be instructed to give their influence in favor or against, as the congregation may decide. In like manner the District Delegates may be instructed.

The congregations need not discuss the evangelicity or propriety of taking the report. The main question with them will be: do they want to read it? If they do let them say so through their representatives, as they have a right to do. If they do not, we cannot see why we should spend our means, and expose ourself to such merciless abuse for the sake of obtaining it. We have started the ball, and now our friends may keep it moving.

To those of our correspondents who wished to reply to brother R. H. Miller's article in the January No. of the Visitor, we wish to say, that we do not feel half as badly under brother Miller's strictures as they may suppose. We were prepared for such attacks in the debating schools, and in the political canvass. We have left that field of literature, and perhaps brother Miller will be pursuaded to leave it also, if none of his brethren will follow him. We will see.

56—Johnstown—46.

Our readers will hardly understand the above; but we can make it very clear to them. On page 56 of our supscription book is the list for Johnstown, Pa., and there are 46 names on it. We are required to refer to it so often, in order to enter a new name, or renew an old one, that we remember the page on which it is found. Forty-six subscribers to one office we regard as a very good list. And yet there are no doubt plenty other offices that might do as well. The brethren at Johnstown are not wealthy, but they are zealous, which prompts them to read. Our next large lists are at Meyers Mills, Berlin, Conemaugh, Scalp Level, Martinsburg, Clover Creek, Lewistown, and McVeytown, in Pennsylvania; Goshen and Huntington, Indiana. Ashland, Ohio, and Waterloo, Iowa. Martinsburg and Clover Creek, which were one office until within a few years ago, have 61 names. By the time we get another thousand names on our books, we may remember the pages of other offices.

Here we are once more, friendly readers, brimful, "pressed down, shaken together, and running over." We will gather that which has run over, and press it into our next. We have never had so much interest and life in the secular department of paper as at present. A general awakening seems to have taken place, almost over the entire Brotherhood. This is pleasing to us, beyond expression; and our prayer is that it may so continue. Brethren and sisters, suffer "neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature," to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

There are still others who have not been heard from. May we not hope for them. What are you doing brothers and sisters, and what do you want to have done for you?

DAVID ULREY. We have the Debate on Immersion, between Quinter and Snyder. I know of but one edition, and suppose therefore it is the first edition. Price post paid 75cts.

JOHN MCCLINTOCK. The money was received. Missing Nos. have been sent; also specimens of Youth.

K. HECKMAN. It will be all right now.

G. W. SWINE. Yes; your subscription is paid for Volume 6.

B. BASHOR. You will see that brother Weybright stepped in before you. Try some of the other questions.

"WHY AM I NOT A CHRISTIAN?" was published on page 761, of last volume.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Holsinger; I don't believe in you doing all the charitable deeds, and hope you will allow me to have a share in sending the Companion to the poor sister in Michigan, whose letter you published in No. 7, for which purpose I send the dollar, which you will find enclosed. How hard it must be to be so poor and lonely.

A SISTER.

The above letter enclosed a dollar which we have placed to the credit of the sister referred to. We knew somebody would pay that subscription.

And so it has turned out. We also acknowledge the receipt of a dollar from a friend at Mechanicsburg, Pa., to be appropriated to some one who has not the "privilege of hearing the Brethren preach so frequently." We have placed it to the credit of a brother in the wilds of West Va., and we hope it will result in a blessing to both giver and receiver.

Mr. Holsinger; In Companion current volume, page 77, you solicit subscribers through the influence of those already reading the Companion, and that you expected something from every subscriber; stating, "we mean you—you who are just now reading, you brother, you sister." This might be understood to exclude those readers of the Companion who are not brothers and sisters from co-operating in the good cause of circulating the Companion. I, as a friend and reader of the Companion, was just then reading, and being brought to reflect a moment, went to work and secured for you one new subscriber. Please find enclosed name and address and $1.50. This will make one toward the one thousand subscribers you say you ought to have to put you on "good, living, working footing" hoping others may do the same.

CHRISTIAN G. WINEY.

East Salem, Pa.

Thank you friend Winey for your kind response. We confess that when we wrote the words which you quote, we did not just then think of our friends who are not brethren and sisters. But that was really no fault of ours. All good people, who feel an interest in the good cause ought to be brethren and sisters; for we are either a miserable fanatic, or all who are outside of the Church of God are in a dangerous condition: and especially those who know their duty. And yet there are many such. Nicodemus-like, they know the Prophet, and they love to be with him after night, but are still not willing to give up themselves and become a new creature, and thus become joint heirs with Christ and his people. But we hope wisdom will prevail.

Here, then, is one subscriber toward the thousand, and one response to our urgent appeal, and that from one who is not joined with us by that endearing term brother and sister. We will add the two sent by brother Aukerman who was the occasion of our former note (not that we would not still allow him to send another one) and another handed in through a friend in our town. We will take the responsibility of getting one by our own influence, and then to make the number even we will say we have ten toward the number. So we will yet want nine hundred and ninety new subscribers. A pretty "big job," but then think of the number of workers. We have over three thousand patrons. If it will take three to persuade one person to take the paper we would still have the number. Only 990 more. Brethren, sisters, and FRIENDS, shall we have them. We ought to have them—we really ought to have them. And not that alone, but the people ought to have the paper. If it is good for you to have it, it is just as good for others. They can be had if every one will do as this friend did, "reflect a moment" and then go to work. But do not leave it for another. Let every reader take it for him or herself—no matter what their station. Everybody has some influence. Now, then, who will be the next?

Brother Holsinger; I have often thought of subscribing for the Companion, but it never happened till last week I was urged on by brother Joseph Heckler, and a few days after I received 6 of them, and am so well pleased with them that I would not do without them if they would cost two or three times the money, and I think every family ought to have it. I saw one piece in it that I think is worth the cost for one year. My children want me to send for the Pious Youth: so please send it with the Companion.

JACOB D. MOYER.

Kulpsville, Pa.,

Three Thousand Six Hundred.

Not a very large number certainly, yet not so very small, either. Thirty-six hundred subscribers for "The Companion," and I think we may safely estimate double that number of anxious readers since it is a family companion.

Seven thousand two hundred is then, we presume, the number who receive consolation and instruction from the same source, weekly. Socially considered this is cheering to meditate upon. Will we not bring our social faculties into action as we take up our "Companion" to read lessons of love and truth, calculated to "encourage the true christian on his way to Zion?" Will we not think of the large number who are associated with us in reading the same truths, and gathering information from the same source?

Seven thousand of God's creatures bound together in the bonds of christian charity, actuated by similar desires, reading doctrine and exercising the same faith. Brethren! may we not congratulate ourselves in having such a powerful agent for good in the brotherhood? And should we not aid in extending its circulation and thus increase its usefulness? If we are desirous of doing good we could not well choose a better field for action. The press has become a power in the land. Through its instrumentality, truth or error, may be disseminated among the masses more thoroughly and effectually than it can be done in any other manner. Should not, therefore, all who have an interest in the promulgation of truth exert their influence in extending the usefulness of the Christian Family Companion? It is what it professes to be, a disseminator of truth, and an exponent of error.

Let the Press and the Desk become co-workers in disseminating the glad tidings of the Gospel throughout all this broad land, and let us hope that through their instrumentality many souls may yet be brought to a knowledge of the truth, ere it is forever too late.

Mallesbury, O.

BROOKLYN, IOWA, }
Feb. 18th, 1870. }

Brother Henry: By request I will give a short sketch of my visit amongst the brethren in the far west. I left Brooklyn, Iowa, on the night train, Jan. 10th. On the morning of the 11th; met brother C. Long, at Avoca. The brethren of Shelby county met us here, and conveyed us to their place of meeting, 12 miles. Had meeting twice each day, till Monday, the 17th. Had very interesting meetings here. Brother Long returned home from here. Brother W. Wyland and I took the train westward. Arrived at Council Bluffs at 8 o'clock at night. Took the train on the 18th at Omaha City, for Fremont, Nebraska. Arrived there about noon. Brethren met us there according to previous arrangement. Held council with them in the afternoon. Elected one speaker. The choice fell upon brother David O. Brumbaugh. Meeting at night in the Court house, in Fremont, 19th. Took the train for Missouri Valley, Iowa. Met the brethren and friends, and visited with my brothers, L. S. Snyder and John E. Snyder; also two sisters living here. Meeting at St. John. 21st. Evening meeting. 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 10 miles north of St. John. Brother Wyland left for home on the 24th. Had very interesting meetings here; much interest manifested by the people. They were only organized here last October, and are much in want of experienced ministers to help them along. Brethren that are traveling west will do well to stop here and preach for them. Held meetings in this vicinity until the evening of the 2nd of February. Took the train for Crescent city, 9 miles north of Council Bluffs. Found five members. Preached a funeral here, also meeting at night. Brother C. Heastow conveyed me (and brother L. S. Snyder) to Council Bluffs. At 6 A. M. took train East for Altoona, Iowa. Arrived there at two P. M. Stopped here with brother G. R. Baker and Elder Samuel Garber. Attended four meetings here. The brethren here are in a flourishing condition. Took train on the afternoon of the 7th of February for Brooklyn, and arrived at home at five P. M. Found all well; thank the Lord for his goodness.

FALLS CITY, Neb., }
Feb. 13, 1870. }

Brother Henry: I have subscribed for the Companion the second year. I love to read it. It brings to me much good news, and often when needed most. How consoling is it to the weary traveler when he feels his imperfections so heavily upon him, that he almost feels to say: "O Lord, is there any other brother on earth like I am; so poor and needy?" I can truly say that when I read the Companion and hear the dear brethren talk to us by way of exortation, warning and encouragement, it causes my heart to rejoice to think that we have such brethren that feel a concern for the welfare of the church. Come all my dear brethren and sisters; let us all put our shoulders to the wheel, and then the work will move easily. We are here in the Far West. The brethren are strangers here. I came to see Nebraska in company with three more brethren, in June, 1868. Inquired for brethren; heard of one but did not see him, but felt more like home to me after hearing that one brother had bought land in the county which we liked best. We then concluded we would buy lands near him and move to Richardson county, Nebraska. In the spring of 1869, my three partners moved here. This last October I came here, and we now number forty members. We had a Lovefeast the 16 and 17 of October. Found some more members that had lived here, but the most moved here last spring. The people here appear to think that the brethren teach the true doctrine, and I think if we as members show the light as we should, much good can be done. We have meeting every Sunday; have our quarterly councils, and have three speakers, but a large field to labor in. We will have ten more members moving in by spring. Only two were added by baptism here. We invite brethren that would like to come west to come and give us a visit, and especially ministering brethren. We have a healthy climate; winter mild and short.

P. MYERS.

For the Companion.

From a Father to his Son.—An old Minister to a Beginner.

The following is part of a private letter, written by brother Joseph Myers to his son in the west. By the advice of some brethren it is sent for publication.

Dear son: According to promise I will try to give you some advice how to conduct yourself in your new and all-important office. In your letter you say that you never felt your weakness before as you have since you were called to that duty. (to the ministry) You further say "that if it is the will of the Lord that you should declare his word, you must depend on Him to give you mouth and wisdom." This is about as near right as you can do for a beginning. Remember King Solomon when he was made king, he felt as though he were a little child, he did not know how to go out or to come in: he therefore prayed to the Lord "to give him an understanding heart that he might discern between good and bad;" and we find that the Lord was well pleased and answered his prayer, and much more too. Our object should be the glory of God and the salvation of the souls of men, and not our own glory or the praise of men to have it said that we are great preachers. Now I think this is understood so far; and next I will try to give you some of the rules that I have learned by experience.

First and foremost try to make yourself acquainted with the word of God, and do not depend too much upon the order of the brethren; and then when you have the word on your side you are safe. I suppose you are aware that I had to pass through many a storm and so far I came out right.

In the next place try always to be honest and upright, and when you speak at all speak what you believe, and do not act the hypocrite, to say one thing when you mean another. And next beware of egotism : speak seldom if ever of yourself in public, and don't weave your own exploits into your sermons.

And next, do not always be hammering those that differ with us on religious matters, but always try to preach the word, as the Apostle says, "whether in season or out of season." Never make it a fashion to tell many stories or narratives ; rather do as the Bible says, "the prophet that has a dream let him tell a dream, and he that has my word let him speak it faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat saith the Lord." Jer. 23 : 28.

If it should be the case that something did happen that is worth telling, tell it once or twice with as few words, and as correctly as possible, and do not always tell the same story at the same place and to the same people a dozen times over.

And next when you get to a place of meeting where more and older preachers come together, try to find out which is considered the upper and lower end of the table, and sit down to the lower end, as long as you are young; if they want you higher up to a more suitable place to address the congregation, they will tell you so, and then go and be not too backward when you are called on duty. And again, try and find out yourself when your time is ; some brethren sometimes will try younger brethren. (not a very good plan.)

If you have not commenced yet to rise up and address the congregation by the time this will reach you, delay not any longer ; whenever an opportunity presents itself, try to improve it. Do not try to preach long sermons at first, but come to the point at once, and as you get better used to it, you can venture a little farther from shore. If you get along pretty well, do not be exalted in your own mind, but give God the praise.

You will make nothing by keeping back too long. Go to work at once ; only try to keep in the proper course. Let us be faithful to the end, then a crown of righteousness is promised to us. You will now find that sometimes when your duty calls you from home, you and your family will have to suffer some inconveniences ; in this you will have to deny yourself and look forward for your reward ; but I think there is a medium in all things. I read in the Companion that one of our preachers spent 400 dollars out of his own pocket, and ruined himself in six years. This is not wise. I would advise you to subscribe for the Companion, it will give you much information ; it will cost only $1.50 a year. A specimen copy sent free. We are all well, &c.

JOSEPH MYERS.

York, Pa.

Our Visit.

My wife and I left home on the 9th of February to visit our friends in Huntington county, this state. We landed in the city of Huntington at eleven o'clock P. M. where our brother-in-law met us. My wife accompanied him to his home, and I stayed with brother D. B. Hoover in the city. Took the train on the morning of the 10th for Antioch. Attended the school-meeting of which a previous notice was given in the Companion. The results of this meeting will be offered for publication. On the 11th I was conveyed by brother A. H. Snowberger to the Salimony congregation. In the evening attended meeting in their new and commodious house of worship. This house is fifty feet wide and eighty long, with a basement under the entire house, and a room in the upper story of 12 feet off one end for holding consultation, &c.

On the evening of the 11th house was well nigh filled. We spoke as God gave ability. Quite an interest manifested. On the following day elder Samuel Murray, who presides over this church, delivered a funeral discourse on the death of sister Downy, to a large and attentive audience. In the evening we tried to preach again. Had a good congregation, so we continued holding meetings until the evening of the 15th, during which time we received seventeen members by baptism, and many others almost persuaded to turn in with proffered mercy. It will no doubt be remembered by the reader that this church was our former home. This is the place where the writer was called to the ministry, and where he labored for 10 years. So you can form some idea of the emotions of my mind when once more meeting with so many loving brethren and sisters. It certainly was a season long to be remembered by us all. We never will forget the many "God bless you brother Smith," while the tears flowed from our eyes. Oh brethren, if this was a happy meeting what will be the happiness when we meet in the upper and celestial world where we will not have to shed the parting tear as we did at the end of our last meeting. Go on brethren and sisters, it will not be long until we will be done with our meeting and parting.

The members of this church were much revived, and manifested considerable interest in our common course. We would advise all of them to subscribe for the Companion and Youth, and as some of our new members have well cultivated minds we would suggest the idea to them of contributing something for publication. Don't forget this brethren ; it is what makes our papers interesting. What would we do without church literature? We wonder sometimes how our old brethren got along without ; but everything is so different now to what it was, that we expect they did as well as we do now.

A few words to all the members of the Salimony branch, on the subject of dress, a subject of more importance than some admit. Brethren and sisters ; as one who feels a deep interest in your welfare, let me admonish you to conform to the simplicity of the Apostolic church, and your adorning, let it be of that character which has ever been a feature of true christianity. Your brother in Christ.

Notes of Travel.

By Elder J. S. Flory.

I last wrote while at brother A. Garber's, Augusta county, Va. Brother B. A. Garber took me to his home on the evening of the 26th January, and to the brick meeting house next morning. After meeting brother and cousin Levi Stoner took me to his home; meeting at night in the Methodist meeting house, at New Hope. Next day cousin L. Stoner took me to Barren Ridge meeting house; after services went home with cousin Joseph Flory, who in the evening took me to brother Yount's, at whose house there was an evening meeting, by request of old sister Myers, who is living there. She is afflicted with a severe cancer. Next morning parted with brother John Harshberger, a young brother in the ministry who was with me several days, and assisted in the work. Cousin J. Flory took me to the house of George Hollars, from where cousin M. Hollar took me to the old Homestead. After spending a few hours at that place where I spent fourteen years of my childhood days, I went to sister Susan Wright's, where I met with a kind reception. Meeting next day at the Brethren's meeting house near Pudding Spring, at which point I met with many of my former associates and school mates, whom I had not seen for 12 years. Was rejoiced to meet them once more and to find some of them brethren and sisters in the Lord. Took dinner with Friend W. C. Hedrick, near Parnassus, who took me to brother Jacob Zigler's, where there was a night meeting. Brother S. Driver took me to Brother Hoover's for dinner, and in the evening to his home. Found his children afflicted with the measles. Next day, the 1st of February, in company with brother Driver, went to Staunton where I tarried until 4:30 P. M., when I took the train for White Sulphur Springs, where I arrived at 10 o'clock at night. Soon after left in the stage for Meadow Bluff, Greenbrier county, West Va., where I arrived at 11 A. M. next day. Meeting at the house of brother D. Frantz, at night. Next morning in company with brother C. Masters, of Fayette county, who came to meet me, we started on horseback for our last meeting point, which was in the bounds of my own congregation, Fayette county. Arrived at brother George Masters at 4 P. M., where we met with a warm reception. After supper went to place of appointment, which was at the house of brother D. Howel. I was truly rejoiced to meet once more with those so closely connected by the ties of Christian fellowship. Next morning brother A. Hollowday kindly accompanied me on my way across New River, and I arrived at home at 4 P. M., of the 4th of February, in good health, and found my dear family all enjoying the same blessing. Thanks to the Lord for his kind protection over me and mine. Truly he has remembered us and answered the many prayers that went up in our behalf. Blessed be his holy name for his great love and mercy extended to us. To him we render our most sincere acknowledgement for our well being for it was his Almighty arm that shielded us from all harm. And to all those dear ones that were as instruments in the hands of the Lord, and by him made so willing to encourage us and to administer to our necessities while on our journey, we can say we tender grateful thanks, and pray the Lord to bless them all, and may the sweet breathings of the Holy Spirit of the Lord Jesus whisper: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, my disciples, ye have done it unto me."

I was absent from home three months and twenty-two days, traveled through ten States, a distance of 4020 miles, and attended and preached at 110 meetings. Whether any good was affected I know not, the Lord giveth the increase. To him we appeal for a blessing on all that was done agreeably to his holy will. Amen

To Catharine Longenecker.

Dear Sister: Without any personal acquaintance with you, merely knowing that we are one in Christ, is sufficient to allow me to address you. I noticed in the Companion your inquiry in regard to New York, and thought I would gladly impart what little knowledge I possess, in regard to the question. I lived in the city of New York six years, and was searching diligently all the while for the brethren, but my searches were all in vain, I found none. I have often thought of it, and wonder why they do not go there. I became much attached to the city, and many of its people, but I fear there are few there who would give an ear to the plain doctrine of Christ. I at length prevailed upon my husband to move to Philadelphia, that I might have the privilege of uniting myself with the Church, which I did two months after I arrived here; was baptized in the Delaware river, four years ago this winter. I would have preferred New York as my home, provided I could have had the blessed privilege of meeting with the brethren, which I now so much enjoy. But all the cities of this world are but dust and ashes, compared with my love for Christ, which is over all and above all. I seek a city yet to come, a house not made with hands. I often think of our colored brother, John T. Lewis, who wrote a letter for the Companion a few weeks ago. I deeply sympathize with him, for I know there are no brethren where he is, nor in any part of New York State. Oh! let us be up and doing, for we know not how soon the Master will call. I want to occupy till he comes. I don't want to be weighed and found wanting. Let us put on the whole armor that we may be able to stand. Your sister in Christ.

Friend George. Hipple; as we have been old acquaintances I was glad to hear that sister Sarah, your wife, takes the Companion (Vol. 6 page 78) in which you will find much wholesome reading. I was well pleased to hear that you solicited the brethren to come "down here" to preach. Down where? You forgot to mention the State and county you live in. I hope the Lord will direct our ministering brethren that way, to teach all nations to the edification of bringing many souls to God. SARAH STEM.

Answer to Query 1st in No. 2.

In order to understand the nature of the language used in the 19 chapter of Matthew, 23d, and 24th verses, we must reason some from history. At the entrances to walled cities in ancient days there were two gates, one within another, the small one was called a wicket gate for footmen to pass through. Wicket means small. So a needle's eye means small. And it is evident that the small gate is not for camels to enter, but if a traveler were to come to the city after the hour of closing the main gate, having a camel with him, there was no entrance for the beast, yet if the animal was stripped of all its burden, with much labor, if it was small, it might enter.

Read the 29th verse. "Every one that forsake houses, or brethren, sisters, father, mother, wife, children, or lands, for my name's sake." So if we love any object more than Christ, we are not worthy of him, and like the camel we must become small (if we are elevated by riches) before we can enter, and also disrobe ourselves of the burden that hinders our entrance before we can enter. Therefore we must humble ourselves at the foot of the cross, and be willing to give our energies to the worship of God, rather than to the accumulation of wealth. WM. SADLER.

Queries.

We are desirous of an explanation on Matth. 23 : 15, which reads as follows: Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves. The idea is this, how can a proselyte be two-fold more a child of hell, than a scribe, a Pharisee or hypocrite, which made him such. Will some kind brother or sister please give an explanation through the Companion?

Errata.

In Companion page 70, 1st column, in my contribution you have it: "not satisfied with having muzzled the 'pairs;'" it should be press, instead of pairs.

Same page, a little further on you have that we may "enjoy" one another; should be edify one another.

71st page, 1st column, should be run out into many avenues, instead of "with" many avenues.

Same page, only a little further on, to put on the genuine garb of 'Christ;' should read genuine garb of charity. By making the above corrections you will oblige

Yours fraternally,
P. S. NEWCOMER.

Correction.

I am authorized to say, through the Companion to the brethren, especially those coming to the district meeting of the middle district of Indiana, to be held in the lower Deer Creek congregation, that the name of the station, to stop off at, is Rockfield, instead of Rockville. R. YOUNG.

Announcements.

The next Annual Meeting will be held in the Brethren's meeting-house, 4 miles south of the city of Waterloo, Black Hawk County, Iowa, and will begin on Tuesday after Pentecost, June 7th, next.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Salimony congregation, Huntingdon county, Ind., (time not given) sister SARAH DOWNY, wife of brother I. J. Downy, aged 43 years, 2 months, and 4 days. Disease, consumption. The occasion was improved by Elder Samuel Murray and the writer.

She was a member of the church over twenty years. In her last days she expressed her confidence in her Savior, and told her friends not to weep for her, that she was going home, and with her last breath calling on the name of her Master. She leaves a Husband and family of children. She is gone to rest. DANIEL SMITH.

In the Hamilton congregation, Davis county, Mo., (time not given) MARGARET EMILY, infant daughter of brother Thomas and sister Mary Ann WILLIAMS; aged 5 months, and 10 days. Funeral discourse by Elder George Witwer, from Matthew 18: first four verses. WILLIAM B. SELL.

Near Pontiac, Ill., Jan. 23rd, of lung fever, ALICE, wife of Wm. N. MICHAEL, and daughter of Samuel and Harriet Stone, of Washington county, Ohio; aged 26 years. She leaves an infant seven weeks old, a kind husband, and many relatives and friends to mourn our loss, which, we trust, is her great gain.

Her remains were conveyed to her father's house in Center Belpre, Ohio, and were interred in the family burying grounds, on the 27th. MOSES BILLHEIMER.

In the Elklick branch Somerset Co. Pa., February 29th, sister SALLY HAWN; aged 65 years, 5 months, and 26 days. Funeral attended and improved by the writer and brother Jonathan Kelso.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Battling for Heaven.

Our conflicts and trials will soon have an end,
But, while we are fighting, the Lord is our friend;
Then 'midst all the battle we need have no fear,
The comforting spirit will always be near
To shield us, to guard us—our glorious light,
Providing we keep in the path of the right.
Then, cheerfully singing, the Lord is our friend,
We'll march boldly forward 'till this life shall end.

And when we shall enter that happified rest,
Made ready by Jesus, among all his blest,
We'll meet all the ransomed who've gone on before,
Who are singing and waiting, on yonder bright shore;
All clothed in fair raiment, washed white in the blood
Of Jesus, our Savior, our Captain, our God.
All praise be to Him who our pardon has bought,
And helped us in all the souls' battles we've fought.

Come on, Christian brother, come fight your way thro,'
Keep Jesus' bright banner each moment in view.
Come all, who are seeking His blessing to know;
Doubt not, he will save you, if to him you'll go.
His spirit will give you the power to fight,—
Come join in the ranks with his children to-night.
Soon, soon, all the battle and soul-strife will cease,
And then we will enter the mansions of Peace.

The Narrow Way.

Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matthew 7: 13

So Jesus taught. But teachers in every age have taught a broad way and wide gate, and multitudes have readily received their doctrine. This is an awful truth. Therefore Jesus adds, "Beware of false prophets." It is the soul prerogative of the King of Saints to open a gate and make a way to his own Kingdom. Glory to our God, who in sovereign grace and everlasting love hath done this! And the Gospel proclaims; welcome, come, who will; enter freely, without money and without price. Jesus is the one strait gate of God's love, the only way of righteousness. By him we can enter into access with God. Stand perfectly justified and graciously accepted before him. Jesus is the narrow way, by the Blood of the Cross he hath made peace and atonement for the sins of the transgressors, by the one offering. Hence it it called strait and narrow, because the only way to life is by one man, one righteousness, one atonement.—Thus it is a gate of love, a way of grace, too strait a gate for blind men to see, too narrow for proud, self-righteous, natural men to submit or walk in. Hence few there be that find it.—But awful to think that whoever takes any other way or seeks to enter by any other gate, goeth in the broad road to everlasting destruction. That he is bold and confident is no proof that he is right; but a sign that he is blind deceiver, for "the way of a fool is right in his own eyes." Prov. 14: 12. But whosoever enters the kingdom by Jesus, feeds in the pastures of life, drinks of the river of consolation. Thus the Holy Spirit leads the blind by the way they knew not, even Christ, the right way to peace, love happiness, eternal life, and Salvation. Thus to a little flock it is the Father's good pleasure to give the kingdom. By his word he directs them, by his Spirit he guides them, by his love he comforts them; by afflictions humbles them. All this is to make them walk in through Christ, who is "the way, the truth, and the life." John 14: 6.

A Chance to Save Money.

As saving money is a great struggle with the majority of mankind, I thought perhaps a good plan, to save money, given free of charge, would be very acceptable to such as love to save. The papers of to-day are filled with advertisements how to make money, but the best one I ever read to save money was that of brother Harper in behalf of the Church in Ray Co., Mo., in Companion No. 8. Here, brethren, is a place to save our spare dollars. Here is an opening to make a deposit in the bank of Heaven: and there our money must be safe. It cannot be otherwise, for moth, nor rust, nor thieves, or fire cannot reach it. But you will not get it back in this life. So much the better, for if you would get it back it might not be saved, but as it is it will be that much sent for your enjoyment in the life to come. And you should think about that too, and let not all your time and talents be devoted to things here. All that we can take with us to the next world is what we give away in good faith while in this. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon the earth," &c. "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." Matt. 6: 19, 21. You will get no promissory note. Still better; for it will be placed to your credit on the imperishable pages of that book where angels write. Notes are in themselves a sign of frailty or dishonesty. Just consider the dangers attending them. They are perishable. The giver is perishable, and is likely to become insolvent; the voucher is subject to the same decline; and you share the same fate. So you should esteem it a great privilege to deposit your money where there is no dishonesty, no danger of insolvency; and where even natures final fires cannot reach it.

The interest you get daily, and as much as you wish to draw. "Religion has its own rewards. It gives more than it takes. It more than compensates for all that we surrender. It gives peace, joy, comfort in trial and in death, and heaven beyond."

The brethren in Bay Co., Mo., want a home to worship in, and a place where they can say to the poor wayfarer: come with us and worship the Lord in his appointed ways. They need assistance in this noble work, and we are bound be the ties of fraternal love to extend to them a helping hand. God has given the Church abundant means to carry on his work, and as this is about the only way that we are going into the missionary work, let us not neglect it. We have yet but one meeting-house in the state of Mo, and a large field "white already to harvest." Brethren we know not how soon the Master of solemn assemblies will come, therefore we should make all possible efforts to prepare a people for his coming.

As a general thing, calls for help like this, are responded to by a few, but the majority heed it not. But let that practice be among the things of the past. When a call is made for help, be assured that help is needed, and let all who can, give a little. A little from each one would be a great help to the brethren there.—We should feel as much concerned for the cause of Christ in Missouri, as we do for it any place else.

JAMES A. SELL.

Selected for the Companion.

Looking unto Jesus.

Such is man's nature, such are his wants, trials, and destiny, that the Lord Jesus Christ has for his sake assumed various offices and titles.—Does man feel his helplessness, that he cannot of himself do anything that is good, he is invited to look from self to Jesus, as the mighty God; "Look unto me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth, for besides me there is no God."—While others look at their own weakness, at the difficulties of the way, at the strength and number of their foes, the man of light looks from these to Jesus. Is he tempted to think that after all he shall never see the king in his beauty, he may look to Jesus as advocate with the Father, who takes care of his interest in the court of heaven, and who is no less watchful over his affairs below. Does he need a subject calculated to fill his mind with mean ideas of self, he looks to Jesus as the wonderful! wonderful indeed! In his birth, in his life, in his death, in his resurrection and ascension, he is wonderful; in his character, in his operations, both of nature and of grace; in drowning, softening, sanctifying and glorifying the believer, he is wonderful. O, the depth, both of the wisdom and the goodness of God! Does he find the affairs of earth too intricate for him, and that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, he looks to Jesus as the Counsellor who is able to guide the feet of his saints in the time of trouble. The Christian looks to his Counsellor and finds him "a very present help," and no expensive charges or ruinous issues follow. He looks to Jesus as the Author or Beginner of faith, who has called him to be a Christian; who has pointed out to him the proper path of duty, and who will at last award to him a crown of righteousness.

Are his trials many, is his cross heavy, he considers Jesus who endured the cross, and despised the shame. Is he poor, the Son of man had nowhere to lay his head. Is he rich, for the rich are also called, he considers him who was rich and for our sakes became poor. Is he persecuted, he looks to Jesus, owns the cross, and prays "Father forgive them." Thus he looks from earthly glory to that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory that fadeth not away."

Sin of Blasphemy.

BROTHER HOLSINGER: I see in the Companion No. 8. Page 126, that D. L. Fisher would like to have some one of the brethren's views on Matthew 12th chapter 31st, and 32nd, verses, which alluded to the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. In the first place he wishes to know what sin is it. By the help of my Heavenly Father and in his fear, I will give the brother my views on that subject. I believe that the sin to which the Savior referred was then committed, and that by the Pharisees, from the fact that they did malignantly ascribe to satan what was known to them to be the works of the Spirit of God, by charging the Savior with casting out devils by beelzebub the prince of devils. That caused him to express himself in the way and manner he did, in reference to the sin of the Holy Ghost. I believe that many of the Pharisees did believe that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but in consequence of their pride and prejudice it would not permit them to acknowledge him to be their Savior and Redeemer; hence they did all they possibly could against him and his cause. And as that was the case with them they were not willing to give the Savior any credit for any of his good works to the children of men; but ascribed to the works of Satan that which I believe they knew was from God. We read in Mark 3: 29, 30: "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness, but is in danger of eternal damnation, because they said he hath an unclean spirit."—So we can plainly see that they wished to convey the idea that the Savior through satanic influence works these miracles.

The reason why I believe that the sin committed against the Holy Ghost will never be forgiven in this world, neither in the world to come, is because they who commit this sin have set to naught the only Savior through which they can be saved. W. H. FRANKLIN.

The Will.

What a blessed gift. All gifts of God are good; but when we examine our gifts and talents we find none more important than the gift of free moral agency. God very wisely formed us, but left us to will for ourselves, either for the better or worse. What is it that we cannot do if we will? Many things. But let us stay in the bounds of reason and consistency. We can be wise if we will; we can love God if we will; we can love our brethren if we will; we can love our neighbors if we will; we can love our enemies if we will; we can be honest if we will; we can be industrious if we will; we can be in comfortable circumstances if we will; we can be happy, at home, abroad, and at all times, if we will; we can be, and have, good neighbors if we will. We can train our children to behave well in society, love and obey us, if we will. We can obey all of God's commandments if we will.—We can be saved in Christ's Kingdom if we will. To all of those wills there is an opposite will, and to both a great result is at issue. It would be well to consider both. May the God of our being help us to do the will that will be for our eternal good.

Excuses.

How many excuses does satan suggest to retain his captives, and how readily do they adopt and use them when urged to shake off his yoke, and submit themselves to Jesus as their Lord.—Some say, when thus appealed to: "I see so many faults in those who profess to be Christians." Others: "I am not as yet good enough to begin to follow Christ." Others; "I am not satisfied that I need anything more than good resolutions and moral conduct to fit me for heaven." Others: "I must wait the Lord's time; when he sees fit, he will call me into his kingdom." Others: "I am not sure that, with my temptations and position in the world, I can become pious at all." And still others will reply: "I am not ready yet; there is a time for all things, and after I have enjoyed the world a little more, I may be brought to a religious life."

Sometimes some such excuse becomes so plausible, that he who employs it thinks it to be a sufficient reason why he should remain impenitent. And often those who have become in some degree penitent thus obtain what seem satisfactory arguments for absenting themselves from the helpful ordinances to which real believers are invited.

Faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful.—(Solomon.

Trine Immersion.

Treating of this subject, in the first place it becomes necessary to prove that there are three distinct persons in the God-head. The first proof of this fact we shall offer, is recorded in the book of Genesis 1: 26, where God says "let us make man." This goes to prove beyond a reasonable contradiction, that there were more than one, for when God speaks he means just what he says.

Secondly; we hear the Savior on a certain occasion say: "I was with the Father (which means God) from the foundation of the world," which goes to prove that the Father and Son are two distinct persons, the preposition (with) expressing a mutual relation between the two.

Next we pass on to the baptism of the Savior. Here we have a plain demonstration of these distinct persons, two of whom were seen, while the third one was heard to speak; viz; while the Son was in the water, the Holy Spirit descended in the bodily shape of a dove and lighted upon him; while at the same time the Father's voice was heard: "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

Also in the Apostolic benediction 2 Cor. 13; 14; "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Spirit, be with you all." I might cite the readers to a great many more proofs, but do not deem it expedient for the present; but will now pass on to the commission recorded in Matthew 28: 29, which is the only formula for baptism that we find in the Bible, and which is used by all ministers in administering baptism.

"Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name (or by the authority) of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." Now I want my readers to bear in mind that it is admitted by all scholars that this commission is a complex sentence, composed of one subject and three attributes. Also that every complex sentence has something understood, which must be brought out in analyzing or parsing. I will now proceed to analyze or parse the commission.

"Go ye therefore" (for this reason because all power is given to me in heaven and in earth).—"Go ye, and teach ye." are two simple sentences, the verbs go and teach being in the imperative mood, implying a command. Baptizing is an active participle, from the word baptize: has the pronoun them for its object (which represents nations). In is a preposition and shows the relation between its antecedent, "them," and its subsequent "name." And here I would remark that every preposition must have both an antecedent and a subsequent term of relation, either expressed or understood, both of which must be named in parsing. "Name" is a noun, the object of the preposition 'in.' "Of" is another preposition showing the relation between name and Father; and "Father"' is the object of the preposition "of." Thus we have got through with the first action without any trouble. Now for the second.

"And of the Son." "And" is a conjunction connecting the two sentences or actions. "Of" is a preposition, and must have an antecedent term of relation; and what can it be else than this: "and in the name of the Son?" Then name becomes its antecedent term again as before; but now we have another preposition "in," which also must have an antecedent term, and in order to get the antecedent to "in" it necessarily brings in the whole sentence again: "and baptizing them in the name of the Son." This gives us the second action, and the third comes in as the second.

The verb in Greek is bapto, to dip, which in english would be baptize to dip. The participle baptizing, is in Greek baptidzo which would be dipping. Now we will use the verb, Go ye and teach all nations, and bapto—baptize, (dip) them in the name of the Father, and bapto—baptize (dip) them in the name of the Son, and bapto—baptize (dip) them in the name of the Holy Spirit. When this is done with three actions the commission is satisfied and not without.

There is one more point that I wish to notice and that is this: The expression "of the" which occurs three times in the commission, expresses a possessive relation. In the name of the Father is the same as though it read in the Father's name. "And of the Son," here Son possesses name understood; "and of the Holy Spirit" here Holy Spirit possesses name understood.

Now we will yet try the German translation: "Darum gehet hin, und lehret alle Völker und taufet sie im Nahmen des Vaters, und des Sohnes und des Heiligen Geistes." Here the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are plainly in the possessive case. Example: Nominative, der Vater; possessive, des Vaters; objective, dem Vater; independent, den Vater.

With these brief remarks I shall leave the subject for the present, hoping that it may all work out for the better. A. B. MILLER.

Those Clothes Christians.

I wish to set forth an epistle, by the help of Providence, in regard to the above caption. Of those clothes christians we have a vast number in the world, and in the church, in this our day. And we dare say, that some have no christianity at all, except in their clothes. Not long since I was made to study over this, when one of my friends (a relative) stopped in to have his measure taken for a new suit. It being the suit in which he was to be confirmed. Therefore his parents were very careful to have all things right, and gave orders that I should be very careful and not sponge the goods too hard, so that it might retain all its gloss. O what foolishness, thought I! What a faith in Jesus! a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. How they expose their ignorance when they censure us for wearing a plain dress, and say we have nothing but the plain clothes; while they themselves have nothing but the fashionable.

They say that christianity is not in the clothes, but in the "heart," and if the heart is right all is right. So I say too. If the heart of man is right, all is right. He will care for nothing but what his heavenly Master has bidden him to do, and to let. He will not be so mindful of the fashion and his clothes, but will try and be mindful of Jesus and follow him. He will not frolic around, curse and swear, eat and drink with the drunken; but he will sing and pray, do good to his neighbor, love his enemies, bless them that curse him, visit the sick and those who are on their dying couch, and will pray with them if requested, and talk to them of death and eternity, of their soul and the judgment. But these clothes christians will shudder and blush, if requested to pray with, or talk of the Savior to a dying friend. He has no words of comfort, no words of admonition, no words of promise, no words of warning in his heart. He has nothing in his heart but a guilty conscience which stares him in the face He cannot speak. Why? Because he has all his christianity in his clothes: he has none to spare anywhere else. He forgets his own poor soul, by having his mind fixed too hard upon his attire. He like "Esau sells his birthright for a mess of pottage." He hires another to take care of his soul's salvation; he hopes all will be well, and lies down in ease,—dies happy and opens his eyes in hell.

The hireling has the fleece, all he careth for. He promised peace and ease in zion, when there is none; makes broad the way that leads to life (?) makes the light of the gospel darkness. By and by he, too, (the father of the clothes christian), knocks at the little door for admittance;—then must hear the voice; depart from me, ye workers of iniquity into everlasting fire—I never knew you." By this we see that we should not have our minds fixed upon our clothes, nor too strongly upon any other earthly thing. Let us have our eyes fixed upon the doctrine of the Savior, and when we find anything to do, and our carnal mind would tell us it does not matter, and that we are holy enough without— let us look at the history of Korah, and those who adhered to him. What God hath cleansed, that call thou not common or unclean. It is not the coat, or the water, but is the obeying of the commandments—that is found the power of God. Therefore let us obey in all things, let the world do or say what they will. LEVI ANDES.

It Snows.

Looking out through the window the ejaculation arises to the lips, "it snows." Down gently comes the frozen element, clothing the rough and rugged earth in a mantle of white. How calmly it falls upon the mountain top, as well as in the lowly dell. It lodges on the rocky cliff, as well as on the tender twig. What a change o'erspreads the external appearance of mother earth, all through the agency of the falling snow. How like snow upon the rough earth do gentle words fall upon the rough sinful heart—words of love and mercy falling from Heaven to clothe the soul in a mantle of purity, hiding from the view of the invisible, the rough craggy mountains of sin. How like snow fall the merits of a blessed Savior upon all, down to the poor beggar by the gate, or the culprit in the dungeon. Changing the "earthly" to "heavenly;" clothing, the "inner man" with a vesture of purity, being "unspotted from the world." How like snow fall God's mercies upon "the just and unjust," upon the hoary head as well as upon the tender babe. Incessantly and calmly they come upon us, giving us being, life, and continuation. And how like snow falls the heavenly manna into the soul of the upright, coming from the heaven of heavens. It is untainted and free from the poison of sin or seeds of death—'tis the food that gives the essentials of eternal life—the waters that quench our thirst that we may "never thirst" again.

How like snow gently fall kind words upon the heart of the erring one. Oh, then, speak kindly, that some fountain, that has long been closed because of a harsh and uncharitable world may be broken up; once get tears of true penitence to flow, though it be from her whose feet already tread the threshold of hell, kind words, kind looks and earnest entreaties, may cause them to draw back from the horrid abyss, and feel once more the sweets of virtue, the bliss of religion, and taste the joys of a kind Savior's love; that like the black boy now clothed in whiteness, the soul may eventually be clothed upon with brightness and glory.

A Letter To a Brother in the Flesh.

I have had a desire to pen a few thoughts to you through the medium of the Companion. Knowing you are a reader thereof, thinking perhaps it might cause you to reflect more seriously upon your deplorable condition. Knowing full well you are standing outside of the pales of the Christian Church, and if you remain in that condition, where God and his Christ is you never can come.

We are informed in Holy Writ that "repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is necessary to salvation, and they are the first principles to be observed by the inquirer unto salvation. Faith and repentance as required in the Gospel, are absolutely necessary in the present condition of mankind, in order to acceptable obedience to the divine law." Without faith it is impossible to please God, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

Faith, as used in scripture, denotes confidence in the moral character of God, founded on the belief we attach to the declaration of his word. It is defined by the apostle Paul, in the 11th chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, to be the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. By faith we realize those objects, which are invisible to the eye of sense, and which lie beyond the reach of our present comprehensions. It recognizes the existence, and the omnipresence of an invisible Being, by whose agency the visible operations of nature are conducted, and views him as possessed of infinite wisdom, power, and benevolence. It views the scenes of an invisible and eternal world, the destruction of our present world, the resurrection of the dead, the solemnities of the judgment, the new heaven, and the new earth, the innumerable company of angels, the beauty of the heavenly world. These invisible realities it recognizes on the testimony of God's word, and without the recognition of such objects true religion can have no existence in the mind.

Now allowing that such awful and sublime thoughts flow from the mind which has in possession that unadulterated faith, how can it be possible that you allow that faith to be inactive in you. There is no deception in the word of God, rest assured, for those things are realities hinted at above, and may be in you to will and to do of his good pleasure. Our Savior said, "I will come in and sup with him, and he with me." Glorious thought, having Jesus for a guest, when we may be able to drink in the felicity of the eternal world, and the glories therein provided, for the reception of the saints and the everlasting enjoyment of the same. It is sufficient to arouse the most abandoned sinner to a sense of his duty, and cause him to make a mighty effort to overcome the allurements of this world, and the powerful influence that Satan exerts upon his mind.

When I reflect upon your sad and forlorn condition, I pity you. And yet your moral excellence is worthy of any man's imitation. Seeing the blessings that God has bestowed upon you, in enabling you to provide for yourself and family those things which are necessary for the comfort and enjoyment of this present world, and seeing your economy of labor, and how closely you observe the proper time of seed-time and harvest, and things in their proper order, it seems strange that the one thing needful is neglected, that good part which Mary chose which Christ said should not be taken from her.

Christ said, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Again he says: "To-day if you hear his voice, harden not your heart." It has so happened that we are all blessed above what we deserve, seeing our lot has been cast in a land of Gospel light, and liberty, where we can worship God, no one to molest or to make us afraid, and with all these advantages before us, how can we escape the judgment of God, without putting our faith to practice, by obedience to God's word. The Savior said: "Think ye that those upon whom the tower of Siloam fell were sinners above all other sinners I tell you nay, and except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men for all have sinned. And you must reckon yourself among that number, and like the prodigal have wandered far from the Father's house. Would to God you like him would come to the same conclusion, and say: "I will arise and go to the father, and say unto him, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants." Do not picture out to your mind, that you will be saved by your moral excellence and good standing in society, for you know that the Gospel says: "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Seeing there by omitting our duty we shall come short of realizing the glories made manifest in the Gospel, and if we fail to gain an admittance into heaven to associate with angels and just men made perfect, we shall be placed to the left hand of the Judge, and our doom will be to go down to dwell "with the devil and his angels in a prepared hell." The truths of the Bible teach you that there will be a separation at the Judgment, and the human family will be divided into two classes. To them to the right hand he will say: "Come up, ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, from the foundation of the world." The invitation now is to all. He says: "Come unto me all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved." He has told us how we can be saved, as hinted at already. The apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost, admonished them and said: "Repent, and be baptized for the remission of your sins," and said they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, for the promise was to them, and to their children, to all that were afar off, even as many as the Lord our God should call." This is the plan of initiation into the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth, and when once initiated, we receive spiritual nourishment from the church, as the tender branch of the vine receives its nourishment from the parent stock, and you will grow, and it will be much easier to serve the Lord, than you now anticipate. And not only so, but we are indebted to God, our services are due unto him, for what he has done for us. Have you not read that the son of God suffered and died for us on the cross, that a reconciliation might be made between God and the human family, that we might have access to a throne of grace. Seeing that God has so richly provided the means where by we can be saved, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God, and is now making intercession for us. Let us behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, and as Paul says, "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners of whom I am chief." Paul knew the value of the merits of a crucified Redeemer. When he saw him on his road from Jerusalem to Damascus, to persecute the saints, the Lord said to him: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" After what transpired there, he was taken to Damascus by those who were with him; while there an humble disciple of the Lord was sent unto him, named Ananias, which said: "Brother Saul, receive thy sight," for it seems he was blind, like many of the present day, who are living in sin. But he opened his eyes, when hearing such an admonition. Then said Ananias to him, "the God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldst know his will, and see that just one, and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth, for thou shalt be his witness unto all men, what thou hast seen and heard; and now, why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." This is the way Saul rendered obedience to the mandates of heaven, and by a perusal of the scriptures we can ascertain the joy he had, even while traveling through this vale of tears. Seeing by faith the prospects of the felicity after his labors were over, he says: "The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, therefore, there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, and not for me only, but for all those that love his appearing"

Now, in conclusion, I will say with the prophet of old, "Let others do what they may, as for me and my house we will serve the Lord." The Lord has said, "my spirit shall not always strive with man." Could we only comprehend the force of this language, we would then know the condition we are in while living in sin. How often have you said: "Go thy way, for this time, when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee." If it should be that the Lord would no more call you with that still small voice! Think of these things, my dear, and dying friends, and profit by the instructions.

In a Strait.

I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better. Phil. 1: 23.

The above subject represents an affectionate father, who, though standing on the world, and bound with the strong cord of affection, yet he looks upwards, evidently longing to depart and be with Christ; which, as the apostle says, is far better. Though he may feel this, yet oftimes he feels strongly bound with the cords of love to remain with the objects of his affection here on earth, to whom his stay at present seems needful. He, however, does not consider this world as his abiding place; he has it beneath his feet; in looking upward, and waiting for his translation to one above. Thus the Christian stands ready prepared, and longs to depart and be with Christ; but the interests of earth exercise an influence over him and bind him down with the golden bands of affectionate love. When a sinner becomes a saint, his relations become changed; "old things have passed away, behold all things have become new." A "new heart" is given, filled with love to God and man. A new world is presented full of glorious realities, substantial and eternal. A new God is given, Jehovah is his name. He formerly worshipped the gods of this world. A new Savior is embraced, the noblest, the wisest, and the best. New companions, and another king, our Jesus, the citizen of another city which is out of sight, whose Builder and Maker is God; the heir of an inheritance which is incorruptible, undefiled, and which fadeth not away.

No wonder, then, if he should oftentimes desire to depart in order to possess all this happiness. Wandering on earth, "here he has no abiding city;" a stranger and pilgrim as all his fathers were. Nevertheless, he has interests, affections, and duties of an earthly kind; these have a weighty claim upon him; they are connected with God and eternity. The religion of the Bible, whilst it strengthens the powers of the intellect, and canctifies the soul, does also increase the powers of natural affection, and makes us capable of the most lively emotions. The true minister of the Gospel, like the great Apostle, would cheerfully lay down his work and away to Jesus, but the interest of his Master demands that he should stay, and teach poor sinners the way of life. Therefore he says, the will of the Lord be done. The pious parent, when vitited by sickness, would fain regard it as a call to heaven, but the dear pledges of love are weeping round the bedside, and their youthful state demands a faithful guardian. He can only say, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you; the will of the Lord be done."

Here is an item we recommend to every God-fearing servant of Jesus. Those who fear man more than God will not believe it.

He that unduly fears man cannot truly fear God, and he that lives much in the fear of God will not regard over much what man can do unto him; the want of faith is the root of all such fear, which becomes less and less, as faith gathers strength and increases in the soul.—Ambrose Serle.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Selected by DAVID PROVINCE.

Peace, Be Still.

Once upon the heaving ocean,
Rode a bark at evening tide,
While the waves in wild commotion,
Dashed against the vessel's side.
Jesus sleeping on a pillow,
Heeded not the raging billow,
While the winds were all abroad,
Calmly slept the Son of God.

In that dark and stormy hour,
Fearful ones awoke the Lord,
Jesus by his sovereign power,
Calmed the tempest with a word.
On life's dark and restless ocean,
Mid the billows, wild commotion,
Trembling soul your Lord is there,
He will make you still his care.

Jesus knows your silent weeping,
When before his throne you bow,
Never, never is he sleeping,
Where he reigns in glory now.
If the world is dark before thee,
If the billows rolling o'er thee,
All thy soul with terror fill,
Hear him saying, Peace, be still.

Men are never placed in such extremes but that there is a light to guide them.

Old age rather makes graceless sinners incorrigible than tends to their recovery.

The christian's cup may be brimful of sorrow but for him the overflowing drop is never added.

God has three houses—one for instruction, another for correction, and a third for destruction.

Vice does not pay; the sin is less sweet than we fancied, and it costs more than we bargained for.

Effectual prayer brings from heaven's ample chambers the choicest blessings down upon earth.

The Bible is a matchless volume; it is impossible for us to study it too much, or esteem it too highly.

Let us shun everything which might tend to efface the primitive lineaments of our individuality. Let us reflect that each one of us is a thought of God.

The coming of the Lord is one of the principal articles of the christian's faith, and resting solely upon a promise. Scoffers will attack it till the very day of his advent.

When two conflicting truths are brought face to face, we must accept neither. We must tell ourselves that there is a third withheld among the secrets of God; which, when it is revealed, will reconcile them.

Memory presides over the past; action over the present. The first lives in a temple hung with glorious trophies, and lined with tombs; the other has no shrine but duty, and it walks the earth like a spirit.

God has not chosen to flatter our curiosity by any of his revelations. What he reveals to man is the end assigned him, and the means of attaining that end. Doctrine and morals constitute an essential part of these means.

God has entrusted man with the raw material. He creates the world, and gives it to man to finish. Man originates nothing, but continues and develops all things. Speech is furnished him and he invents writing. The ocean, fresh from God's hands, puts continents asunder; man makes it only the broadest of highways.—The earth is delivered to him rough, and often sterile. He smooths and renders it productive. He grafts the wild stock. And, in the plan of salvation, the offerings of believers, finish and perfect the passions of our Lord.

The Dance.

What a strange thing, says the Moravian, this dancing is, after all, when you look at it from a philosophical, or, if you please, unsophisticated point of view. The other day Insulanus asked a lady how it came to pass that the entrance upon the floor of a ball-room made such a wonderful change in her usual manners and habits. She asked him what he meant, as she did not understand. He asked her: "Suppose I introduce you to a friend of mine, a stranger, and he would not only take your hand, but put his arm around you, what would you do?" You may imagine her look and answer. What would she do? All our lady readers know what they would do, and what the father, husband and brother of such a lady would do. "But," Insulanus, "as soon you enter the room of the hop or ball you permit a perfect stranger, who is introduced to you at the first time, not only to take your hand, but to put his arm around your waist, and to sail around the room with you in the giddy mazes of the dance, and your father, brother, and husband think it all right!"

God, a Father.

Christ especially revealed Him as a Father.

1. In the first and last words Christ calls him "Father."
2. As a Father, God thinks of us.
3. As a Father, God loves us.
4. As a Father, God works for us.
5. As a Father, God cares for us, protects us, provides for us in the future. Father is the most endearing appellation in which he is made known unto us.

"I should have been a French atheist," said Randolph, "had it not been for one recollection, and that was when my departed mother used to take my little hands in hers, and cause me on my knees to say, "Our Father which art in heaven."

"This little word, Father," says Gurnall, "lisped by faith in prayer by a real Christian, exceeds the eloquence of Demosthenes, Cicero, and all the famous speakers in the world."

"My life," says Evans, "hangs by a single thread; but that thread is in a Father's hand."

"I never fear," said a little child "when my Father is with me."

The greatest man is he who choses with invincible resolution: who resists the sorest temptation from within and without: who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is the calmest in storms, and whose reliance on truth, on virtue, on God, is the most unfaltering.

AN ITEM FOR BOYS.—A little boy, twelve years old, once stopped at a country tavern and paid for his lodging and breakefast by sawing wood, instead of asking it as a gift. Fifty years later, the same boy passed the same little Inn as George Peabody the banker.

Christ must not only have the uppermost seat in the heart, he also must have all its affections.

Things should not be done by halves—If it be right, do it boldly; if it be wrong leave it undone.

To Young Writers.

The following was compiled from the Boston Christian, for the March No. of the Pious Youth, and as it contains much good information to older persons we insert it here also. We endorse it in toto, but would call especial attention to paragraph VIII. We have thrown articles under the table just because we could not afford to strain our eyesight to read it. Others have been cast aside for carelessness in penmanship. We bear with everybody who does his best; but when a writer scribbles over his sheet with all his might, and then hurriedly folds it up and sends it for publication, we generally bear his manuscript to the waste box. Contributors ought to remember that everybody else has more time to spare than we have. If our days were forty-eight hours long we would have to work after night. May we not hope that all our correspondents will heed this lesson, and save us many weary hours of slavish toil. Think of your letter passing around the office, from the least to the greatest, each in turn guessing at what a scrawl might be intended to represent, and then finally to be sent into the waste box in disgrace, just for want of a little care on your part.

After a few introductory remarks, friend Hastings says:

To Young Writers.

I. Never think what to write; this is useless. Write what you think. Thoughts that kindle your heart will melt others. Ideas that stir the writer will wake up the reader. Write facts; everybody loves facts, incidents, and true stories; and the world is flooded with whims, fancies, and fictions. Tell what you know, rather than what you think.

II. Write with a rush, hurriedly, just as fast as you can. Whenever the thoughts come, scratch down your ideas with pen or pencil on a scrap of paper, anywhere you happen to be, and when you get at pen and paper, write them out more fully.

III. Throw the article into the drawer, and let it lie for a few days or weeks, while you write more on the same, or on other subjects, studying meanwhile not only the subject you write on, but also grammar, logic, hetoric, punctuation, penmanship, and everything else, especially the Word of God.

IV. After some days or weeks, hunt up your ink blots and scratches, see how they look, read, re-arrange, omit, add, condense, and study the whole subject thoroughly.

V. Write out the article carefully on one side of the paper, leaving margin for corrections, and putting everything into it that you wish to have there, and arranging the ideas and sentences in proper order.

VI. Lay aside awhile, then read it all over by yourself aloud, and with a pen or pencil mark everything that does not read smooth, sound well, or express the right ideas; change the order of words and sentences, and, if needful, re-write the whole again. Put in all quotations from Scripture in full, and do not expect your readers to stop and hunt up passages, for they will not do it.

VII. Keep it awhile, and then read it aloud to the best educated and most sensible friend you have, who is not too busy to hear it, and who is honest enough to tell you your faults; and when they have criticised it, then consider, condense, and improve it all you can, remembering that every word costs money, time, and pains to put it in print.

VIII. If you do not get sick of the sight of it before this time, and still feel inclined to send it to the press, observe these directions: 1. Get you some fine, thick, smooth, white writing paper;—'legal cap' is very good, but any good paper, well ruled, will do, and cut it into half sheets. 2 Get some deep black ink;—black as midnight. 3. Get a coarse pen that will make a plain mark. 4. Get a quiet place to write alone. 5. Leave an inch blank at the top of the first sheet, and write the title of the article in a bold, plain hand. 6. Leave an inch of blank paper down the left side of each page. 7. At the commencement, and at all places where a new subject or paragraph begins, leave two inches blank on the left of the first line of the paragraph. 8. Write your title in fine letters at the top of each page. 9. Write only on one side of the paper, and number the pages 1, 2, 3, etc., and pin, or stitch them together at one corner. 10. Keep your pages flat and smooth; never roll them up; but fold them flat across the sheet.

IX. Lay it aside again, then read it over, correct spelling, grammar, and punctuation, put a capital letter at the beginning of each sentence, and a period at the end, and if you do not understand punctuation pretty well, omit all other points, and let the editor insert them; and then, if needful, re-write your article again; if not, fold it flat, and put it in a long envelope, keeping your old copy for your own use, and putting in a polite note to the editor, telling your short story, and giving your name and address, and wait patiently the result; and if your article does not appear, try again, remembering that when an article is to be read by a hundred thousand persons, and to be accounted for at the last day, it cannot be too carefully prepared.

Who lives at Roanoke, Indiana? Somebody from that place sent us $1.50, in a letter dated Jan. 8th, but gave no name. We have pasted it upon the wall, hoping the sender would write again before this time, giving us a lecture for not sending his paper; but he appears to be very patient. The address has been entered on our subscription book, and a credit of $1.50 placed opposite, what we want yet is the person's name. Who is it?

H. R. Holsinger, Dear Brother; Your letter of a week ago came to hand day before yesterday. I am grateful for your sympathy, and for your self-sacrificing expression of it. You "have prayed for me, but do not believe in all prayer." I believe in all prayer that is worthy the name, but do not believe in all my own prayers. Some things we may petition for without qualification, while others must be supplements with, "not my will but thine be done," and this is often a mere verbal addenda which is worse than meaningless.

You express a desire "to receive a weekly messenger from me during my sickness." I can hardly think that this may be interpreted into a call for matter for your columns, but if it is so meant, I am sorry that I cannot yet respond. I have so far recovered that I walk out, and daily saw a few sticks of wood. I do not suffer more than before my late attack. For 17 years I have not passed a day without pain. I am weak and nervous, and am not yet able to prepare aught that would be suitable for publication. After saying this you will be surprised to hear that during the last three weeks I have done an almost incredible amount of writing. I am really astonished at myself. But it is all of an individual character, and adapted to individual cases. It seems to me I have never labored with less sense of labor than since I am again able to use my pen, simply because the counsel and comfort I have endeavored to give to others by letter, have been the transcription of my own experience. I am glad to extend my hand to the suffering, and this has long since begotten the conviction that I am better qualified for private correspondence than for any public sphere of ministration. I have but little evidence that my published efforts are productive of good beyond that of others, but have many testimonials of God: blessings on my private correspondence. I give the more retired sphere my preference, both from inclination and a sense of duty.

Thank you, dear brother, for your enclosed sea-waif. Matt. 17: 27. You say, "let it pass through your hands to the cause of Jesus, as the spirit may dictate." Beautiful sentiment, beautifully expressed. I was indeed pinched for stationary but the ravens knew when to furnish their cakes.

As soon as I am able to draw up my intellect for material I will send you something for your paper. At present I must be allowed to play, and beg leave to remain in the back yard with the "least of my brethren."

By and by, if we endure as seeing Him who is invisible," we will all be in the play element, which is the undisturbed rest of the soul in truth and principle for their own sake.

You are at liberty to dispose of this as you deem most promotive of the cause dear to us both. With brotherly regards.

C. H. Balsbaugh.

We feel to say that it was not with the view of hurrying our dear brother to our assistance in supplying our columns that we desire a weekly epistle from him, but that we might know, how he does, and impart the information to our readers, who we know desire such intelligence. Only a few lines, dear brother, and if the hand can no longer guide the pen, may not the mind indite a word.—Nevertheless, be at ease—let the strong do the work; and may the great Physician pass by thee so that thou mayest be permitted to touch the "Hem of his garment."

Farther: When we said we did "not believe in all prayer," we should have said we did not believe in prayer alone.

LEONARD FURRY.

New Enterprise, Pa.

Brother Henry ; I will give you a sketch of my recent visits north. Brother Joseph Leedy and I left Antioch, on the 21st of January. We landed at Pierceton, Kosciusco county, Ind., on the same date, from whence we were conveyed to brother A. Leedy's house and charitably entertained. On the 22nd we met in church council at the Brethren's meeting-house, where there was an election held of one speaker and one visit brother. Joseph Hartoths was chosen to the ministry, and Joseph Hart to the visit. Public preaching commenced in the evening of same day. Six sermons were delivered to large and attentive congregations, and one added to the church by baptism.

From here we were conveyed to brother Umbaugh's. Here we attended meeting in the evening. The next day had church council and preaching in the evening. On 27th I was conveyed to Milford to assist brother Davis Younce in a protracted meeting, where there were fifty-one added to the church. On the 29th I was conveyed to brother Brumbaugh's congregation, where I met brother J. Leedy, and other Brethren in church council, where brothers Ephraim Brumbaugh and Daniel Rothenbarger were chosen to the ministry. From here we were conveyed to a night meeting near Warsaw.

On the 30th we preached twice and baptized four. Here I parted with brother Leedy again, and the members of that arm of the church. On the morning of the 31st took the cars at Warsaw for Plymouth, where I was met by brother John Kniseley and conveyed to his house and pleasantly entertained by his family. Had the pleasure of preaching four sermons in his branch, to large and attentive congregations. There was quite an interest manifested ; we hope that good fruits will soon manifest themselves there. On the 5th of February I took cars at Plymouth for Peru, where I visited my children. On the 7th took cars at Bunker Hill, for Wabash. Spent the evening very pleasantly with brother R. Leedy and family. On the 8th came to Antioch. On the 10th met brother Quinter with others in council, in regard to the establishing of a College in the Brotherhood. On the 11th went with brother D. Smith to Lancaster, in the Salimony branch, where we continued meeting four days, and baptized seventeen. I left this place for Delaware county on the 15th, and returned this evening, 17th. Will re-commence meeting to-morrow.

My prayers are that God will bless our dear brethren and sisters. Oh, be zealous in your Master's cause. Pray much, that the work of the Lord may prosper.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

From brother D. D. Sell.

HAMILTON, Mo. (
Feb. 27th, 1870. (

In my last I stated that my next trip would be westward.

From the time I last wrote up to Tuesday the 22nd, I was in Blair county, visiting among my relatives and friends. On Sunday 13th had meeting in the school-house near brother Jesse Crumbaker, Franks town congregation. Brother D. M. Holsinger was also present. Had a good meeting. Took dinner with brother Jesse. Had a pleasant talk with him and some of his neighbors ; one by the name of Douglas, full cousin of the late Stephan A. Douglas. The time passed pleasantly, but we had to take the parting hand. I do hope and pray that we may so live that we can enjoy one anothers company beyond the river of death.

Spent the week with my parents. Sunday 20th had meeting in the school house at Lamersville in the school-house in which I received all my schooling. Friends and neighbors assembled til' the house was full, nearly all familiar faces to me. It filled my heart with joy to meet with my old friends once more. Tried to preach to them, and reasoned that all things were made ready on the part of heaven, for man's salvation. This was one of the most solemn meetings that I ever pretended to labor at, being the last meeting we had at our dear old home. You who have to part with near friends, out of love to Christ and his cause, can only know. But I rely on the promises of God ; "Thou shalt have a hundred fold in this life, fathers, mothers, homes," &c. The time now came that we must take the parting hand. Brother Holsinger then proposed the 263 hymn to be sung, after which we knelt down and prayed for one another. Then took the farewell hand with many near and dear friends in and out of the church. There are many that we could not call brethren, who we hope will become such not many days hence.

22nd. Left my old home and went to Altoona in the evening, in company with my mother. Spent the evening and night with friends there. Took the morning train for Pittsburg ; arrived there at noon 22nd. Then took the train for Chicago. Stopped over night in Louisville, Ohio, with brother Josiah Kime, who spared no means to make us comfortable. Went to meeting with him a few steps from his door, to the United Brethren. Would have spent some time here and other portions of the State, and in Indiana and Ills. but my ticket limited my time too much. Arrived in Chicago in the night of the 24th at 12. Took the train for Quincy ; arrived at 12 o'clock. 25th Took the train for Hamilton, Mo., where I am now writing. I still enjoy good health ; thanks be to God.

DANIEL D. SELL.

To Whom it May Concern.

It is known by those whom I visited on my late mission, that I received donations from the different congregations for the purpose of enabling us to build a meeting-house here, in place of the one we had entirely destroyed by the devastating hand of the late war. I this day have sent out to the different congregations from which anything was received receipts from the officials of the church here, showing I have handed over what I received. As those receipts are intended to correspond with the receipts I gave at the time of receiving the contributions, should any congregation fail to receive the receipt intended for them, or there be any error found please let me know.

In behalf of this congregation of the Brotherhood I wish to say to all the dear brethren and sisters who were so willing to respond to the call made, we all feel greatly indebted, especially do we feel thankful to God for putting it into the hearts of his stewards to give of that with which he had blessed them. May the Lord abundantly bless every helping hand, down to the poor widow that threw in the mite, who just as much deserves our thanks and the abundant blessings of the Lord, as that one that put in much of their abundance. Words fail to give expression of our gratitude, so we leave the matter to God who knows how to reward every good deed.

For the Fayette county, Wt.Va. congregation.

PYRMONT, IND.
Feb. 19th 1870.

Brother Holsinger ; As I have never seen any church news in the Companion, from this part of God's heritage, and as I have glorious news to write, I concluded to send you an item.

Brother Joseph Leedy of Antioch, Indiana, paid us a visit here, and he, with the laboring brethren here, held a series of meetings, and their labor was blessed indeed. Twenty two (22) were persuaded to leave the camp of sin, and seek protection in the wounds of a crucified Savior, and were added to the church, through the ordinance of Holy Baptism. Also one brother, who had been expelled, was restored to the church. A deep interest was manifested by the people, and we expect many more will be added to the fold. Brother Leedy has returned to his home, but the sweet counsel he gave, I have every reason to believe will remain.

Yours in love.

JOSEPH ZAHN.

Brother Henry ; I have received the first two Nos. of the Pious Youth, and after a careful reading I lent them to some of my friends, who, I am glad to state like myself are pleased with their contents. Enclosed please find one dollar, for which please send me 10 specimen copies of the Pious Youth. I intend to make an effort to introduce the paper among our friends and brethren here at Pipe Creek, Md.

The Visitor and Companion have found their way to the fireside of many of our friends here, hence some of them may be somewhat slow in patronizing another periodical, but I have reasons to think the time is not far distant in which the Pious Youth will find its way to the habitations of many of our friends here. I have an orphan girl, now about in her tenth year, (the only help I have at cases, in my little printing office,) she wishes me to state to you that she will send for the Pious Youth, as soon as she can raise a dollar, which will not be long from this time. She became melted to tears in reading the graphic account (in poetry,) of the little girl who was sent to beg money for her drunken father, as published in No 1. of the Pious Youth. I consider this periodical as calculated to fill up an essential place among the periodicals now published by our Brethren—for we must look to the rising generation to fill up our places in the church, and in the community,—hence, we should make every effort, in accordance with the doctrines of the Bible, to "bring up our children in the way they should go ; and "bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

My health is still feeble, but I can go out to meeting, and I still try to bear the ark of the testimony forward. Peace be to you, and all the Brethren.

Brother Henry ; The time is approaching for our District Council Meeting which, agreeable to appointment by last Meeting, is to be held with us, near East Berlin, Adams county. Brethren coming by Rail Road, will come to Harrisburg ; thence to York ; thence to Hanover Junction, and come to New Oxford, being within four miles of the meeting-house. The brethren will be at Oxford, and arrangements made to convey the Delegates to the place of meeting.

Now, Brother Henry, we are under the impression the time for holding our District Meeting, is the second Monday before Pentecost which would be the 23rd day of May. We have searched the Minutes of District Meeting but have failed to find the time. Please ascertain the time for certain and publish the above, if right. The Delegates should come on Saturday preceeding the time of meeting. We hope and desire the brethren to come as before mentioned and there will be appointments made for public preaching, on Sunday, for the brethren.

ADAM BROWN.

Notice.

The western District of Pennsylvania, will hold its meeting, (God willing) on the 9th day of May next, at the Brethren's meeting-house, in the Berkey corner in the Shade Creek branch, Somerset county, about 11 miles south east of Johnstown. Those coming by Rail Road will inform the brethren of said branch of their coming, and proper arrangements will be made for their conveyance to place of meeting. A special invitation extended to all the brethren and sisters of the District. Those brethren from adjoining Districts who feel like being with us will be gladly welcomed. The ministering brethren are requested to be at the place of meeting on the 5th day of May, to commence preaching at that time, and continue until the council closes, if not longer. The ministering brethren who expect to be there by the 5th will please inform the branch there by addressing elder Christian Layman or Hiram Musselman, Scalp Level, Pa.

Brethren, we expect a good turnout, and especially a delegate or 2 from every branch, and have every delegate ready to pay over to the treasurer the sum necessary to defray the expenses to Annual Meeting. The distance is great and the expenses will therefore be according.

C. G. Lint.
Cor. Sect.

Remarks.

Brethren, we who compose the western District of Pennsylvania, can we not improve our method of raising traveling expenses to and from Annual Meeting. I have considered our present arangement and I think it is lame. We select our Delegate from among our number, and instruct them to go to Annual Meeting and there represent us, &c. but fail in supplying them with means necessary to the defraying of traveling expenses, for the following reason. We say to them "you go and when you return hand in your bill." This is done so that we may know how much we must make up. Now, brethren herein I find a fault. In the first place the brethren chosen may not have the money on hand and must therefore ask some one to loan them as much as they may judge it will take, expecting however to pay it back soon. They send the bill to the treasurer; he answers; "no money in the treasury." This makes it very disagreeable to the borrower and to the lender, and if even the brethren sent are blessed with sufficient means, it is still not just to have them to wait one whole year for the money they laid out for our benefit, and we hold the same in our posession all this time. Let us overcome this, by commencing our collections in due time. You will have plenty of time from the time you see this notice and the time we meet. Let us have a good supply sent in by our Delegates, so that there be no gatherings after our meeting is over. If our Delegates receive more than they need let them return it to the District treasurer. I think this would make those we send, and those that send feel much relieved from a burden under which we are at present laboring.

If any one has any better plan than the foregoing I am ready to adopt it. I give this simply as a suggestion, and that out of love and for the advancement of the cause.

Elder C. G. Lint.
Cor. Sect.

Brother Holsinger; From the reading of God's word, and especially from Ezekiel 36th and 37th chapter, we are led to believe that the Jews will return back to the land that God promised to their father's, and that they will return before the second coming of Christ, and that Jerusalem will be rebuilt. And from the reading of Isaiah 60th chapter, and abundance of other scriptures, we wish to ask the question: Whether all the true children of God, belonging to the gentile nation, will go back with them and assist in rebuilding Jerusalem? The Book of God informs us, "Therefore be ye also ready for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Mathew 24 and 25.

Brother Holsinger: The Companion No. 5. of Volume 6, was received to-day. We are always glad to receive it, for it is a great deal of company to us, for wenever get to hear the brethren preach. All the satisfaction that we have from the brethren we receive through the Companion. We have lived here over five years, all alone, and without hearing a brother preach. The pure word of God has never been preached in our neighborhood. The people here don't know anything about the Brethren. We read a great deal in the Companion about the brethren how they travel and preach the word of God. O, how glad we would be if they would come to us, to the far west and preach.

We read the letter of brother Samuel Murray of his visits to Minnesota. We were glad to hear that he came so near but sorry that he did not come quite to us. We often heard him preach in Wabash county, and also Carroll county, Indiana, and we would be very glad to hear him again. We hope if any brethren will come to Minnesota again so near to us, they will come to see us.

I would farther say, if there are any brethren that wish to move to the west, we wish for them to come and see our country. The land is cheap here yet, and soil as good as can be found. We live about forty miles from Minneoapolis, in McLeod county. Will brother Murray let us know the address of brother Ollinger, in Minnesota?

Gottlieb Rosch.

A Proposition.

Woodbury, Pa.
February 20th, 1870.

Dear Brother; Inasmuch as my health is somewhat impaired, I was pretty much confined to my house for about a week, my mind was directed to the welfare of the church and the edification of the brethren. And whereas the time of holding our District Meeting is drawing nigh, and as the Council Meeting has directed that each District meeting elect some one of the Bishops within the District to constitute one of the Standing Committee of the Annual Meeting, I thought I would propose the following query for the serious consideration of the brethren. Our District is composed of 22 branches of the church. Would it not be well to change off those elected so that each branch would send their brother bishop in turn, so that all the branches would derive the benefit to become more familiar with the order of the Brethren, as taught in the gospel. Would you or some of the brethren give an answer to the query through the Companion.

Truly yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

JACOB YOUNCE.

REMARKS.

We approve of the propoition, with the amendment added so far as they are competent. There are some bishops in the District who are not competent, and to send those just for the sake of rotation, would not be likely to make the best system. But we do not believe in confining the work to a few, when there are others who can do it as well. Our sentiment is, if it is a duty requiring denial, and labor, and toil, let it not all be burdened upon one man, but divide it among all. And on the other hand, if it be a mark of honor, or have about it any consideration of advantage or pleasure, let it not all be given to one man, but distribute it among those who are eligible to the duties required. And this rule we would by no means confine to the relation of members of the Standing Committee. We would recommend it to the congregations in the selection of Delegates to the District Meetings; to the District Meetings in the election of moderators, and clerks, and delegates to the Annual Meeting; and to the Annual Meeting in the election of its officers. In this way the different talents would be called into action, and an opportunity afforded for their development. This is the way we view the matter. If not correct we expect to be enlightened.

Census.—Reporting Additions.

There are many instances in the Old Testament Scriptures where God commanded Moses to number the children of Israel. These censuses were taken for the purpose of raising money, and to ascertain the number of fighting men. In the New Testament Scriptures the number of disciples is given quite often. Christ chose twelve apostles, and seventy disciples to preach; one hundred and twenty were present when Matthias was chosen. The additions are definitely or approximately given frequently. Cornelius, his kinsmen, and near friends, multitudes, both of men and women and on the day of Pentecost three thousand were added unto them. From these and numerous other passages that might be cited I believe the numerical strength of the Brotherhood may be reported without violating the law.

And should elder Younce inform us through the press that he and other brethren held a series of meetings at Milford, Indiana, some weeks ago, and that fifty odd were added there; should elder Daniel Smith write to the Companion that he was at his old home in Lancaster, a few weeks ago, and that he and other brethren labored in that vineyard two or three days which resulted in the conversion of about a score; and should elder Joseph Leedy report that two weeks ago he held a four or five days meeting in Tippecanoe county, and that eighteen soldiers enlisted in the service of our Master; no one would object to these reports, but as the apostle more than eighteen hundred years ago rejoiced to hear, that to the Gentiles was granted repentance unto life, so would the Brethren to-day rejoice that this repentance is still being accepted by some of Adam's posterity. Such reports would cause many of our ministering brethren to feel as Paul did when he wrote; "For a great door and effectual is opened unto me." 1 Cor. 16: 9.

S. M. MINNICK.

Antioch, Ind.

FRANKLIN, IOWA. }
Feb. 17th, 1870. }

Brother Henry: Inasmuch church news is always very acceptable with us, and also solicited by you; and as I believe there has never any been given from this branch of the church, I thought to send you a brief history of the same.

The church in Decatur county, Iowa, was organized in the Fall of 1856, by or under the oversight of, elder John Garber, (now deceased) and then brother Peter Lutz, of Jefferson county. At that time there were 14 members. Brethren S. A. Garber, and Wm. J. Stout, were chosen to the work of the ministry, and brethren H. Chandler and H. Spurlock, were the deacons. The first communion meeting was held in the Fall of 1857. Since that time there has been a communion meeting every Fall. We are striving together to spread the "glad tidings of salvation:" and although at times it has seemed to us that our labors were almost in vain, yet we feel to bless God's Holy name, that at other times our moral sky seems brighter, and we are permitted to see the cause prosper, and souls made willing to yield obedience to the Gospel of our God.

During the present winter we have had the privilege of seeing 5 souls go down into the liquid grave, and there being "buried with their Lord in baptism," to rise, as we fondly hope, "to walk in newness of life." We now number some 75 members, scattered promiscuously over this country, some in Clark county, several in Union county, and two sisters in Harrison county, Mo. There are four of us, that, after our several ability, "labor in word and doctrine." Also four deacons. Brother J. H. Fillmore of Davis county, Missouri was with us and preached for us a week last month setting forth the Truths of the Gospel in demonstration of the spirit, and with power." During his stay there was one applicant for baptism. May the Lord in the plenitude of his mercy, reward our brother for his labor of love.

Since the organization of the church here we have lost 12 members by death, and some 25 have emigrated from here, to different parts of the country.

Ere we close we desire, in behalf of the brethren here, to extend an invitation to brethren, and especially ministering brethren, who may be passing by this way, to stop and labor for us as we are all, (or at least should be) "Laborers together with God." And "Paul may plant, Apollos water, but God must give the increase." Finally we say "Brethren pray for us." The work is an arduous, one. We are weak and imperfect, but God is mighty, ever ready and ever willing to save all who will trust in him. Fraternally Yours.

Brother Henry; It is a long time since I sent you any news from the Salimony congregation. Nothing of special interest transpired and of course I could send you nothing. But on the 11th of the present month brother Samuel Murray and brother Daniel Smith commenced a series of meetings, which continued until the 14th. The word preached had the desired effect; the conversion of sinners to God, and the strengthning of the brethren. Seventeen precious souls were added to the church by baptism, and many more were awakened to a sense of their duty. Altogether we had a season long to be remembered.

Queries.

Will some good brother answer me these questions? I am young in the church, and have had three questions to answer as best I could.

1st. Who was the author of the Brethren church? When, in what year? 2nd. Why do the Brethren preachers always close prayer in public assemblies with the Lord's prayer?

3rd. Why do the Brethren dismiss congregations by saying: "you are respectfully dismissed? Or why do they not ask the blessing of God as a parting blessing on the assembly?

I. H. THARP.

Lanaconing, Md.

Will some brother or sister explain Acts 1: 25, which reads thus: "That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas, by transgression, fell, that he might go to his own place." The question is, who does the pronoun he personate in the last sentence? Judas or Matthias? And which of them went to his own place.

H. HOWES.

Will some brother write on Revelations 22: 12?

A. OAKS.

Will some brother please inform us through the Companion, what special marks the apostle had allusion to in Gal. 6: 17. The scripture reads: "From henceforth let no man trouble me: for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

Answer to "Who Will Tell?"

Dear Companion: Under the caption of "Who will tell," on page 104, it is asked: "In what part of the Bible does the following chapter occur?" To which we answer: In the 59th chapter of Benjamin Franklin's Bible. EMILY LYON.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Middle Creek congregation, Somerset Co., Pa. February 16th, sister CHRISTIANA GRIFFITH, wife of Charles Griffith. Aged 31 years, 7 months, and 21 days. She left an affectionate husband and 4 little children to mourn their loss which was sorrowfully felt. Funeral services by brother Tobias Meyers and elder Adam Snyder, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large concourse of people.

JACOB F. MEYERS.

In the Upper Cumberland branch, Cumberland county Pa., Nov. 17th, 1869, brother ELIAS SHENK; aged 54 years, 10 months, and 21 days. Improved by the Brethren, from 2 Cor. 5: 1.

In the same branch, March the 9th, 1870, Sister CATHARINE SHENK, consort of the above, and daughter of brother Samuel and sister Catharine Plough; aged 38 years, 8 months, and 27 days. Funeral services by Daniel Keller and others, from 1 Thes 4: latter part.

CATHARINE A. SHENK.

Of old age, at his residence in Wayne Co., Ohio, our old uncle Henry Holl; aged 76 years, 9 months, and 19 days. He belonged to the Reformed Lutheran church for many years, and was one of the first settlers in this county; having lived here 51 years.

J. B. SHOEMAKER.

In Noble Co., Indiana, August 14th 1869, SARAH ANNIE, infant daughter of brother Reuben and sister Barbara RESLER; aged 8 months. Funeral services by the Brethren.

ANNIE J. SMITH.

In the Clover Creek branch, Blair co. Pa., at the house of her brother, James Camerer, on on the 29th of June 1869, sister MARGARET CAMERER; in the 60th year of her age.—She received a stroke of Palsy 11 years ago, since which she was as helpless as a child. We hope she is now enjoying that rest that remains for all those that love the appearing of the Son of man. Funeral occasion improved by elders J. W. and George Brumbaugh to a large concourse of people.

SARAH J. CAMERER.

In the Lost Creek branch, Juniata Co., Pa., Nov. 20th, 1869, RACHEL HOSTETLER; aged 71 years, 2 months, and 1 day. She was afflicted with Heart Disease for a number of years. A few days previous to her death she was apparently better, but alas! on the night of the 20th, she was found a lifeless corpse; her spirit had taken its flight to try the realities of an unDiscovered land.

During her illness she was calm and bore it with christian fortitude, fully resigned to the will of God; she was a faithful member of the Mennonite church for many years, and we hope died with a bright prospect of meeting an ever merciful God.

Her remains were conveyed to their last resting place on the morning of the 23d. Funeral services by George Gearhart, (Mennonite) and brother George Myers, from second letter of Paul to Tim. 6: 7.

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Waiting.

The following piece of poetry will find an echo in the heart of every mother who has seen her darling pass to the farther side of the "Crystal Sea."

I have two little angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea.
Not impatiently wait my darlings there
For smiles light up their brows so fair.
And their little harps ring out so clear,
So soothingly sweet to faith's list'ning ear:
And they live in the smiles of the Savior's love
Who so early called my darlings above.

I have two little angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea.
Forever free from sorrow and pain,
Spotless and pure from all earthly stain;
Never in erring paths to rove,
Safe in the bosom of infinite love.
Evermore, evermore, walking in light,
Those beautiful angels robed in white.

I have two little angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea.
When my weary heart is throbbing with pain,
And I fain would clasp my darlings again,
I'll look away from this earthly strand
To the beautiful fields of the better land.
I will think of the angels waiting there,
And offer to God a thankful prayer.

I have two little angels to welcome me
When I too shall stand by the crystal sea.
When the great refiner his image may trace
In the heart he has won by his saving grace;
And in robes of Christ's own righteousness drest,
My soul shall seek the home of the blest.
On the beautiful banks of the crystal sea
My darlings still waiting shall welcome me.

Work of the Righteous.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

There is abundant evidence in the Christian Scriptures to prove that good people will follow good pursuits, and will walk in good ways. And who does not love a good man? Is he not well spoken of in the community in which he lives, and wherever he is known? A good man has a good name, and this, says the wisest man, is "rather to be chosen than great riches. He that has a good name should try to keep it, and keep unsullied from the blemishes which mark the characters of the many around us.

The people of God are especially noted for their good works. It has always been so, and will so be to the end of Time. To do good is to do good works, and to do good works is to do right. They who do right are right, and this constitutes righteousness. But doing right embraces many things, yet each item has but one way of accomplishment. There are various ways to do wrong, and there are also many ways of doing right. We perform many acts which are either praiseworthy or reprehensible. One wrong deed will, in so much, condemn us, while one good deed proves that we are not entirely abandoned by the do-right feeling. But I am brought to wonder at that man's condition of soul who is found in the ways of Wrong and of Right; who can engage in both lawful and unlawful pursuits; who can agreeably enjoy the association of the righteous and the unrighteous; or who can confidently and zealously hold both true and false views of the "doctrine of Christ." O how unbalanced! How little self-control to do right!

Righteousness is operative in two spheres of our present existence. 1st, The Moral sphere; & 2nd, The Religious. The Government of the All-Supreme holds sway over both these spheres of human life. The Moral is independent, yet leads to the Religious. The Moral can be without the Religious, but the Religious cannot be without the Moral. So that a moral man is not a religious man, in the Christian sense; but a religious man is a moral man. The Christian Religion cannot admit immorality into its realm without branding it with the mark of condemnation; for immorality ever did and always will corrupt Christianity. If a man is immoral or is not morally right in his heart when he first professes the Christian Religion, how can he be a Christian! Here is observed clearly the necessity of Gospel repentance.

The work of the righteous is right. He that pretends to righteousness, and does not right is not righteous.

In a succeeding number of this paper, the "work of the righteous" will be considered farther, and also the grand effects of righteousness.

The Two Classes, or the Difference Between the Saint and Sinner.

When we read the Holy Scriptures and understand what we read, we cannot fail to see the fact that in the teachings of the sacred writings, the human family is divided into two separate and widely different classes. And every soul that has an existence in the world belongs to one class or the other. There is no intermediate station; we must be a saint or a sinner; either righteous or unrighteous, the people of God or the children of disobedience. It makes no difference what we may profess to be, however moral we may appear to be, or how many pretensions to religion we make, yet if we do not "obey from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered to us," nor "walk in all the ordinances of the Lord blameless," we cannot be classed with the people of God, but we have our part with the ungodly and the sinner.

That God has a people on earth, has had, and always will have until the end of time, is an evident fact taught in the Bible. When we turn back to the ancient world we find a righteous Abel. And in after years we find a distinction made between the sons of God and the children of men; and when the number was finally reduced to eight souls, still God had a remnant of his people on earth. The children of Israel, with all their complaints and murmurings against God, were, nevertheless, the chosen people of Jehovah. While they had digged down the altars and killed the prophets, so that Elias thought he was left alone, and they sought his life to take it away, the answer of God to him was: "I have received to myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." "Even so at this present time also," says the Apostle, "there is a remnant according to the election of grace." And while the number may be small that will be saved, comparatively speaking, yet our Savior has established his church on earth, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." But it will stand "the pillar of the truth" until his second coming, when he then will find some that are faithful on the earth, "that have not worshipped the beast nor his image, neither had received his mark in their foreheads or in their hands."

The Apostle Paul in explaining the mystery of the resurrection very clearly shows that some will remain at the resurrection of the Lord. For he says, "we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them that sleep," but "shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall be ever with the Lord."

We have now noticed the fact that God has a people on earth. And we are not left in the dark as to who are the people of God. "For as many as are led by the spirit of God are the sons of God." And Jesus tells us "he that doeth the will of my father in heaven is my brother, my sister," etc. By this we understand that only they that do the commandments are his people, while all the rest may properly be called sinners, since there is no intermediate state. The distinction, however, between the saint and sinner is not made so apparent in this world as in the world to come. Here in this life the sinner is permitted to enjoy the blessings of God with the saint. For God sends his rain on the just and the unjust alike. The fields yield their crops of golden grain for them as well as for the righteous. And when they come to the house of worship they mingle their voices with those of the people of God in singing the lovely songs of Zion. But in the world to come it will not be so. Instead of singing for joy there will be weeping and sorrow. There will be a great distinction made between the humble follower and servant of Jesus Christ, or he that spent his days in sin and disobedience to God, who say by their actions and deeds—for actions speak louder than words—that they will not have the Christ Jesus to rule or reign over them. But while the sinner mingles in society with the child of God, seeming to enjoy life as well as he, yet the Christian has decidedly the better chance, "Having the promise of the life that now is and that which is to come." And having that hope which is an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast. When the Christian feels that he has discharged his duty to God and to his fellowman, when he has spent the day in the service of his Master, and when the darkness of the night surrounds him he does not feel that remorse of conscience the sinner feels, but he has, and enjoys that peace of mind the world can neither give nor take away. And when the Christian's career on earth is ended, and he comes to the river of death he need not cross alone. He has a pilot there awaiting him. His Savior will conduct him safely over. And as the Psalmist says: "though he walk through the valley of the shadow of death he need fear no evil, for his rod and his staff they comfort him." On the other hand when the sinner comes to the waters of death all is dark. He sees no light beyond. He has no hope beyond the grave. Yet he must cross and appear at the judgment seat of Christ. Here then the distinction will be fully made. The saints will be placed upon the right while the sinner or disobedient will be placed upon the left.—And while the saints shall hear the blessed and welcome invitation, "come ye blest of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" the sinner must hear that dismal sentence "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." And while the saints shall enjoy the glories of heaven which no pen can describe and no finite tongue express, the sinner must suffer the torments of hell in the caverns of woe. And while the glorified saints sing the song of the redeemed with palms of victory in their hands, the sinner will be raising his fruitless cries where hope is a stranger and where mercy never can reach him. There shall the sinner spend an eternity. When the righteous have been singing praises to God and the Lamb ten thousand years they have not a day less than when they first began. On the other hand the sinner's sufferings will continue just as long. O sinner think of that eternal death before it is too late.—"Knowing then the terrors of the law we persuade men." And could we persuade one soul to forsake the evil ways there would be joy in heaven with the angels. O sinner, turn from your evil way! Seek the pardon of your sins through your Savior's blood. Come out from among the world and "be ye separate, touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and my daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." "If children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." Then may the Lord help me to be wise unto salvation; may we be numbered with the saints here in life, die the death of the righteous, and share with the saints in light throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity.

Why we Should Love God.

As the Companion is designed to advocate Truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion, I shall attempt, though I should fail, to pen a few thoughts to encourage the true Christian to love God, and press on toward Zion.

My Christian friends, let us look back to that dark age when there was no eye to pity and no arm to protect. What a gloomy situation this world was in; but God saw fit, when the fullness of time had come, to send his only begotten Son into this world of sorrow and sin, to suffer and die the ignominious death upon the cross, that we might be saved. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16. And again, John 15: 13, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" Dear brethren and sisters, shall we not love God in return for such love? I answer yes. "We love him because he first loved us." 1 John, 4: 19. This appears to be one reason why we should love God. And another reason is, because he has commanded us to love him, and says: "It is the great commandment in the law." When the lawyer asked him, saying: "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." Matt. 22: 36, 37.

And if we love him we will keep his sayings, for Jesus says: "If a man love me, he will keep my words." John 14: 23.

Brethren and sisters, with these few thoughts presented to our minds let us take into consideration the love we owe to God, and when we love God as we should, we will obey his commandments and praise and adore his great and holy name, and have our minds concentrated, and our hearts fixed on heaven and heavenly things. "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

Let us press on toward heaven and eternal glory, for I want to meet my brethren and sisters, and clasp glad hands on the sunny banks of deliverance, and dwell where God and his Christ is, forever and ever.

JOHN W. SOUTHWOOD.

The Unpardonable Sin.

In the present vol No. 8, of the C. F. C., I see the question asked by D. L. Fisher, concerning Matt. 12: 31, 32, which reads as follows: "Wherefore, I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto man. To get the understanding we must begin at the 22nd verse of the chapter. About 55 years ago I was helping to wait on my aunt (a widow) that had a cancer in her breast. She used to get me to read the Testament for her. I happened to read that chapter, and not understanding about that sin, I asked her. She and her daughter were living with an old brother, by the name of Rudolph Switzer, and I have every reason to believe that he was a true follower of Jesus. My aunt told me to go to his room and tell him to come over to her room, and then she asked him to explain that scripture to me, as he had to her. So he explained it I have heard and read some other explanations since, but none that I think agrees so well with the substance of the Gospel as the one he gave. He said it was those who had accused the Savior of casting out devils by the prince of devils, that the condemnation was pronounced against, and that none else could commit that sin, but those who see with their own eyes, the miraculous power of God, as those saw it—and then call it the power of the devil. I have known more people (even some pious ones) to sink in despair about that Scripture than any other I know of. So I hope the brethren will be careful, to not make explanation that the eak will rest themselves on it to their injury.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

FIT AND NOT FIT.—During a recent revival among my people, an Episcopalian brother patronizingly remarked to the writer, "Your principles in the main are sound and Scriptural, but in withholding baptism from children you do a great wrong. Do you not believe that infants when they die go to heaven?" "Most certainly," was the reply, "that has ever been our belief as Baptists." "Well then," he continued, "do you not believe that one fit for heaven is fit for baptism?" "We readily see the point in that question,' I replied, 'and answer it more to your satisfaction by asking another. Doubtless, you believe that baptized infants in the event of their early death are saved, whatever may be your creed concerning the unbaptized. Now, is not any one 'fit' for heaven, 'fit for the communion table? And why do you "do this wrong" in withholding the 'sacrament' from your little ones, who, you say in the 'Catechism of the church,' by their baptism are made members of Christ, children of God, and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven?" Are they not good enough to commune with you, and yet 'fit' for heaven?" "I never looked upon it in that light before," he remarked, and then added, "I have asked this question of scores of Baptists, but the fallacy in it has never been detected by them, nor myself even, until now."

If you do but take and pierce God's word, and do but stay upon it as the bee doth on the flower, and will not go off till you have something out of it, this will make you rich in knowledge.

The Poor, God's Chosen.

How many precious promises are found in the word of God, which belong exclusively to the pious poor. They seem to be God's peculiar people, and he cares for, and looks upon them with special favor. Under the old dispensation, they were protected by law from oppression, and a curse was pronounced on all who should oppress them. In the Sabbatical year whatever the fields produced, was to be theirs. Isaiah prophesied that "the poor should rejoice in the Holy One." And Jesus gave it as an evidence of his being the Messiah that he preached the Gospel to the poor. And James records that great promise, that they should be heirs of the kingdom. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which he has promised to them that love him?"

Brethren and sisters, you who are poor, is there not comfort here? Think of it; you are God's choice, he loves you above other people; even as he did Israel of old Having chosen you, he surely will keep you safely to the end. And he has given you faith, for faith is the gift of God, and given it abundantly; you are rich in faith. And best of all, he has made you heirs of the kingdom. How strange! born in poverty, life a continual struggle—constantly laboring for food to sustain the body, dying in alms-houses—buried by the charity of brethren, and yet heirs of the kingdom; having a legal right to the city whose streets are paved with gold. Poor and yet rich. Why, your life is like that of your Lord and master, who was born in a stable—raised in poverty—no home, not even a place to lay his head—the women who followed ministering to him of their substance. I wonder if that curiously made coat, without seam, woven from the top throughout, was made by one of those women. It seems to me loving hands must have wrought that singular garment, and loving feet hastened to carry it to Jesus. And perhaps he wore it because he loved the giver. The Savior was indebted—no not indebted; how could he be indebted to man for anything? But he received from his friends food, raiment, and shelter. Even the tomb in which his body was laid, and the linen in which it was wrapped, belonged to another. The earth was his, and the fullness thereof, and yet his friends were obliged to lay him in Joseph's tomb. How poor, and yet he was heir to all things.

Brethren and sisters, are you ever hungry? So was your Savior. Are you sometimes weary? So was he. Do you ever feel forsaken? So did he. Is there no consolation to be derived from all this? Some of us would think it a great honor to live as a king. How much greater honor to be permitted to live as did your Lord!

Sister, do you sometimes look at your coarse clothing, and wish you had better? Think of that other glorious raiment of yours, the garment of salvation, with which the Savior clothed you in the day you gave yourself to him. Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like you. True, he had his royal robes, his crown and jewels, but you have a robe of righteousness, shining white.

"This spotless robe the same appears,
When ruined nature sinks in years;
No age can change its glorious hue,
The robe of Christ is ever new."

You also have the ornament of a meek, and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. And you shall have a crown of life that fadeth not away.

And you, dear widowed sisters, who feel so weak and unprotected, whose home is so lonely since you laid your husband away "to slumber in the silent dust." You who are toiling every day to support your little children—there is a text for you, and it is all your own. That one you have repeated so often when you were almost in despair: "A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widow, is God." If God will be a father to your children, what have you to fear? He knows all their wants. And though he may not give in abundance, yet it comes from the hand of a father, and he knows best. Tell him all your troubles and trials, he has promised to hear you when you pray, "The Lord heareth the poor." And then when you have cast your mite into the treasury of the Church, what does Jesus say? "She has cast in more than they all." More than that rich brother who cast in his hundreds. I think of that other widow, and wonder what her thoughts were as she was going up to the Temple, carrying her two mites—all her living—to give it to God She must have had a trusty heart. And Jesus sitting over against the treasury beheld her pious act, and she perhaps knew it not. She may not have known her Savior, nor heard his words of commendation, yet it seems to me his very presence must have soothed and cheered her. It may be so now, that the Savior is often near us, and we know it not. What a comfort it must be to a pious widow to know that God is in some peculiar sense her God.

And you brother who are toiling so hard to supply your family with the necessaries of life- I wish I could say something to comfort you. Sometimes when you look at your rich brethren you think your lot is a hard one. But if God has chosen you, he surely knows what is best for you. Only trust him and he will bring it to pass, even make you to possess his kingdom. He may be saying to you as he did to the angel of the church in Smyrna: "I know thy works and tribulation, and poverty, but thou art rich, fear none of those things which thou shall suffer, be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." The tenure of earthly possessions is but brief at least, and often ends before the journey of life is over. Job said: "Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked must I return thither again. And Paul said to Timothy, "We brought nothing into the world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." All come alike to the Jordan of death. When we enter that cold stream, nothing will avail us but the righteousness of Christ. It is so ordered of God, that in this life some should have an abundance of this worlds goods, and others but the bare necessities of life; and it will be so—spiritually in the world to come. If every one shall be rewarded according to their works, the reward of some will be much greater than others. One will rule over ten cities, and another five. "But many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first." The richest here may be the poorest there. Think, brother, of that other poor man, whose poverty was so much greater than yours, and besides his body was covered with a loathsome disease. He was the personification of poverty, and yet he was richer than the man within who was clothed in purple and fine linens. He was hungry, but not so needy as he who fared sumptuously every day. Jesus said, on one occasion: "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven." Wealth is often a heavy weight in running the race for heaven. But it is not the great abundance of the things which we possess, that prevents an entrance into the kingdom. We may be the owner of but one little house, in which to shelter our heads from the stormy blast, and if we are unwilling to give up that for Christ's sake, we are too rich to enter heaven. And on the other hand, if we should be the possessor of half a million and are always ready to deliver it all up for the sake of obtaining heaven, we are poor enough to enter therein. "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

It is sad, brother, that you should be obliged to labor so hard all the week that when the day of rest comes, the body is almost too weary to go up to the house of worship. And sometimes you feel that you do not get that sympathy and assistance from the Brotherhood to which you are entitled. If you have to the utmost used the ability which God has given you, and yet have failed; you certainly are entitled to sympathy and assistance to the fullest extent. But if it is denied you, be patient still, and love the brethren none the less; submit it all to God, he will over rule all things for good to them that love him. Let us try and not envy the rich. No doubt they have their burdens too; perhaps heavier than the burden of the poor. Jesus said of some of them, "They have received their consolation," but yours is yet to come. You will receive it when you sit down with Jesus in his kingdom. If the consolation of some of them is all in this world, we should pity rather than envy them. The Bible is full of gracious promises to the poor. I have mentioned but a few of them. You, perhaps, know them all, but sometimes through the weakness of the flesh you forget them, and your spirits languish. If I can "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance," you will be strengthened, and refreshed. God help you to trust him always.

Who is the Eldest Son?

This query has been answered again and again, but never altogether according to my view, and now I will try and give my view also, upon that parable.

Paul writes in Romans, the 5th, Chapter 14th verse: "Nevertheless death reigns from Adam to Moses."—Here Paul certainly had an allusion to a spiritual death. Then it is evident that neither the older nor the younger son were spiritually born in that period of time. We must commence at Moses, where God spoke to him at the Bush.—Exodus 4th Chapter 22nd verse. "And thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, thus saith the Lord, Israel is my Son even my first born. And I say unto thee, let my Son go that he may serve me, and if thou refuse to let him go, behold! I will slay thy Son, even thy first born." Now I will say nothing more concerning the elder Son until I come to Peter, for every Bible reader is acquainted with the older son's conduct, as it was not always very good, but there was always a remnant that did not bow the knee to Baal.

I will now try to say something concerning the younger son. Luke 15th Chapter 11th verse. And he (Christ) said: "A certain man had two sons, the younger of them said to his father. Father give me the portion of goods (spiritual goods) that falleth to me, and he divided unto them his living. And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country." In a spiritual sense he journeyed far from God, and there wasted his substance with riotous living; and when he had spent all his spiritual living, there was a mighty famine in that land (a spiritual famine), and he began to be in want, and went and joined himself to a citizen of that country, (that citizen was the devil). He sent him into his fields to feed swine (or in other words to worship idols, which could give no spiritual food) and he fain would have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat; and no man gave unto him, and when he came to himself he said: How many hired servants of my father have bread (spiritual bread), enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger. I will arise and go to my father and say unto him—father I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son, make me as one of thy hired servants."

My dear brothers and sisters, when we are willing to be hired servants, then we are like Saul was when he said: "Lord what wilt thou have me to do." We are then willing to do what the Lord requires of us. When the son came to the father he said unto him: "Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son."

Cornelius and his house were the first of the younger son that came to the Father. Now, we see that prayer of the son was heard, and also answered, when the Father met him by an angel. The angel said unto him—thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God, and now send men to Joppa and call for one Simon whose surname is Peter, he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do; and when Peter came and spoke to them they were clothed with that new robe, even the Holy Spirit. No doubt Cornelius made them a feast, and they spiritually sung and danced in the Lord.

Now I must say something about this murmuring of the older son. The believing Jews, or rather the circumcision thought it a great sin to eat with the Gentiles. Peter had to be convinced by a vision before he could believe, and when he was come up to Jerusalem, they that were of the circumcision, contended with him, saying, thou wentest unto the uncircumcised, and didst eat with them; but Peter rehearsed the matter to them in order from the begining. This is the murmuring of the older son; not the Pharisees who had strayed farther from the Father than the younger son. They have committed the unpardonable sin, and can never come to the Father in this world, or that which is to come. How could the Father say unto them, thou art with me? Now I will show what makes them brothers. Israel the oldest Son spiritually born under the Mosaic law, and the Gentile nation was spiritually born under the Gospel dispensation, but by the same parent even God. This is the reason they are called brothers in the parable.

"Behold I Have Set Before Thee an Open Door."

Rev. 3: 8.

To the church of Philadelphia it was said: "Thus saith he that openeth and no man shutteth, behold I have set before thee an open door." And the apostle Paul asks his brethren to pray that the door of the word might be opened unto him. And again he says, "a great door and effectual is opened unto us." In Acts 16 we read: "And they were forbidden of the holy ghost to preach the word in Asia. Then they essayed to go into Bithynia, but the Spirit suffered them not." So we see that though the Gospel was to be preached to all nations, yet the door was not opened at that time to preach in those places. But a door was now opened by the Lord, and a voice was heard from Macedonia, "Come over and help us." So in our own time the Lord seems to open the door for his ministers to preach the word. When the war closed it was thought a door was opened to preach in the South. But Brother Hyser has been there three years and we have not heard of one sheep being brought into the fold. The Brethren of Indiana sent a mission to the South. They stopped in southern Indiana. The door was open and the Lord blessed their labor. They went on their mission to the South, but they came back before the time appointed, without success. Thus we may conclude the door was not fully open in the southern States, or the Brethren that went were not persevering enough. But we think it is safe for the brethren to obey the Macedonian calls. That is, go where members are living that are calling for help, or when friends or neighbors have moved to a distance, though they be no members, their calls should be heeded. We would not discourage the brethren from going where they are not especially called. The most successful way to preach where the brethren are not know is to settle among the people and live out what they preach by a chaste walk and a Godly conversation. They must show a concern for the temporal welfare of the children of men. So Jesus went about doing good to the bodies as well as the souls of the children of men. And how could they help loving one that was so good unto them Even so, dear brethren; it is through the material man that we must approach the spiritual man, for if they cannot trust us in temporal things, how can they trust us in spiritual things, which are of so much more value. Let us then do good unto the children of men and then a door will be opened by the blessing of God, into their hearts, that the word preached may enter and become the power of God unto salvation.

We notice many calls made by our brethren, and sisters, and friends, who are scattered over the western States. Yes, there are many doors open. Brethren, are we all of us doing our duty? We now wish to call the attention of the brethren to a call that came from California and Oregon before the war. It was a Macedonian call; the door was open and the brethren thought it good to send two brethren to visit the churches on the shores of the Pacific Ocean; but the journey was a long one, attended with the dangers and privations of two thousand miles over the plains and Rocky Mountains, or a voyage by sea. Some money was contributed, but the war coming on the door seemed to be closed, and the brethren and sisters on the Pacific shore were left to get along as best they could. But now the war is closed, and by the favor of God peace and prosperity again blesses our land. The world has been moving onward. The Atlantic and Pacific oceans are now united by bands of iron. The iron horse is now seen and heard on the western plains, and over the Rocky Mountains. Distance is annihilated; what seemed to be the work of an age, was accomplished in a year. Is not the hand of God in all this? Is it not an opening of the door? Eight days will only be required to go from Chicago to San Francisco on second class trains. The accommodations are said to be as good as on first class trains, taking three days longer to run through. Fare sixty dollars, and some say as low as forty dollars. The brethren in California have appointed a communion on the 14 and 15 of May, and they invite brethren far and near to come. Who will go? In this case it will be necessary for two brethren that are in full office to go. And they should be in the full order of the church in their personal appearance, and they should not only be right themselves but they should be willing to maintain the order of the church wherever they go. Otherwise they would do more harm than good, for like begets like, in the spiritual as well as in the natural kingdom. In this case we would say freely ye have received, freely give. We have plenty of brethren who can go on their own means. Who will go? It may be some of my brethren will say, why do you not say I will go? To this I would say, I am not an elder, but such as I am, I would be willing to go with two such brethren as described above, if life and health would permit. We would like to hear from the brethren through the Companion, or by private letter. What do the brethren think, would it be better to wait and let the Yearly Meeting say who shall go. It could be brought as a question by some District Meeting to the Annual Meeting. Brethren going should have plenty of time. One year would not be too much to spend in California and Oregon, and other places that might call for help, and where there might be an open door for the brethren to labor. What do brethren Jacob Miller, of South Bend, Indiana, James R. Gish, of Woodford, Ill., and other brethren say to it?

DAVID FRANTZ.

Cerro Gordo, Ills.

Then and Now.

No part of a sinners life is more loathsome than when the light of true christianity begins to dawn upon his benighted heart. All his actions and even his very thoughts become loathsome unto him. He begins to look around upon his associates for succor, and would willingly feed upon the husks that they offer unto him if that would satisfy his disturbed mind. But by experience he is made sensible that there he can find no relief. At last he hears the Parent call: "come all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest.

The sinner thus sin-ridden, tired of his load of sins, falls before Jesus and pleads for mercy, pardon, and salvation. The Son replies, I have died—it sufficeth. The poor sinner now quickened, feels sorry, that he had ever done anything contrary to the wishes of him, that had died for him. There is not a brother nor sister that is now engaged in the service of the Lord but what did experience some of the foregoing; some more than others, we will allow. How was it, brethren and sisters, when Jesus said, "peace be still?" when the load of sin fell from our shoulders, when we buried our old Adam, and came forward —a new man formed and shapened after the similitude of Christ. Yea more, when we beheld the society, the members of Christ's body of which we are now made a part. Was not that then perhaps the happiest part of our Christian life? Were we then not minded like Peter, "though all men may forsake thee, yet will I not leave thee." And still stronger were perhaps ready to say I would leave all for Christ's and the brethren's sake. O how full our heart with love at this time; nothing too much trouble. Never better satisfied than if we can sit in company of such who are apt to talk about the things that belong to a progress in our divine life. We can hardly wait until the Lord's day comes along, so that we may attend public worship; help to sing and pray. Our seat is seldom found vacant. Thus many have undoubtly felt and acted.

We will now let our young pilgrim travel on awhile longer. Years have passed by; some were coming others were going. We look to find our zealous young pilgrim, our loving, self-sacrificing, heaven-seeking, sin-hating, young brother and sister, an old member of the Body of Christ. And how do we find some? With John the Revelator we must say, they lost their first love; they settled down upon their lees; they see no more the same efficacy in the blood of Jesus. It is enough if I can say I was grafted into Christ. I am a member of the church militant; I commune once a year, or perhaps once in five or ten years, and that is sufficient. Who has told you so? That zeal or love which you once had? O no: but your indifference to holy things, and your over anxious desires for worldly things and worldly popularity. In place of seeking the company and conversation of the faithful pilgrim, we would rather seek those who have their conversation to please their God—mammon. In place of attending the public assembly of the children of God, they must attend to a social feast, proposed by some good meaning brother and sister. And then as a duty of honor, the compliment must be returned. Thus spending the souls market day in feasting and riotous living.

And again; we sometimes hear brethren say I would go to preaching but it is too far; or it is too unpleasant; the road is too bad, &c. This we will allow to be so; but why is it that the preacher must not fail; no matter how the weather, road, or distance is. And sometimes when the minister inquires into the non-attendance (of members who attend about once a month,) he is quite too meddlesome. We would however make allowance for bad weather, if we did not see that their actions speak louder then their words. Can we not think of some brethren who make such excuses as the above, who go through wet and cold, mud and mire two, three, four, yea ten miles to attend some public sale, and stand in the cold and half freeze, or attend to an election for township, county, or state officers.

And is this all? No, brethren, the saddest part of our history is yet to be chronicled. We see the lukewarmness of such brethren blossom in their offspring. In place of bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord they bring them up to pride; have them to worship the God of this world; help them, and perhaps in many instances build the altars upon which they sacrifice their own precious souls. Oh fathers and mothers, if you would not hear, nor see your children raise their fruitless cries in misery, have a little less pride displayed among them. Give them a better training in the ways of the house of God, and more over if as you wish it not to be said: "thou art in the gate of bitterings," do thy first works over—pray God that the desires of thy heart may be changed, or you surely must be classed with the workers of iniquity. Seek the love and zeal you had when Christ loosed you from the fetters of sin, and darkness, and burn all your wood, hay, and stubble you now love. Consider well the feelings you then had, and you now have.

What Shall I Do?

The answer to this question entirely depends on what you now are. If you are a sinner, seeking salvation, then the less you do the better. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved. If you have just been brought to believe on his name then profess him in baptism; unite yourself with his people; commemorate his love at his own table, and walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless. If you are a baptized believer, in union with his Church, then he would have you to consecrate yourself to his service, visit his sick ones; relieve his poor, circulate his truth, teach his babes, and strengthen his weak ones; bear your testimony for him whenever an opportunity offers. Be much with him in private, read and meditate on his word; aim to honor him in everything; always, and everywhere, carry your religion with you. Wherever you go carry your religion into everything. Be thorough "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Make Christ and his glory the great object and end of your life, so that you may be able to say with Paul: "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain," so that it may be said of us: "None of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself, for whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die we die unto the Lord; whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." Let every purpose we form, every work in which we engage, and every pleasure we enjoy, say: "I am the Lord's." Live for the Lord, work for the Lord, suffer for the Lord, make his precept your rule; his honor your aim, and to please him the end of every action of our life.

Sinning against the Holy Ghost.

In Companion No. 8. Vol. 6, brother D. L. Fisher desired that some one would give his views through the Companion on Matthew 12: 31, 32, which reads as follows: Wherefore I say unto you all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto man: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, shall not be forgiven unto men: and whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man it shall be forgiven him. But whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Now I shall venture an explanation of said passage, and in doing so, if I should fail to give a correct explanation, some brother will correct me.

In the first place, then, in order to get a perfect understanding of the language of the Savior as given above: we must go back and see what gave rise to said language. And in doing so we are forced to these conclusions: first: That blaspheming against the Holy Ghost, is to deny God and the powers of the Holy Ghost. For testimony in support of this idea, turn to the 22 verse of the same chapter, which reads as follows: "Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind and dumb, and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw." We believe he healed him by the power of the Holy Ghost. 23rd verse. "And all the people were amazed and said, is not this the Son of David?" 24th verse. "But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils but by beelzebub the prince of the devil." Right there and then I believe that the Pharisees sinned against the Holy Ghost, by denying the power of Christ, and saying that he cast out devils by beelzebub the prince of devils. The Savior said in verse 28th: "But if I cast out devils by the spirit of God, then the kingdom is come unto you." Here the Spirit of God by which the Savior cast out devils truly was a Holy Spirit. Then to deny God and the power of that most Holy Spirit was sinning against the Holy Ghost, or committing the sin unto death.

For further testimony in support of this, turn to Mark 3: 22. "And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem, said, he hath beelzebub and by the prince of devils casteth he out devils." Here we see another false charge made against our Savior by the scribes which no doubt the Savior considered blasphemy, for it drew out the following language; verse 29, 30: "But he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness; but is in danger of eternal damnation; because they said he hath an unclean Spirit. Again we hear that good man, John the Baptist, say: "for he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God, for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him; the Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hand." John 3: 34, 35. Truly then can we say, that Christ was in possession of the Holy Spirit, if the Father had given all things into his hand. Then if the stiff-necked Pharisees had hearkened to the divine teaching of the Savior, they would not have been charged with blaspheming the Holy Ghost, for he that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. Verse 36: Again; we would call your attention to the reading of Luke 12: 8, 9. "Also I say unto you whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God. But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God.

Again; we call your attention to Peter 2: 2. "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." Here we see that false teachers brought upon themselves swift destruction by denying the Lord.

Now I have endeavored to show that sinning against the Holy Ghost was to Blaspheme the power of Christ: and I have shown that Christ was in possession of the will of God, and the power of the Holy Ghost; for God had given all things into his hands. Truly then can we say to deny the word and work of Christ is sinning against the Holy Ghost, which is different from all other sins; for Christ has declared that all other sins should be forgiven, if man will ask forgiveness in a spirit of love.

We will venture to say further that man is liable to commit the unpardonable sin without ever having acknowledged the word of God; as did the stubborn Pharisees. Equally so can man commit the unpardonable sin after he has confessed the word; for Paul says: that "it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost; and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come: if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance, seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame;" for if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. Then we see that it is possible for those that have named the name of Jesus to commit the unpardonable sin, by falling from faith, and denying the word. Or if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, or word of God. And why have we sinned the sin to death? because we sinned against God; for John says: "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God; and the word was God." So in the church, or out of the church, man can sin against the Holy Ghost. O then reader, let us ever keep this before our minds that if we deny any part of Christ's teachings or that of the Apostles we deny the Holy Ghost; for they spake as the Holy Ghost gave them utterance.

Where is Paradise?

A reply to this query was published on the 8th page of the current Vol. of the Companion. Since then circumstances have led the writer to a farther investigation of the subject, and he is now more firmly convinced than ever, that Heaven and Paradise are but different names for that land of rest, happiness and glory, which is in reserve for the people of God.

Beloved brethren and sisters; it behooves us to examine this subject well; for it is of the utmost importance that we should be unmovably established in the truth in this matter; and know to a certainty that when "to-day" comes, in which we shall depart from this world of sorrow, we will be immediately ushered through the gates of "the Paradise of God," into the presence of our dear Redeemer; because the gross, horrid and monstrous errors of materialism are creating doubt and uncertainty in the minds of thousands.

The readers of the Companion will now be presented with the Scriptural evidence by which the proposition, that Heaven and Paradise are synonymous terms, has been so conclusively demonstrated to my own mind.

The Apostle Paul gives an account of a trance which a certain man had; "How he was caught up into Paradise, and heard unspeakable words," &c. 2 Cor. 12: 4. Here we have the direction of Paradise given as being UP, the same as that of Heaven. Now we do not read in the word of God that any blissful abode is in that direction, except the two mentioned above, and they are each favored with the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ; hence we infer Heaven and Paradise are identical. There is however Scriptural evidence elsewhere, which is sufficient to prove, beyond a doubt, that this very strong inference is a positive fact. The Revelator tells us, the tree of life is in the midst of the Paradise of God. (Rev. 2: 7.) He also informs us, the same tree is in the midst of the Heavenly city (Rev. 22: 1 and 2); therefore Heaven and Paradise are one and the same place. Some may perhaps cavil at this, and say, Heaven and Paradise might be different places, and the tree of life exist in both; but there is positive proof to be found in the 14th and 15th verses of the 22nd Chapter of Revelation, that this tree exists only within the heavenly city. Let us read and examine this passage "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" (verse 14th.) By this we find that only they who do his commandments have a right to the tree of life, and that none of these will be excluded from that glorious city, while all others are shut out; wherefore the tree of life would not be in place outside of her sacred precincts. "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." (15 verse). Hence outside of Heaven the tree of life is not found: but it is found in Paradise; consequently Heaven and Paradise are, to a certainty, only different names for the same holy and happy place.

Because the Spirit of Christ was in Paradise with the soul of him who had been the penitent malefactor, the same day in which their bodies were crucified and slain; and also "preached to the spirits in prison" during the time between the death and resurrection of his body, does not invalidate the above demonstration; but proves conclusively the omnipresence of the Son of God. The Psalmist gives us a sublime and beautiful illustration of this fact, as follows: Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven thou art there. If I make my bed in hell behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. (Psa. 139: 7, 8, 9 and 10.) Christ himself testifies to the same truth (John 3: 13.) "No man hath ascended up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man who is in Heaven!" He tells us here, that mortal man is confined to this world; but that his Spirit, even while living in the body here upon the earth, was present in Heaven. Let us not give ears to the teachings of men who pervert the truth; nor, in our weakness, attach the limits of human nature to our Divine Master; who hath all power in heaven and on earth.

Be not Weary in Well Doing

By Sudie M. Thomas.

Art thou weary Christian pilgrim,
Is this life forlorn and drear?
Trust, oh trust the blessed Savior!
He will comfort, love and cheer.
By and by thy warfare ended,
Thou wilt clearly, plainly see,
All thy cares and toils and trials
On the earth, had need to be.

Crosses that seem hard and heavy,
Will insure the crown more bright,
When we reach those pearly portals,
Where blest spirits reunite.
Then toil on—be patient, Christian,
Jesus promises a rest
Unto all the final faithful,
Where naught can their joys molest.

In the day of our affliction,
When the heart is sad and lone,
Trust the All-wise loving Savior,
Who for us did life atone.
In thy troubles he 'll not leave thee,
Let his staff thy comfort be;
Listen through thy tears—he calleth,
"Weary ones come unto me."

While on earth our blessed Jesus
Suffered More than tongue can tell;
Cruel mockings, bitter treatment—
Yet his language was: "'tis well."
Then faint heart, take courage—onward,
Soon ah! soon, the word may come:
Summer's past—the harvest ended,
Faithful workers welcome home."

Life must have its griefs and sorrows,
But how oft they comfort bring
Unto all the contrite hearted,
Hovering 'neath a Savior's wing.
Then weep not, devoted Christian,
Trust in Jesus—that dear friend;
He will give thee grace to conquer,
And receive thee at the end.

Encouragement.

Christians, if your hearts be warm,
Snow and ice can do no harm;
If by Jesus you are priz'd
Now arise and be baptized.

Jesus drank the gall for you;
Bore the curse to mortals due.
Children prove your love to him,
Never fear the frozen stream.

Never shun the Savior's cross,
All on earth is worthless dross:
If the Savior's love you feel,
Let the world behold your zeal.

Fire is good to warm the soul,
Water purifies the foul:
Fire and water both agree,
Venture soldiers, never flee.

Every season of the year,
Let your worship be sincere,
When the storm prevents your roam,
Serve your precious God at home.

Read his sacred word by day,
Sing his praises, always pray.
Meditate his law by night—
This will give you great delight.

Christian Family Companion

Tyrone City, Pa., March 15 1870.

Every dollar due this office ought to be paid by the first of April next. And what ought to be done, must not be left undone. So we all teach. Let it be practiced also.

The March number of the Pious Youth has been sent out to its patrons and we believe it will meet with a hearty acceptance by all of them.—We now solicit first rate articles from all, for the April number. We will give a free copy for the best essay, of less than three columns, upon the selling of Joseph by his brethren, providing said essay will be good enough to publish.

Hymn 658. We have the tune desired, in round notes, patent notes, and numerals, printed and manuscript The tune is called Iowa. Thanks to all.

Full Files of this Paper can be found in New York, at the office of Geo. P. Rowell & Co., Advertising Agents, No. 40 Park Row.

Nine Hundred and Fifty.

We have now booked nine hundred and fifty new subscribers since our call for one thousand. Still a good ways off. Do you know why? Just because you have not sent that subscriber yet. Now is it possible that we shall fail just on your account. Surely you will not allow that. All the rest have sent their subscriber but you. We cannot think of failing in so important an undertaking. Try your neighbor. If he has not just the money—but will pay during the year send on his name, or loan him the money if you have it plenty.—Take subscribers for one Dollar, cash commencing any time in April to the end of the year. We can still supply a few dozen new subscribers with the back numbers. We would very much prefer to have all subscriptions expire with the year.

Numeral System of Notation.

In another column of to-day's paper will be found a communication from brother Jesse Roop, recommending the Numeral System of writing music. Below we give two specimens. One is Old Hundred, and the other our favorite tune to hymn 658. Any one will be able to read them, after having read brother Roop's article, and by observing the following Explanations: Time is indicated thus: quarter note: 1 (The bare figure); half note 1.. (two periods following the figure); eighth note: .1 (a period preceding the figure. Bars thus: | (a dash sideways). Double bar thus ‖ (a parable). A close thus ‖–. The usual method of dotting notes is observed. A dotted eighth note is written thus: .1.; a dotted half note thus: 1...

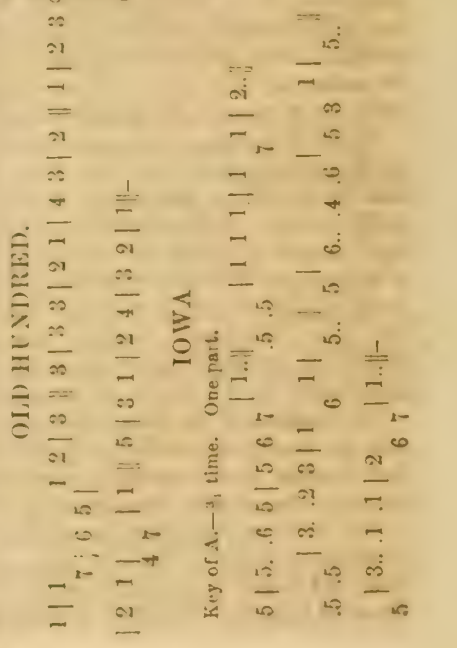
We would suggest that rests might be written thus:

Whole —, half |, quarter :, eighth ;; We would reserve the colon (:) for the repeat mark.

We can positively see no use for any line.

Brethren and friends let us unite and perfect this system.

We may not comprehend the system but we offer these specimens for a beginning.



CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's nam and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

From Brother D. D. Sell.

PLATTSBURG, Mo.)
March 2nd, 1870.)

Brother Henry: I must intrude a little more on the columns of your excellent paper to tell the many whom I visited that I arrived home safely. At Hamilton, where I last wrote, I laid over Saturday and Sunday, 26th, and 27th of February. On Sunday had meeting in the town, in the Baptist meeting house. Although the meeting was not large we enjoyed it well. In the afternoon walked 4 miles North of the Schoolhouse in company with brother Willian B. Sell; had a full house and the best of order and interest manifested, and we do hope and pray that there may be good done at that place, and the brethren's labors crowned with success. Brother George Witwer has the oversight of this arm of the Church. Brethren going over the Hannibal & St. Joe Rail Road would be made welcome to stop at this place, as it is on the line leading through the state from east to west. You can get directions to all the churches North and South of the Rail Road line.

Monday 28th started for the Plattsburg settlement; arrived there in the evening at the house of brother J. R. Ellenberger, where I had my home for the last year. Sorry to say found them most all sick with measles. This disease has been very bad since I left for the East; some have died with them. I still enjoy good health. I am now on my field of labor in this far West again, and I find there is plenty to do. I traveled on this journey about 2700 miles, by public and private conveyance; attended 36 meetings, formed an acquaintance with many brethren that will not soon be forgotten.

And inasmuch as I promised to receipt through the Companion, all that I have received for the purpose of paying what is back on our meeting-house, to save labor we will give the name of the Church and place only.

The above has been thankfully received to assist us in paying for a meeting-house built in 1868 in the Smithfork branch, Clinton Co., Mo.— We are glad to learn by traveling among the brotherhood in the East that they feel a concern for their brethren in the frontier. Though they don't want to go there themselves they are willing to assist to make those comfortable who are willing to take the frontier and labor far away from large meeting-houses and thickly settled neighborhoods.

And I would say to all who have not given their mite, who would like to do something, any amount will be thankfully received even down to the small sum of five cents. We are considerable in debt, and if it lays in my power to keep our house from being sold I would feel myself a thousand times rewarded for all my labors.— Now brethren where these lines may come consider our case and all do as you feel. We have a very good meeting-house and can make all the brethren comfortable that come to see us, if we only can get it paid for. That is the trouble now. All contributions should be sent to Daniel D. Sell Plattsburg, Missouri.

The above amount has been paid into the committee and we warrant all contributions sent to him to be applied to the proper place.

Musical.

Brother Henry: I discover that the reading of my few lines, hastily written, on the Numeral System of writing music, has prompted a desire in you to see the promised specimens. Also your Christian liberality, (founded on the golden rule) has caused you to remember your many interested readers; and to promise them to lay the specimens before them. I now give the specimens with encouragement, though with diffidence, knowing they will be examined by intelligent brethren and sisters, many of them adepts in the science of music. And I ask, in the spirit of Christian love, of all who feel interested, to lay aside all prejudice and give the system a clear investigation, and as full as this limited description will admit. When you comprehend the peculiar features and general import of the system, then give it an impartial comparison with other systems, and give through the Companion your conclusions, with reasons. Also give those conclusions to your neighbors and associates. I think the Numeral System surpasses all other systems in simplicity, and agreement with th natural laws of music, those laws b ing so quickly comprehended, so pe manently retained, and so readily ap plied, in practice, even by children Its simplicity appears to be attractive and enlists the attention of all classes to whom it has been presented.

We all speak unadvisably when we speak of comparing this system with a seven character system, as I did in my former letter. This system has seven characters, the first seven numerals: only the names changed, when used in music. Thus 1 is called Do, 2 Ray, 3 Me, 4 Faw, 5, Sol, 6 Law, 7 is Se. The advantages these characters possess over others, are their respective positions in the octave and relative value to each other are at once known, by any person having the least knowledge of Arithmetic. And this knowledge will remain permanent so long as these characters are used to number objects, and compute values.

Music can be copied in less time and on less space by this system; all four parts not taking as much time, nor as much space, as three parts with other systems. A great advantage, in sending favorite tunes by letter.

There are three Numeral Systems, the one line system, the two line system, and three line system; the last we think is the best. I have applied to our teacher, who is the author of the three line system, for specimens, and short explanations He has kindly responded, and by request has given us two plain old familiar tunes, easily learned; one long metre and one common metre, all of which submitted for publication, for the candid consideration and inspection of the Brotherhood, hoping we may all labor harmoniously together for the good of all in our Master's cause. Fraternally yours. JESSE ROOP.
Linganore, Maryland

Brother Holsinger: I have often thought to write a few lines for the Companion, to let the dear brethren and sisters know that there is a little band of about twenty-five here in North East Missouri. We are considerably scattered, so much so that the meeting only comes once a month in each neighborhood of the brethren. But we have the Bible and the Companion to read between times, which is a great comfort to us sisters that have small children and cannot go to meeting at a distance. We have two ministers. Brother Tazwell Gray is our elder. We have a lovefeast yearly, and truly it is a feast of love to us; if ever there is a happy time here on this earth it is when we all meet to commemorate the death and suffering of our dear Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Brethren and sisters, what a happy time that will be, when we all meet around one table with our dear Lord! Oh, let us one and all try and have our lamps full of oil, that we may be prepared when the Bridegroom comes to enter in with him to the marriage supper.

ELIZABETH E. SMITH.

Queen City, Mo.

Brother Henry: I have received the first copy of the Pious Youth which you sent me, and am highly pleased with it. In reading over its pages it gave me joy to see it filled with such good reading matter. I see that you are trying to make it a valuable paper for the youth of our day. I think that it is just the paper we ought to have among our youth to advocate the truth. If we look upon the condition of our youths in this our country, it is mournful to think how they are taught through some of their periodicals; how they are taught quite a different doctrine to that which the Scriptures teach us. And often it is preached out of the pulpit, and taught for the truth. Look at their Sabbath School libraries; how they are taught of small children that how they talked of their Savior and how they prayed, and all only a fable. We ought to be careful, and always hold to that which is in accordance with the Scriptures. Collect such reading as will teach them the true faith, for I think that the Sabbath School and these periodicals are the nurseries of the church. So we ought to be careful and give them good and sound doctrine to read.

Our Companion I think has very good reading for our children. I would not do without it for double its price; it comes to us weekly and is welcome every time it comes. I think it has sound doctrine, and always contends for the truth as it was given by our Master. I hope our brethren and sisters will keep on writing for the Companion, and not get weary in well doing and trying to advocate the cause of our Master.

SOUTH BEND, IND.
Feb. 28th, 1870.

We, the brethren of the South Bend congregation, Ind., having previously made arrangements to hold a series of meetings, called brethren Daniel Shively, and Jesse Calvert to our assistance, to whom we feel thankful for the labor performed, and being actuated upon by the Spirit of God, to whom we render thanks for blessings received. We commenced the meeting in the west meeting-house, Sunday, Feb 13th, and closed Saturday 19th. The brethren received ten applicants by baptism, and reclaimed one sister. We then resorted to the east meeting-house, of same district; continued meeting until the 27th, and received fourteen more applicants making 24 in all. During same week the brethren attended two funeral occasions: the 1st a man not a member of the church; the 2nd a sister who had been recently anointed. From appearances deep impressions have been made upon the minds of the people of this vicinity, notwithstanding the many direct oppositions to the Word of God and his people with which we are surrounded. The Lord is truly blessing the labors of the ministry for the extension of his kingdom.

DANIEL WHITE.

Brother Holsinger; The Companion is coming to hand once more. O how glad we are for it. We always find some good instruction in it. We could not do without it; we love to hear of satan's ranks being thinned and the borders of zion enlarged. We do love to read church news; and I thought I would try for the first time to write you something. We moved here one year ago, and I found but two members that had proved steadfast. In the Fall brother & sister Dell moved to us, he being a minister. Soon brethren Smith, Garver, and Wyland made us a visit and preached. We then organized a church, and had the pleasure of seeing two sisters, and one brother come back into the fold. We have had a lovefeast. There are nine of us now. This winter brother Snyder and Wyland made us a visit and preached at different places in the valley, and with good effect, as several have said they will unite with us. We expect some more brethren to move to us this spring. We expected brother Smith of Indiana to move to us this spring, but we are disappointed.—Hope he will change his mind and come yet. This is a good healthy country and the best of all, we have good prospects of a large church. Hope brethren seeking homes in the west will come and see us and our country. May the good Lord ever bless and enable the kind and loving brethren that have come to preach to us, to go on in the noble cause, and in the end receive the rich reward. And may the Lord send others to labor among us.

For the Companion.

To the Isolated.

We know that there are brethren and sisters living at a distance from church facilities, who have not the privilege of assembling themselves together as the apostle exhorts. To such I wish to drop a word of encouragement, knowing that I, who can frequently meet with my loving brethren and sisters, still feel the great necessity of encouragement. And having enjoyed sweet communion I have many times been made to rejoice in God my Redeemer by meeting with the people who are not ashamed of God and his word; who stand up boldly in defense of the truth; and not only by meeting them personally but also in our church periodicals. O how much comfort I have derived from reading the warm, heart felt expressions of many who love the Lord. And taking a view of our surroundings and different situations in life we find ourselves compassed about with temptations, and trials meet us on every hand, every inducement is held out to win us from the one that loves us and has purchased us with his own blood. His we are and let us not forsake him for all the world bestows; but let us resist the temptations and bear the Christians trials knowing that they work for us a more exceeding weight of glory. Truly they make the cross heavy, for the time being; but at this moment let us cast our eyes up to Calvary and there behold the Lamb of God nailed to the rugged wood; (a cross) a token which we must bear in mind.

If the path that Jesus walked had been a pleasant path we too should have a pleasant road; but since he made and walked a rugged road we should not get discouraged if we do find ups and downs and crosses in the way; if lions prowl around us and darkness covers our pathway, and we feel our little life-boat almost giving way; we feel to give up the ship; but no, no; look to the east and behold the Star of Bethlehem. It gives light to our pathway, and dispels every gloom of darkness, and will guide us to the Celestial City. Be strong in faith, waver not, for then shall we be tossed to and fro as the waves of the sea. If we give way in the least to seducing spirits and strange doctrine, we are in great danger of being led away from Christ; step by step we are hurried along until by and by we are found in the great channel of unbelief. Let us resist every temptation, as much as in us lies, and through the great power of God we shall come off more than conquerors; remembering that prayer is the great weapon of our warfare, and without it we can accomplish nothing. In secret communion with God are the sweetest moments we can enjoy, especially in time of trouble. There is no friend on earth so lovely and so good. He has promised to send his angels to minister unto us, if we are pure in heart and desire nothing but to do his will. Then when fiery trials surround us, and we are almost overcome with grief, these angels lift our eyes and direct them to Calvary, where we behold the dying agonies of a dear Redeemer. What he has suffered for us that we may reign with him! We are made to blush at our groans, and rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer a little in comparison to his extreme agonies. And if you cannot often meet in the capacity of brethren and sisters, which is indeed a happy privilege to many, you can still meet your God in the closet, a privilege which no one can rob you of.

You can stand for God though you stand alone,
With your heart at rest and your soul secure;
With the rock beneath, and in front the throne,
You can stand and still endure.

MARY ROHRER.

Honey Grove, Pa.

Dear Brother Henry; Please notice through the Companion that the brethren of the Northern District of Illinois, intend to meet together in church council (The Lord willing) on the 23rd. day of May next, in the brethren's meeting-house at Hickory Grove, Carroll Co. A lovefeast at the same place on Saturday and Sunday previous. Also a number of lovefeasts through the different churches of northern Ills., till time of Annual Meeting; the last one at Wadams Grove, Stephenson Co., (where the Annual Meeting was held in 1856) on the 4th and 5th of June, leaving ample time to arrive at place of Annual Meeting on the evening of the 6th at 2 P. M. The brethren going to Annual Meeting are requested to stop with us during the above named meetings and thus prevent the crowd at place of Annual Meeting before Monday evening the 9th. This is the only direct route of Annual Meeting; from Chicago via Freeport, Lena, Dunleith, Waterloo. Brethren leaving Lena in the morning arrive at Waterloo at 2 P. M.

Brethren coming to District Meeting will change cars at Freeport for Mount Carroll, where the brethren will have conveyances to place of meeting, 4 miles. Brethren who wish to stop at the last named meeting will stop at Lena, two miles from place of meeting.

By order of the church in Ills. and Iowa.

Education.

As there appears to be a growing interest among us in reference to education, and the brethren of our state having taken the subject into consideration, and will present to our next Annual Meeting resolutions touching the matter, we will try to present a few thoughts relative to this important subject.

We as a religious people are certainly in the rear in affording facilities for our children to acquire an education of a better grade than can be obtained in our Common Schools. And looking at the subject from an intelligent standpoint, has stirred up the minds of many of our old members to the importance of having schools under the control of our own people; for many have learned to their sorrow that when their children go from home to these schools under the influence of other denominations, by the time they are through with their studies, they have so fully imbibed their principles that they seldom come to the church of the Brethren. There is a secret influence exerted by teachers over their pupils, that, notwithstanding he says nothing to them upon the subject of Bible theology, they are still influenced towards his peculiar theories.

I have in my mind instances where leading brethren's children have gone to the schools referred to and as a consequence are in other churches, and some of them preachers in pedobaptist churches, whilst their fathers are preaching for the Brethren. This of course is not pleasant; it is not good.

This being the case the brotherhood should be stirred in relation to this subject, and we certainly should make provisions for the education of our own children. We are responsible for the influences which we throw around them while the mind is yet so susceptible to lasting impressions.

I very well know that every true brother and sister believes we have more truth in our church than all other churches, and that they would rather see their children under the influence of brethren as teachers than to put them under Presbyterian, Methodist or any other religious influences. Brethren I feel sure that I am right in my convictions. This being the case, dont forget to go to our next A. M. with your minds prepared to consider this question, impartially, and let us have a discussion from that authority favoring the establishment of such schools as our brethren may deem most advisable for the promotion of the noble cause that we as a body of christians represent in the world. I very well know that we have a few members who are still opposed to education, but I am very thankful that they are greatly on the decrease. This class sometimes refer us to the Apostles, saying that the Savior chose illiterate men to preach the Gospel. What if he did, he spent over three years in educating them, both by precept and example, and then increased their retentive powers so as to enable them to remember all the instructions he gave them. I do not believe we ever had men better educated for the ministry than the Apostles were, from the fact we never have had such teachers as the Savior was.—God always chose men qualified to accomplish the labors devolving upon them, or if they lacked the essential qualifications he at once went to work and gave it to them.

Look back to the time of the liberation of the Israelites. God chose a man well educated and his education was of that character that very peculiarily qualified him for the work. I mean Moses. And again when it became necessary to send the Gospel to the Gentiles who were men of education, Paul was chosen a man of a liberal education, so that he could say "are they learned ? so am I." So you see that education sanctified to a good purpose is a great help. If it were not for educated men we would not be able to-day to read the Holy Scriptures in our vernacular tongues. To be able to translate Greek into English, the translator must be educated in both. So you see that education is a good thing when rightly applied.

Error in above named Enigma. "Valuable kind of word" is valuable kind of wood. The figures intended for "truth" would spell "truht." Enigmas are much harder to work when mistakes occur.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Delaware county, Ind., December 11th, 1869, MAGGIE B. HOOVER, daughter of brother John and sister Elizabeth Hoover; aged 2 years and 8 days.

In the same family, MARY A. HOOVER, December 13th. Thus in two days the parents were deprived by death of their two little daughters. Disease Congestion of the Brain. These little ones were suddenly called from their earthly home to their heavenly Father's house. Maggie took sick on Monday night about 12 o'clock, and died Friday about 1 o'clock. Mary took sick Thursday about 10, and died Sunday morning about 8. The two little sisters were put in one coffin and buried in one grave. May God comfort the hearts of the dear parents; may they not mourn as those who have no hope. Funeral on Monday 14th. Occasion improved by brother John Studebaker and the writer from 1st Thess. 4: 13, to end of chapter, to a solemn and attentive audience.

ISAIAH J. HOWARD.

In Wadam Grove branch, of Lung Fever and Dropsy in the head, MAURICE WESLEY, infant son of George and Lydia JORDAN; aged 4 months and 11 days. Funeral services by brother John Wesley, from Matt. 18: 2, 3, 4. I can truly say with the servant Job, "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord." He hath taken my dear little one out of its suffering to a world of glory where it is free from all pain, for great were its sufferings here. We mourn not as those without hope, we know that our loss is its eternal gain.

LYDIA JORDAN.

In Moultrie Co., Ill., November 10, 1869, brother SAMUEL HAMM; aged 45 years, 2 months, and 7 days. He left a wife and five children to mourn their loss. His funeral was preached in Montgomery County Ind., on the second Sunday in February, by Robert H. Miller, from 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2 The bereft sister is a sister to the writer.

DANIEL H. HIMES.

Feb. 7th, in the Mohican branch, Wayne county, Ohio, BARBARY FRANTZ, daughter of brother Jacob and sister Barbary Wohlgamuth. But a few weeks before her death our young friend had all the prospects of life and happiness in this world that any of our most favored young people have; having been a bride but a short time before the relentless messenger of death called upon the parents, brothers, sisters, and the young husband to part with one of their most loved ones. Oh how solemn did we all feel. A series of meetings were in progress at the time, at the meeting-house close by, brethren Nicholson and Keim being with us on a mission of love. The father of the deceased came to me one evening and stated that his daughter was very sick and requested a visit from me and several others whom she especially desired to see. We immediately left the meeting in charge of the other brethren, and went accompanied by brother Henry Worst and others. We found her indeed sick both mentally and physically. We sang several hymns, read the parable of the prodigal son, in Luke 15th, explained as well as we could how we all strayed away from our Father's house; how uncertain all things in this "far country" are; and how very willing our heavenly Father is to receive us back again, if we are willing to come penitent and willing to obey.

She believed the word; we prayed with her. Oh, we thought if ever God heard our prayers it was then. We still believe he did. After prayer she seemed entirely composed. I thought she looked more like an angel than a mortal being. She desired to follow her Savior into the watery grave, but when told that she was too weak then to do so, she was satisfied to leave her case entirely in the hands of the Lord, and we feel satisfied that her will was accepted for the act. We then after a few words of encouragement left her, hoping she would be able in a few days to obey the word, but the next word we got was the mournful tidings "she is dead." Thus as a flower of the field she was cut down, but we hope to bloom again in the Elysian fields of glory, her age was 21 years less three days, on the 9th she was placed in her last earthly house in the Mohican grave yard. Her funeral was attended by an unusually large crowd of people. Occasion improved by the writer assisted by brother Nicholson and others from the message which Isaiah the Prophet brought to Hezekiah the King: "Set thy house in order for thou shalt die and not live."

P. J. BROWN.

February 24th, at the house of her son, brother Isaac Kemper, near Lena, Stephenson county, Ill., SUSANNA MARGARET, widow of brother Adam KEMPER, who died about twenty years ago, at Ephrata, Pa.; aged 83 years, 10 months, and 28 days. Occasion improved by brethren Enoch Eby and Daniel Fry, from Numbers 23: 10, latter part.

ALLEN BOYER.

Visitor please copy.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria Co., Penna., February 19th, DAVID GROVE, son of brother Thomas and sister Susan Grove; aged 21 years, 6 months, and 20 days.

This young man had been sick, but was recovering, so that he could walk around: when he was suddenly taken with a violent pain in the bowels. The physician was called, but human aid seemed to fail. He then sent for the brethren, and requested to be immersed, and could hardly wait until the work was accomplished. He lived six hours afterwards. This is a loud call to the young. Funeral services by the writer and other brethren, from Job 14: 14.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we hope, for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S
Celebrated
Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging, by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, and so on. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Bilious Fever, and all derangements of the internal viscera. You have in this medicine a PANACEA for some of the most painful and dangerous of all diseases.

As a Female Regulator it has no peers in the world. Married ladies, who never have had children, seldom know the cause of their unhappy condition, which is very often depending upon a faulty state of the Uterine Organs, which can only be removed by the use of suitable remedies.

LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The state and quality of the bile must first be attended to in order to preserve health. The bile in a vitiated state, or when not duly secreted, is oftener obstructed in the liver and gall bladder, and becomes a source of dyspepsia, constipation, and nervous complaints, jaundice etc. The Panacea being strictly vegetable, and containing great anti-bilious properties, and great alterative properties also, will act like a most happy medicine in this complaint. Thousands have tried it, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine after exhausting their purses and patience in search of health.

Giddiness of the head, dullness of the most fetid breath, coated tongue, loss of appetite, pains and weakness in the stomach, enlargement of the liver, yellowness of the skin, constant fever and thirst, with a total distaste for business, pleasure, or any kind of employment. FAHRNEY'S PANACEA, if taken and persevered in for a few days, will remove this whole class of symptoms. The [illegible] of the body become pure, the mind clear, the stomach strengthened, the tongue clean, the appetite improved and the whole system so invigorated that disease, during bad weather, is less liable to afflict you.

"An Ounce of Prevention is worth more than a Pound of Cure." The PANACEA will not cure a case of old standing and inveterate complaints, but is one of the best preventatives of such diseases ever offered to the world.

You can avoid [illegible] such diseases as Cholera, Small Pox, Typhoid Bilious Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, by keeping your blood purified. The different degrees of all such diseases depend altogether upon the condition of the blood, for if this vital fluid is depraved, you will take a disease much more readily than otherwise, and the recovery will be in proportion to the amount of foreign matter in the blood. It is so reasonable that we need not here make any illustrations.

This Medicine is highly recommended for the treatment of chronic and [illegible] complaints, such as Scrofula, Letter, Salt Rheum, Ringworm &c.

THE Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Mary Magdalene.

BY FRANCIS S. KEY.

To the hall of the feast came the sinful and fair,
She heard in the city that Jesus was there;
Unheeding the splendor that blazed on the board
She silently knelt at the feet of the Lord.

The hair on her forehead, so sad and so meek,
Hung dark on the blushes that burned in her cheek;
And so sad and so lowly she knelt in her shame.
It seemed that her spirit had fled from her frame.

The frown and the murmur went round through them all
That one so unhallowed should tread in that hall,
And some said the poor would be objects more meet
For the wealth of the perfume she poured at his feet.

She heard but her Savior, she spoke but in sighs,
And she dare not look up to the heaven of his eyes.
And the tears gushed forth with each heave of her breast,
While her lips to his sandals were throbbingly pressed.

In the sky after a tempest as shineth the bow,
In the glance of the sunbeam as melteth the snow,
He looked on the lost one, her sins are forgiven,
And Mary went forth in the beauty of Heaven.

Work of the Righteous.—No. 2.

BY D. B. MENZER.

"The work of the righteous shall be peace."

Long ago this prophetic line became a sacred attestation to the real character of a righteous person. The holy prophet, who wrote the text "spake as he was moved by the Holy Ghost."—The declaration has, therefore, a proper origin: its origin is heavenly and Divine. In this case, as well as in many others, is portrayed the character of a righteous man or woman. Not of one who pretends to be righteous, but one who is righteous. "The work of the righteous shall be peace." Not may be peace, but shall be. Who can evade the directness of it? The righteous man's work shall be a work of peace. Its work is peace. Strife and contention are not attributes of a character of righteousness; but they belong to the dominion of Satan, the author of all evil. The work of unrighteous men is unholy strife, but the work of the righteous is peace. It was so during the dispensation of "the law and the prophets," and it is no less, but even more, so in the present dispensation of "grace and truth." Now it is declared that "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." So the work of the children of God is peace, or making peace. God is the Author of peace. His sovereignty is one of peace. He cannot permit war in his realm. Peace, order and holiness forever will reign supreme within the limitations of God's jurisdiction; for the very ideas of war, and disorder, and unholiness are in direct and hostile collision with the character and Divine perfections of the Deity. Any element whose tendency is to disunite, to disarrange, or to corrupt, cannot be tolerated in Jehovah's habitations. Man is the subject of redemption, and it is the purpose of the Redeemer to prepare the redeemed for heirship to the Heavenly inheritance; and in order that this purpose may be executed or carried out, man must accept and submit to the conditions upon which "the King of Glory" will receive alienated, rebellious men, and constitute them subjects of his Kingdom. These conditions are plainly delineated in the Gospel Scriptures, and are set forth as follows: Repentance from dead works or the works of unrighteousness; faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ or a practical belief in his Divinity and saving authority; and baptism for the remission of sins.—See "Acts of the Apostles," 2: 38, 39. A proper compliance with these conditions is essential to our adoption into the "household of faith," and indubitably necessary to the reception of the gift of the Holy Spirit, as may be seen by a candid investigation of the apostle Peter's answer to the inquiring sinners on that memorable day of Pentecost. Thus are God's arrangements, and are, therefore, right. "Every word of God is pure," and all his ways are right. The man who doubts or questions the righteousness of the Eternal, takes a stand beyond the limits of salvation. So also, we argue that, he who doubts or questions the validity of all God's revelation, or refuses any of the conditions of salvation as being unimportant, or perverts, or willingly mutilates the essential teachings of Holy Writ,—that individual, we say by authority, exposes himself not only to "the righteous judgment of God," but to the vengeance which, at a future day, will be taken "on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

My kind reader, dost thou "observe all things whatsoever Jesus has commanded" his disciples? "Search the Scriptures," and see what thou yet lackest. The work of righteousness only will secure happiness for your soul in the world to come. Make your perfect peace with God, and live a life of peace, that you may depart in peace.

The Serpent Versus the Woman

As I was last week reading the biography of brother Abraham Rothrock, I was again forcibly reminded of the enmity which the Lord told the old serpent after the first transgression in Eden, he would put between the two generations; saying, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed." This is the decree of the Most High though not the penalty for transgressing his command. Then, some time after the announcement of this decree, two sons were born to our first parents: their names were Cain and Abel. But Cain posessed that enmity, because he was of that wicked one, (1 John 3, 12.) and he was a type of the children of disobedience, through all time unto the end of the world. But Abel was a shepherd: he was honest and upright, true and faithful, but persecuted and finally slain through the enmity which the Lord had put between the two generations—between thy seed and the woman's seed. Abel was a type of the woman, which is the church of God. He was also a type of the woman's seed, which was promised to our first parents already, who was to bruise the serpent's head; and when he offered sacrifice to God, he took a lamb, the "firstlings," or first-born of his flock, which was also a type of "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world:" and he offered it in faith, and the Lord had respect for his offering. But when Cain saw that his brother Abel was more highly respected of the Lord, than he was, he became jealous and envious, for he was selfish and his works were evil, because he was of that wicked one, who was a murderer from the beginning.

But we must remember that Cain also professed religion: he pretended to serve the Lord: he offered sacrifice, but in his own righteousness: he was a hypocrite, a false worshipper, as there are thousands now-a-days, and have been in all past ages, who, in their devotions have a form of godliness, but in their works, they deny the power thereof. And as the Prince of darkness, who is an enemy of all righteousness, is transformed into an angel of light, as he was already when he appeared to our first parents in the garden of Eden, in the disguise of a harmless, beautiful serpent, so his seed love darkness rather than light, and are enemies to all righteousness. For if the old Hypocrite had appeared in his true colors, as the Prince of darkness, our first parents would not have been deceived, and he could not have brought his offspring spiritually in the shape of human form into the world, appearing outwardly as the offspring of God, and his worshippers as the worshippers of God. But now the two generations are in this world under the types of Cain and Abel, as the children of darkness, and the children of light; and the enmity which God put between the two generations, is still manifest among the children of darkness, and will continue so until the end of time. The children of darkness are the children of this world which lieth in darkness, and they hate the children of light, who are pilgrims and strangers in this world, seeking a world to come wherein dwelleth righteousness—because the Lord has respect for the children of light and for their offspring: and the children of darkness are condemned already, because they do not sincerely believe in the name of the only begotten Son of God. (John 3. 18.) since they "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved." This enmity which we think is good in its place, has been manifest in all ages; for, which of the prophets and holy apostles, have the enemies of righteousness not persecuted and slain? And many more of whom the world was not worthy, being destitute, afflicted, tormented. (Heb 11, 38.) They wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins, in desert, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. They were scourged and stoned: they suffered bonds and imprisonments, that they might obtain a better resurrection.

A moral man who is not attached to any creed or false doctrine, will seldom be found to possess much of that enmity against the children of light, but very often they will almost be persuaded to be a christian. But immoral men and false professors, hypocrites and enemies to the name of Jesus Christ, have in all ages possessed that enmity which the Lord put between the two generations. And it seems to me it must be so, to make the children of light look upward for a better home from whence there cometh help; because here we have no home, and the things of this world are not our own. They were all lost through Adam's fall. Because when Adam fell where his deceiver fell, he fell lower yet than he, he fell under him; and lost his glory and his majesty. And his deceiver, the old hypocrite usurped his whole dominion and held mankind in bondage. But because God had planted a seed in Adam, which was immortal, spiritual, in his similitude, because God is a spirit, he knew that his seed would prosper, and therefore he put enmity between the two generations, that the old serpent and his seed should persecute the woman's seed until the measure of their evils should be full, that unto his charge, God might lay the blood of all the prophets, and of all that were slain on the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of the last saint which is shed upon the earth. Now since these things are so let us not despair when hypocrites and false professors hate us, and speak all manner of evil against us. Let us rather rejoice if we have brethren who are accounted worthy to suffer persecution for the sake of Jesus Christ, that their reward may be great in heaven.

Harleysville, Pa.

A Sad and Terrible Accident.

This neighborhood was startled by the news of a terrible calamity that occurred at Johnson's Corners near the N. E. corner of this county last Friday afternoon.

The boiler of a steam saw-mill exploded, killing at most instantaneously seven men. Four were employed in the mill, the three others were carpenters working on a building close by, who had sought shelter in the mill from the rain. One other man had left the mill but a few minutes previous to the explosion to hold his team, as a train of cars was approaching, and thus escaped the fate which befel his less fortunate companions.

This is but a sober announcement of the uncertainty of human life, and the necessity for always being prepared to meet the judge of the quick and dead. We surely in the midst of life are in death, and we know not in which moment we may be called upon to appear before the judgement bar of God. The knowledge of this fact, demonstrated by almost daily occurrences brought to our notice, should act as a restraint on all improper conduct; for who, however seemingly wicked and depraved, would choose to die with a horrid oath or blasphemy on his lips, or an evil or disturbed thought in his mind. Even the culprit, under sentence of death calls around him spiritual advisers, and tries to put his house in order for the day and hour of his execution arrives. Professors inhibited,—men who had spent their time and talents in demonstrating as false the teachings of the Bible, and the immortality of the soul, have sought to hear the dark portals of the tomb, and repented of the unprofitable manner in which they had spent their lives. All would desire time to compose their minds and utter a prayer for the salvation of their immortal souls ere they make their exit to an eternity.

Since then this preparation is so needful and desirable and it is so uncertain, why put off the time of preparation for a single day or hour?

"Today the savior calls,
Ye wanderers come;
Oh, ye benighted souls,
Why longer roam?
The spirit calls today,
Yield to its power;
Oh grieve it not away
For mercy's hour."

"Lay aside every weight."

As applied to Christians, it means they should remove all which would obstruct progress in the Christian course. It is not the same thing to all persons. In one it may be pride, in another worldly; in another vanity, in another a violent and ungovernable temper, in another a heavy, hard, unfeeling heart, in another some improper and unholy attachment. Some professors would make much more progress than they would if they understood the nature of the heavy weight of gold which they are endeavoring to carry with them. Even a feather or a straw may become such a weight that they cannot well make much progress toward the prize.

RECREATION.—It is more desirable to be serviceable by acting according to several duties, to be happy in going against it.

False Prophets.

Truly the Lord's wrath was kindled against the false prophets in the days of Ezekiel, when the Lord said: "say unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts: hear ye the word of the Lord, woe unto the foolish prophets that follow their own spirits and have seen nothing," or things that the Lord never had shown unto them. "O Israel thy prophets are like the foxes in the desert; * * * they have seen vanity and lying divinations, saying the Lord saith: and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope that they would confirm the word; * * * whereas ye say, the Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken." Hence the Lord declared he would be against them, and his hand should be upon them. They should not be amongst his people, neither should they be written in the writings of the house of Israel, "neither shall they enter into the land of Israel."—And he farther said: "because they have reduced my people, saying peace and there was no peace; and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar." But the Lord said it should fall; "and a stormy wind shall rend it." In his anger and fury it should be consumed and the foundation of it should be discovered.

Our Lord to-day is the same Lord that he was yesterday and forever; so then unto the false prophets, and false teachers of these last days, who refuse to hear him that speaks from heaven. Those that speak "out of their own hearts," and follow their own spirits, and teach things as of the Lord, when the Lord never showed them unto them. How like "foxes in the desert," cunning and artful. Saying the Lord saith so and so in his word, when "the Lord hath not sent them." They make others to hope all is well, that their faith might be confirmed; saying "The Lord saith it; albeit I have not spoken." The hand of the Lord will be against them; they shall not be in the assembly of God's people—will be lacking the mark by which his people are known. They shall not have their names written in the "Lamb's book of life," nor their names inscribed in the statutes of God's righteous remembrance. "Neither shall they enter into the land of Israel"—into the heavenly Canaan, because they have seduced the people, saying peace, where there is no peace—only in a slumbering conscience. Some have built up a wall—ordinances or commandments of men—"and, lo others daubed it with untempered mortar"—with horrid tongues and words of man's wisdom has seemingly smoothed the way from earth to heaven—but alas! not being tempered with divine truth, "it shall fall." God's anger shall overfall it as a mighty shower; his fury as a storm of "hailstones" shall consume it; "a stormy wind shall rend it." "The foundation thereof shall be discovered." Wo then unto them that have built thereon; "the wall is no more, neither they that daubed it." All, all, utterly perished!

O reader, think for yourself; be not led about by every wind of doctrine. If ye are blind and led by the blind, and fall into the ditch, wherewithal shall your excuse be, where all may know the way of the Lord in this land of Bibles. Read and think for yourself; because your precious soul's salvation is at stake. Whenever you, in the earnestness of the spirit, lay aside all else but: "Lord what will thou have me to do?" and say in fervent prayer: "let there be light!" and there will be light.

We Invite All.

A Dialogue.

Variety. Why do you not invite other denominations to commune with you?

Brethren. We do: and often with tears.

V. We are much surprised to hear you say so; for we have attended many of your communions, and we never have had an invitation.

B. Perhaps you were not quite attentive enough or your mind was not fully fixed on God's word.

V. We generally take it for the man of our counsel, and at many times we preach just as you do.

B. Have you not heard the many solemn warnings given that "if we or an angel from heaven, preach any other doctrine than that which has been preached, let him be accursed?

V. We have.

Then to be pointed, in order (God's house is one of order) that people be worthy communicants they "should speak the same thing;" "bear one another's burdens and be one in Christ Jesus."

V. You are correct in your last conclusions

B. When we assemble upon such solemn occasions, we must examine ourselves to see if we are at peace with God, or have anger against our brethren or they against us. If so it has to be settled. Then we wash each others feet, eat a supper together; greet one another with a kiss. This we find in the Scriptures

V. They are all in the Scriptures, but we think they are not binding, and therefore say "let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."

B. Then according to the Scripture referred to, viz Rom. 14, from 5 verse to the last, you admit too much: for that Scripture teaches the principle that if we regard these unto the Lord, and give him thanks we do his will, and if we do not regard them we give him no thanks: for "we are created unto good works that we should continue in them," and thank God for the same.

V. Then you unchristianize all others

B. Not in the least; that power does not belong to us: each one possesses the privilege of becoming a christian or remaining an unbeliever. So we find many things contained in the Scriptures and if we do not preach them and practice them, the Prophet says the blood of those that look to us for instruction shall be required at our hands.

V. We admit such to be facts.

B. To call us christians then, what we do must be christian acts, and you are bound in order to be christians according to your own words to observe the same, for the things that we do that you do not are established, or set at naught, by both of us. If we admit you to commune without washing feet, &c. we admit them not to be binding and this we cannot do; and to invite you to do that which you have no faith in, would be asking you to sin. But we do say have faith and sin not.

V. "Truth is stronger than fiction."

Then in conclusion let us be neither adders nor diminishers, nor be caught in this dilemma: that if we would commune with you, and leave part undone, and you commune with us and return to yourselves, we (both of us) might be like the old fathers of Jerusalem. After the first temple had been destroyed and the second was built, they visited it and beheld it destitute of many of its beauties, and they wept. So if Christ and his apostles would behold us attempting to follow their footsteps, would they not have reason to weep when we leave part undone knowing that we could not enter?

God's Loving Kindness.

How merciful; how good is the loving-kindness of our great creator unto the children of men. How tenderly does he watch over and protect us through all the dangers and the everchanging scenes of our lives: even from our earliest youth up to old age, is that same kindness and watchfulness manifested toward all his living creatures. Often, perhaps, we are surrounded by artful temptations and will and the wicked one, but we are very nearly overpowered and ruined thereby, or perhaps we may have strayed a few steps from the paths of virtue and rectitude, and then, perhaps, we may feel to repent and turn from our wicked ways: but now we are in despair. We know and deeply feel how sinful and ungrateful we have been to him who has ever shown us such loving kindness, and who strives to keep us in paths of righteousness, and thus save us from this sad state of degradation. But behold, now, while we are in this dark despair, caused by our sin and folly, he does not desert us, but very mercifully uplifts us by his omnipotent hand and forgiving smile, and bids us to "look unto Jesus" for strength. "Come unto me all that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." And when at last we humbly submit to his will, and lean upon his Almighty arm for support, we praise his holy name and feel to exclaim with the poet:

"He saves me from my lost estate,
His loving kindness, oh, how great."

And thus it is ever through life; if we but realize his goodness as we should, we cannot fail to discover his loving kindness manifested in all things. Although it may often seem to us that he is chastising us with great afflictions and bereavements, yet we can in time by his grace perceive that it is through his loving kindness to our souls that he thus deals with us.

Oh, yes, dear sisters and brethren, it is most assuredly through his loving kindness, and by his holy spirit that we are made to "fear no evil" and to "lie down in green pastures" and are led "by the still waters."

"Awake, my soul, in joyful lays,
And sing thy great Redeemer's praise,
He justly claims a song from thee,
His loving kindness, oh, how free."

A Letter.

In reply to one received from Daniel Wagoner.

Dear brother in Christ, though stranger in the flesh. Your letter is at hand and I feel somewhat surprised to receive a letter containing my article in the Companion on "Growth in grace." You say you need admonition, and hope I will not urge to give it." I trust, dear brother, that we all need admonition, who become feed for the soul, that we may have this grace more abundantly shed abroad in our hearts. I am but a young man, yet I have a dear wife and child, am living in town, engaged in selling hardware. Thus situated as I am, surrounded by various temptations on every hand, I feel my unworthiness, and would much rather receive admonition than give it. [illegible] requested me not to forget you in my devotions, I assure you I have not, may [illegible] you.

You remarked that while you approach your Maker, [illegible] owing to complaints presented by [illegible] cast your care upon God, in [illegible] to hear and [illegible] Oh let not temptations keep you back. Behold the poet, [illegible]

[illegible]

Let us ever keep the watchword "Pray without ceasing" in our minds. That is, let us [illegible] upon God, upon heaven and divine things. We can then through our daily avocations in life be more able to return unto God his own with usury. If we cannot pray as well as others of our brethren, we can as much as say, "Lord be merciful to me a poor worm of the dust." Oh, the simplicity of a child: how it prates "Mamma, give me a drink," or "Papa, give me bread." Oh, how ready are the anxious parents to respond to the simple language of the child. So it is with our heavenly Father; he will hearken to our prayer let it be ever so broken, if we ask in faith believing.

According to your letter you are in limited circumstances as regards this world's good. Well brother, this is no disgrace. I hope you are in possession of the "unsearchable riches of Christ." Though our possessions in this world are small, it is but probable at last, and if we have but food and raiment, "we are full" as you say in your letter "and all I am contented." We may feel unworthy and poor in spirit, but hearken to our divine Master: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." Let us prove faithful a few more days, and though we are encompassed by temptations, let us pray God for an overcoming faith that we can endure them. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." James 1: 12 Remember me when you approach the throne of grace, and when you feel like communicating a few thoughts to me do not hesitate, as it will be gladly received. Your brother in christian fellowship.

Meditation.

When we look around us and consider the meandering scenes of human life, we discover that we are just passing away from time, to an invisible world; and the things that we now so eagerly pursue and labor for, will be forever snatched away from us; and we will have to go and mingle with our kindred spirits which have departed this visible scene of action in past ages, while days, months and years, shall pass away regardless of the frail existence which we once enjoyed here. Yea, we no sooner come into the world than we began to travel to the silent grave, and leave all things behind us for the succeeding generation to occupy. How all important then to be engaged in laying up for ourselves treasures in heaven, where they may be preserved unto eternal life for us, at the last day; that when our earthly pilgrimage here has come to an end, we may be prepared to depart the world in peace: and rejoice in the hope of a glorious immortality beyond the tomb.

The world and all the transitory things thereof should be considered as altogether unworthy of our care and attention in comparison to the worth of our souls. There is nothing in the world, however productive of pleasure and enjoyment it may be to us here but what we should be willing to sacrifice for the salvation of our souls: "For what is a man profited if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul." If our souls are worth more than the whole world, we should gladly sustain the loss of all earthly things for the sake of securing them from eternal ruin and wretchedness. The present world in which we now reside is not our abiding home; it is only a transitory scene, introductory to an immortal state of existence beyond this terrestrial sphere. And consequently as we are eternity bound creatures, we ought, as wise and intelligent characters, strive to defend the righteous cause of our heavenly Master here, that when he "comes the second time without sin unto salvation," we may be prepared to meet him in peace and gladness of heart, and receive the welcome applause: "well done, good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joys of the Lord." Though the world may despise us, and say all manner of evil against us, and account us as a mean and despised company, yet it shall be well with us in the future world, while our enemies shall reap their reward in everlasting destruction and perdition. What are the vain and delusive pleasures of this world when compared to the everlasting joys and pleasures at God's right hand, which are promised to the righteous and upright in heart. They are as nothing and less than vanity, and should be regarded as unworthy of our desires. The apostle Paul says that we should set our affections on things above, where Christ sits on the right hand of God, and not on things in the world, for our life is hid with Christ in God; and where our treasures are there will our hearts be also. As long as we are absent from the Lord, and present with the body, we are exposed to human infirmities, and are liable to fall from our profession, for which reason we should take heed to our ways, and consider that we are compassed about on every side with dangers. The enemy, the devil, is said to be going about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, whom we should resist steadfast in the faith. Hence we should press forward towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus; not regarding the trifling afflictions and sufferings we may have to encounter here, for the sake of Christ and the heavenly world; but considering ourselves as strangers and pilgrims here; having no continuing city here, but seeking one to come, whose maker and builder is God. The glorious event is fast approaching when the Lord shall descend from heaven, with his holy angels, and shall gather all nations together from the four quarters of the earth, and shall distribute rewards and punishments unto all men, according as their works have been. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father, and shall no more be afflicted and oppressed with the things that they suffered here for their Master's cause, for the former things are passed away. The wicked and disobedient shall have their portion appointed unto them in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone. Therefore let us be faithful unto our high calling; accounting it glory and honor to suffer shame for the sake of Christ.

The Gospel Rule of Matthew 18.

Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Matthew 18: 15.

Man with all his wisdom, and with his desire to do good to his fellow man has never been able to present a rule equal to our text. And how little it is heeded, even by those who in their baptismal vow obligated themselves to faithfully observe it.

Dear reader, have you ever thought how much trouble and hard feelings might be avoided if we would comply with the Savior's directions? Yet how ready we are, to have even very slight offences brought to the notice of the church, and thus almost invariably make the matter worse. Mind, the Master does not say if thy brother trespass against thee, that you may go, but gives it imperatively and says go. It is as much a commandment as you will find in the scriptures. Oh, how many poor, offending members might be saved if this gospel rule were observed by us all. If our brother or sister offend and we go to them in love, and tell them, if they are truly lovers of the blessed Master, we will gain them almost every time, but if instead of doing as Jesus has ordained we tell it to the Elder, and he orders the Deacons to visit them, and cite them to the church for trial, we are sure, even if we save them, to make discouraging impressions upon their minds, that last sometimes for years if not for life. It sometimes happens that our young members trespass upon the feelings of elder members, by not being transformed in dress, but appear too much as the fashionable world. In these cases young members are sometimes driven from the Church by the offended not pursuing the gospel course with them. We have but few young brethren and sisters who would not conform to the order of the Gospel, as understood by the brethren, if this rule were observed. Try it once, where you have not done so. Go to those young members, show to them that you love them, and for this cause, and for no other, you would have them to change their manner of dressing. Don't tell them to do so simply to please the old brethren, but to please their Maker. Tell them to do right from principle of right; and when by their dressing they please God, it will please all the true members of his church.

Let not only the old members observe this rule toward the young, but let the young manifest the same disposition toward the old. In fact it is well for us to observe the above directions of our Redeemer toward each other, as if there was no difference in age.

The above we have written for our mutual good, knowing that our minds need frequent stirring up in reference to our duty; and feeling that we all too much neglect this so important an obligation. "Our best friends are those who tell us of our faults"; in truth, others are only pretended friends. Let us be frank with each other, and when we are told and convinced of our errors, for the sake of the eternal interests of our souls, let us be honest enough to acknowledge the same. We are commanded to confess our faults one to another. How much better we feel after making a free and open confession of what we do that is not right. We have to die, therefore let us be honest with each other, and soon we will be out of temptation's reach, and no use of the rule we have been writing about—forever happy with God in heaven.

Questions Answered.

See Companion page 126, present volume.

Question first: What should I do were I to hear a brother use profane language, or see him reduced by the influence of intoxicating liquors? Ans. Tell it to the church, and let the church do as the 18th chapter of Matt. directs.

2. "What is the difference between a public offense and a private one? Ans. A public offense can only be settled by the church, while a private, or one against another can be settled between one another privately.

3. On Matthew 12: 31, 32. Ans. It is sinning against better light and knowledge, through spite and hatred, as the pharisees did by calling the Holy Ghost the "prince of devils." Christ was casting out devils by the Holy Ghost at the time the pharisees told him it was by the prince of devils he (Christ) was casting out devils.

4. On Luke 6: 23, Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets." Ans. The 22nd verse explains it. We are blessed when men shall hate us, and say or do all manner of evil about, and against us, falsely for Christ's sake. We are not to fret and rave about it, but rather rejoice that we are worthy to suffer for Christ's sake. The prophets, and all God's people had to suffer in like manner before us: why not we suffer for Jesus, who suffered so greatly for us. Let us bear the cross in order to obtain a crown.

5. On Luke 16: 9: Those friends that we make to ourselves with mammon of unrighteousness, are God and the holy angels when we make use of this world's goods in such a way as God wants us to do, it pleases God, and he will become our friend and will receive us into everlasting habitations, which is heaven.

6. On 1 Cor. 4: 17. 6th chapter 7th verse. If we look at the 16th chapter 1st verse of the Acts we will find who Timotheus' earthly father and mother were. His mother was a Jewess, his father a Greek. Paul only took charge of him as an adopted son in the faith. Turn to Paul's letter to Timothy, first letter and chapter and 2nd verse. "Unto Timothy my own son in the faith." Here we can see that Paul was not Timotheus' father, according to nature, neither was Timothy Paul's son, only by adoption into the faith; Paul as the father in the faith, Timothy as the son in the same faith.

7. On Matthew 24: 1, 22. Ans. Those days that were to be shortened referred to the fall of Jerusalem, or destruction of the Temple. God caused it to fall in the power of the Romans, in time to save the Christians from perishing and pestilence and famine, for there was great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to that time, nor ever has been since. Even then the mothers ate their children which was never done before, nor has it been done since. Therefore God caused those days to be shortened, to save a remnant of his people.

Vanities of this Life.

It is said that life is sweet. And again it is said that life is vanity. Life must be considered very sweet, for nothing else can account for the tenacity with which we cling to it. We are engrossed with troubles and trials in this life; we are sorely afflicted with temptations, and yet we cling to life with a tenacity that knows no bounds.

We start from our cradles on the great voyage of life, amid its conflicting and ever changing scenes, scarcely once looking back over that thread of life now engulfed in eternity. Our hopes are onward. We stand with our backs turned upon the past, and gaze into the future, and thus steadfastly climb the hill of destiny, until its realities stare us in the face. There is no retreat. We may possibly think back to the day when reason and understanding first dawned upon us, accompanied with the Christian instructions of our parents. When our minds first became enshrouded with the vanities of this life, and the frivolties of this world; but it will then be too late to undo what has been done.

To-day the grim monster of death is going his deadly rounds. He is no respector of persons. He knocks at the door of the humble cottage; at the same time at the palace of a nation. He takes the youth, together with the man whose silvery locks tell us that the frosty hand of three score and ten years have passed over his head. It is supposed that on an average one being ceases to live every moment. Is not this a warning? Surely it is; but look for one moment at this life as it exists to-day. Behold that mighty throng. Three fourths of them profess to be christians. Murderers, liars, thieves, idolaters, backbiters, and so called christians, are all wending their way to eminence, and worldly fame.—Through war and bloodshed, many are highly honored; through false religion many see the "near cut" to heaven. By many other evils and abominations, men have established their names in glowing letters upon the scroll of fame, to be handed down from generation until the end of time.

Behold that other little company; they are meekly climbing the hill of Zion; they are wending their way to heaven; their names are written in the Lamb's book of life. They are destined, if they hold out faithful, to mingle their songs of praise at the right hand of Almighty God, throughout the boundless revolutions of eternity. To the one company will be said: "depart from me ye workers of iniquity, I never knew ye." To the other: "come ye blessed of my father, inherit eternal life."

Think upon this contrast light hearted reader! Think how easy it is to shun the gates of hell, and gain the bright courts of Heaven. We read that "he will gather his wheat into his garner, but the chaff thereof he will burn with fire unquenchable."

Life is short, very short indeed. And who would not labor a short lifetime for eternal happiness, when he knows that if he does not he must sink into eternal damnation, "where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth, forever and ever."

J. H. WORST.

New Pittsburgh, Ohio,

On Acts 9:7. and 22:9.

On page 126, of Companion we discover a request for an explanation of Acts 9 : 7 and 22 : 9. We suppose our querist discovered a contradiction in the paralel Scriptures, in reference to this circumstance, hence a reconciliation is required We claim no contradiction in the Bible when it is properly understood; hence to affect a reconciliation one Scripture must evidently be compared with another, relating to the same circumstance. We read in Acts 9 :7. "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." In 22 : 9. "And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." It must be understood those men who journeyed with Paul from Jerusalem to Damascus, being frightened at the circumstance of Paul becoming speechless; hence not capable of comprehending the meaning of the voice which they heard. They saw the light from heaven, with which they were surrounded, but saw no man, yet heard a voice, not distinguishing one word from another, it being declared in Hebrew, to Paul alone. Acts 26 : 14. "And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." Also Dan. 10 : 7. "And I Daniel alone saw the vision: for the men that were with me saw not the vision: but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves." Remember Daniel declares they saw not the vision, that is they did not understand the meaning of the word. It is in John 12 : 29. we understand the people did not comprehend the distinction of the words of God in answer to Christ's request, yet they heard the voice, but said it thundered. "The people therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered, others said, an angel spoke to him."

My place is in the quiet vale,

Heaven is my home.
Earth is a desert drear,
Heaven is my home.
Danger and sorrow stand
Round me on every hand;
Heaven is my fatherland,
Heaven is my home.

What though the tempest rage;
Heaven is my home;
Short is my pilgrimage,
Heaven is my home;
Time's cold and wintry blast
Soon will be overpast,
I shall reach home at last,
Heaven is my home.

There, at my Savior's side,
Heaven is my home;
I shall be glorified;
Heaven is my home;

There too I soon shall rest;

On the Death of Sister Barbara Risph.

Brother H., I have often felt impressed to communicate this circumstance to the readers of the Companion, which occurred over seven years ago. It appeared in the Gospel Visitor, but I loaned it away, so I cannot copy it; but will write from memory to the best of my recollection.

Sister Barbara Risph died Feb. 5th, 1863, in Dark Co., Ohio, in the Harris Creek congregation. She told her friends she was going to leave them, bade them farewell, and then died, to (apparently so) for over 2 hours. Then she came to again and said she had been in such a beautiful place, where she saw many that had died before her. She said her own deceased child came first to her. She saw her aunt Barbara Landis, and some of her cousins and her sister's children, and one of her neighbors, that had died Oct. 1862, and two of her parents' children whom she had never seen in the flesh. She said she could not name all she saw there, but there were many more children than grown people. She then asked for the Hymn book, and told them to sing "Dear friends farewell." Then before singing and then prayed fervently, and said to her husband, "Now don't call me back again." Brother John Risph (who was left with 5 small children) had in his lamentation called her by name, which was supposed to have the cause of her quick returning. She also told her mother not to use the raising of her children. Sister Barbara Risph was a daughter of brother John and sister Hollinger, Shelby Co., Ohio. Her father and mother have both died since, but her brothers and sisters and neighbors are still living witnesses, and brothers and sisters, (I believe) all but two, were members when she died. They were a very zealous and pious family. I was not an eye witness of what I have written, living some 12 miles away; but I was well acquainted with the family, except the eldest son, sister Barbara's father was at night with us a few months prior to her death. I asked him about it, and he said he was there when she died but first Mary, but went home some 10 miles to let the rest of the family know she was dead, and to be sure he took hold of her hand and arm which was cold and cool. He said: my daughter Catherine could tell you all about it, she was there all the time." I said, call her to write it for the G. V., which she did

I expect some will doubt this narrative. I don't wonder; if I had not got the information as I did, I would doubt it also.

Recollection.

When reading the epistle of our beloved brother Levi Andes, on page 149, present volume, a circumstance, or [illegible] came to my recollection, which occurred nearly 60 years ago, when I was quite a young boy, between two old men who emigrated from Europe to this country when young. They were good associates, both members of the Lutheran church, and settled in this our neighborhood. One of them, by name Jacob Stoll, [illegible] with the Brethren and joined our church, was elected preacher, and not very long after that he was ordained to the office of Bishop, in which capacity he served as a steadfast pillar in the house of God for many years. He never had a wife. He departed from this life and went home to his heavenly habitation in his ninety-third year.

The other man, by name Peter Elser, remained a stern Lutheran to his end. Their association soon ended in this country. Elser was laid on his death bed. A few days before he died his old associate, Jacob Stoll, visited him. A short conversation took place between them, which came to my recollection when I read what brother Andes, among other things said: "He hires another to take care of his soul's salvation."

After a short intercourse between the two old friends, Stoll asked Elser: "Have you any hopes to recover again from your sickness?

Ans. No, no; in a few days all will be over with me in this world.

Quest. And have you made any preparation for that solemn change?

Ans. That is none of my business; I have nothing to do with that. I have paid every year so and so much to my "seel sorger" (one who takes care of souls, Pastor.) It is his business to see that all is right. I paid him well for it.

In a few days after that he died seemingly happy, and in good faith that his "seel sorger" has made all things right for him.

O, horrible end! Wo unto the Pastor. J. E. PFAUTZ.

TRUTH is always consistent with itself, and needs nothing to help it out; it is always near at hand, sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware: a lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention upon the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good.

DR S. G. HOWE, of Boston, says: "It is easy to teach the blind, hard to teach the deaf. Blindness obstructs mental and moral development very slightly, deafness very gravely. Blindness disables the outer man, deafness the inner man. Blindness is the greater misfortune to the poor, deafness to the rich."

The pains of a noble soul are like the May-frosts of a life—a Spring follows them. The pains of the wicked are the frosts of Autumn—they precede the punishments of Winter.—

Our Little Mute.

Our readers will remember a report of a visit to Philadelphia, in which we stated that we accompanied a son of brother Daniel Paul of Morrison's Cove to the Pennsylvania Institution for Deaf Mutes. That was in November 18[illegible], or a year ago last November, or about 16 months ago. He has been in attendance since, excepting a vacation of several weeks last summer. This week we have received a letter from him, and as we believe our readers will be pleased to read it, we publish it verbatim. He is thirteen years old, and cannot hear or speak. It is written in a plain definite hand, and spelled and pointed off as published. We are much pleased to hear that he has learned so rapidly, and we feel to thank God that he has put it into the hearts of men to establish such a noble institution.

INSTITUTION FOR DEAF MUTE.)
PHILADELPHIA March 13th 1870.)

My Dear Henry Helsinger.

I am quite well. I am happy to inform you that I am very well. I am trying to learn to read and write. I can write a little. I can answer some questions. I can read a little. Mr Trist is my teacher. He is Deaf mute. I love to learn. Mr Trist teaches me a lesson every day. At night I learn it by heart. In the morning I recite it. There are 21 boys in my class. There are 187 pupils in the Institution 108 boys and 78 girls. All the teachers are well. Dr Evans is dead. He died of dropsy on the 20th of February. He was aged nearly 62 years we all are sorry for his death. Please write to me soon. Mr Horton is the Principal of the Institution. I like to visit the city of Philadelphia.

Your affectionate uncle.

A Clerk Wanted.

We desire to employ a brother as clerk or assistant in our office. The qualifications requisite are, first; character; second, common sense; and third, a good common education. A permanent situation to one who is competent for its duties. A young man without a family preferred.

That Reporter.

The Reporter question is still being agitated in the Gospel Visitor. So far the present volume has faithfully defended the action of the committee. A few more defenses it is to be hoped will reach the bottom. If nothing else will be gained, we will at least be enabled to "See ourself as others see us."

We have however, resolved to pay no farther attention to the matter, although it sometimes requires considerable self-denial to keep quiet, and especially since the recent partial publication of one of our private letters, which does us great injustice, yet by the grace of God we hope to be able to adhere to our resolution

Dogs, Pearls, Swine.

Brother Henry; Will you please give us an explanation of the 6th verse of the 7th chapter of St Matthew, where reads as follows: "give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine." What is that which is holy that we can give to dogs? and what is the pearl that we can cast before swine?

A. J. CORRELL.

ANSWER.

The above passage of scripture stands alone in its subject matter.—There is nothing either before or after it, directly, that could explain it.

The following are thought to be its parallel passages:

"Speak not in the ears of a fool, for he will despise the wisdom of thy words." Pr. 23:9.

"He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame: and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot. Reprove not a scorner lest he hate thee: rebuke a wise man and he will love thee." Prov. 9 7, 8.

The text is a metaphor. Neither dogs, pearls, or swine, literally, are the subject to be spoken of. They are terms designed to represent other things and actions.

Dogs and swine are terms used in Scripture to represent filth, sin, and all manner of uncleanness. "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers." Phil. 3:2. "For without are the dogs, and the sorcerers, and the fornicators, and the murderers, and the idolaters, and every one who loves and practices falsehood" Rev 22:15. Of all other animals the swine is considered to be the most unclean (Is it not a little strange that some civilized people should still eat them.)

Instruction, admonition, words of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Lord are emblemized by costly things, as gold, silver, pearl, jasper. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver. As an earring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, so is a wise reprover upon an obedient ear." Prov 25:1, 12. Mark the expression "upon an obedient ear." "The price of wisdom is above rubies." Job. 28:18. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding, for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold." Prov. 3:13, 14

Reference might also be made to the sacrifices, how that it was not lawful for the unsanctified even to touch them. But we think we have enough before us to make an APPLICATION.

Cast a carrion to a herd of ravenous swine, and they will consume it, and you may escape; but offer them gold, or silver, or pearls, and they will "turn against you and rend you."

Speak to the ignorant and wicked in their own dialect of lewd words, curses, and blasphemies; bring them the sporting papers, the "Police Gazette," and other papers and books with obscene pictures and vulgar expressions, and they will feast upon them, and call you a "fine fellow," and be ever so ready to "treat" you. But offer them words of instruction; cast before them the "pearl of great price." (Matt, 13: 46) and they will reject them all, and turn upon you. Talking religion to a drunken person, or speaking of the wisdom of God, and the wonders of his works to a fool, would be a violation of Matthew 7: 6.

A New Offer.

Number 3 of the present volume of Companion having run short, we have on hand some fifty sets of back numbers, lacking only No. 3. These of course we cannot supply as full sets. Therefore new subscribers must begin with the first paper printed after the receipt of their subscriptions. But this is what we will do:

The first fifty new names entered on our books, with a credit of $1.25 will receive all the numbers of the volume, lacking no. 3.

Or will send the balance of this year, from any time in Aprile for one dollar.

Send for specimens to show to your neighbors, and distribute them liberally. We have odd numbers on hand which would bring us a good percentage if they were distributed. Who will have them? Where shall we send them to. The postage is only eight cents a pound.

German Lesson.

We have a German communication on hand, intended for publication, in the German column. The fact of the business is, no one in the office can work at the German case but ourself, and our time is taken up in editorial duties. Who knows of a German and English printer that could be engaged?

Our Music Lesson.

An error occured in our lesson on the Numeral System of writing music, last week. The half rest is given thus |, instead of thus: - (an n or half dash).

Next week, if we can find time we will present our readers with a few more pieces, written in the same way.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's nam and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only

Brother Holsinger; I will send you my second list of subscribers. It is very small, but I have no brethren or sisters to go to to get subscribers, for there are none within forty miles of this place. So I have to get them amongst my neighbors, and as I love to read the Companion I also like my neighbors to read it

E. Goan.

Freeport, California.

Brother Holsinger; With pleasure and satisfaction the Companion is received by us, and with anxiety we peruse its columns of instruction, of encouragement, and love, and often it speaks comfort to the heart. Brethren and sisters, both far and near, acquainted and unacqainted, are so situated that all who desire may hear of the kindred of Christ, on their way to zion With such entertaining privileges before us, truly all should engage therein, and may all those who have tasted of thy sweet treasure, encourage others to participate also. Thus you will please find enclosed the names and address with $5.25, for 3 Companions and one Youth. So much towards the requested number.

Fleming C. Barnes.

Brandonville, Wt Va.

Brother Henry: Enclosed find 4.50 for three subscribers to the Companion. This will make three toward the 990. I hope others will do still better. I feel interested that every friend and brother should have it. Yours in love.

John H. Stager.

Pottstown, March 14th, 1870

You have done your part well, and have a little over for a good brother who cannot get his quota. Are there not a few hundred more enterprising brethren who can do as well? See our offer in editorial department.

Pleasure Trip.

Left home Sunday morning, sixth of March, and found my way to Martinsburg, (my birth place) where the brethren had meeting. Quite a large audience present, of brethren and friends. The ministering brethren present were Elder George, and Geo. W. Brumbaugh; the latter very ably addressed the congregation, from John 14: 6. After meeting found our way to East Sharpsburg. Visited sister May Graybill, a widow, and brother Shem Graybill. Lodged with brother J. S. Bowser.

Monday morning, in company with brother Bowser, went to Hollidaysburg, 1.40 P. M., took train for Tyrone City, and, as I always do, stopped with brother and sister Holsinger. Found all pretty well. Sister is seeming to have a heavy cold, and looks to me as though the house affairs are too much for her to attend to. Brother Henry is looking well, considering everything that has to be met and overcome, in editorial life. I am now pleasantly situated at the table of the editor of the C. F. C. and the Pious Youth, feeling quite cheerful. Will feel much better after I raise about five more subscribers to the Companion, and assist our sister Rosie Snowberger, in getting a long list of subscribers for the Pious Youth. It well deserves a place in every family.

We think this office deserves the support of our Brotherhood, representing as it does, the interests of all. It is not a factional institution, gotten up to gratify a few aspirants, or to advocate some man's peculiar notions. It speaks for all, and allows all to speak for themselves. It has been slowly but surely working its way into public favor. It has also been surely but very rapidly increasing in extent. When we first visited the office we found it in a small room up stairs. Now several rooms are occupied, and five hands are busily engaged in its employ.

A re enforcement of 1 000 new subscribers has been called for. One-twentieth of the number has already been raised. Every friend is requested to obtain one. As I am a warm friend my quota will be two. I can get them.

Success to the Companion office.

[From the Visitor.]

DEAR BRETHREN: I am requested to say to the brethren and sisters through the medium of the Visitor and Companion that on the morning of the 4th of last month (January) I started on a journey to Jasper Co., Mo., passing through St. Clair Co. Osceola is the county seat, near which place is the residence of Elder Jacob Ulery. In company with him we accomplished our visit to the members or arm of the church in Jasper, which is under the care or charge of our beloved aged brother Daniel Hendricks, assisted in the ministry by his son, brother Franklin Hendricks, and our esteemed brother Nathan Rice. We were with them several days during which time we had about five appointments for preaching, generally in the evening. Now it is known, to some extent at least, that the state of things in this arm of the church has not been as pleasant for some time as was desired by all who were acquainted with thesame. By the consent of the elder and his co-laborers, and in harmony with their wishes, they appointed a church meeting. The members generally attended, and by patient labor and friendly investigation, their difficulties & misunderstandings as far as made known or brought before the meeting, were disposed of, to the satisfaction of all present at that time. And the laboring brethren agreed to go hand in hand in the labor of preaching the word. And all that had hitherto not handed in their letters of fellowship agreed to hand them in.

We would then say to the brethren wishing to move to southwestern Missouri, that there are nice portions of country in Jasper county, and that we think members moving there, who have Christ the hope of glory formed within, need not anticipate unusual trouble, or despair of enjoying themselves in the Lord, and to have the work of the Lord prosper there as well as elsewhere. And the members there desire traveling ministers to call with them. I then parted with brother Ulery, and went to Vernon county, to Nevada, to brother Clicks, who lives in that place, who together with brother Boggs, greatly desire that some laboring brother would move to them. They also have a very pleasant looking country. We had a few meetings with them, and also had meeting at brother Deardorfs in Cedar county. I then returned home by brother Ullery's and had a couple of meetings with them, being absent from my family about 16 days, and traveled on horseback 352 miles.

JOHN HARSHEY.

Cornelia, Mo.

Brother Henry: I will give you a brief report of my recent visit to Ohio. I left home on the morning of the 15th of February. Arrived at Wooster on the 16th, at 8.38 A. M. Was met by brothren George Worst, who conveyed me to the Mohiccon meeting house, Being behind time on the cars, we found a large congregation assembled, and waiting for us. I delivered a lecture on the division and application of time, preparatory to my address on the subject of the "Passover." I spoke three times upon the subject of the "Passover and Lord's Supper," and preached two sermons in the evening. After I closed my "lectures," as they are called, on the "Passover and Lord's Supper," by permission, friend Siedner, a Mennonite preacher, replied. He took no exceptions to my remarks on the Passover, but assumed that the "Bread and Wine" are the Lord's Supper. I then replied, showing by Luke, and Paul, that my friend was under a great mistake; for Luke says the "cup was AFTER supper." Luke 22: 20. Paul says the same, 1 Cor. 11: 25. "After the same manner also he took the cup when he had supped." Inasmuch as the cup was AFTER supper the bread alone must be the "supper," or there was a meal, a supper separate and apart from the "bread and wine." This point being made clear, of course he found himself in a dilemma. And take which horn of the dilemma he chose, he had signally failed. If he would still say, "The Bread and Wine are the Lord's Supper," he had Luke and Paul against him. If he should say the bread is the supper, he would be against himself. So he made no reply after I closed.

On Saturday, the 19th, Elder Jacob Kurtz, my cousin, took me to his house, in the Chippeway congregation. Held meeting forenoon and evening of each day, until Tuesday. Took the train at Wooster Summit for Massillon, Stark county, where I was met by brother John K. L. Swihart, of Tuscarawas congregation. Remained in that congregation until Monday 28th, when by special arrangement, I was taken by brother Swihart to East Nimishilling congregation. Remained there until Wednesday noon. Was taken to Canton, and spoke in the Baptist house in the evening.

Thursday the 3rd of March, took the Morning Express train to Alliance. Thence on Pittsburg and Cleveland R. R., to Homeworth Station, where I was met by brother John A. Clement, who took me to his home, and cared for me tenderly. In the evening had meeting in the Sandy congregation, in the brethren's meeting house near North Georgetown, where I remained until Sunday evening. The meeting being very interesting, the brethren concluded to continue a few days longer. May God bless their labors.

On Monday morning, the 7th, I was taken by brother John Shriver, to Salem on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and I arrived at home, on the 8th of March, found all well. Thanks, yes sincere thanks to God for his mercy, and many thanks to the dear brethren and friends who so kindly cared for, and contributed to, my necessities.

The Pious Youth.

Dear Brother Henry; The specimen numbers of the Pious Youth came duly to hand, and I have already distributed a considerable number of them at 10 cents a copy; and I shall dispose of the balance in the same manner, shortly. I consider this to be a very good method for introducing the Youth, and I think this is about all that will be necessary under existing circumstances to give it an introduction, and if it proves "to wear well," it will increase, and abound more and more: Hence I would say to the editor and its correspondents do not be dismayed. "Despise not the day of small things" neither should we be so inquisitive as to ask "How shall Jacob arise, for he is small?" If the work is of the Lord, and for the Lord, it will prosper, in its time. And who that is for the Lord will oppose it? Why not be ready to give the instruction so needful? Why not help to publish it broad-cast among our Brethren and friends? It is for our children, and not for them alone, but for the children of those (who as yet,) are afar off, as well as those who are nigh.

The Catholic church, as well as most of the Protestant denominations are aware of this fact, that we must look to the rising generation, and if we teach and indoctrinate our children as we should do, we may then more successfully transmit to the generations that follow a knowledge of the practical principles and doctrines of the Gospel.

The sooner children are properly instructed, and made acquainted with the fundamental doctrines of the New Testament, the better it will be for them, and for their parents also. I may be considered by some of my dear brethren as feeling too sanguine, but I give it as my candid opinion, that the Pious Youth is one of the mediums through which all the needful or most needful instruction may be given, for while it sets forth the instruction for the child, it also gives instruction and encouragement to the parents; hence, this periodical may be set down to be an auxiliary to parents in bringing up their children, "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Hence, I do not consider it to be a substitute, but a help to christian parents, and others also. I will now leave the subject for abler pens, and hope the Brethren will feel willing to co-operate in writing, and furnish the Youth with good, original, and practical essays on this important subject, whilst I shall feel willing to cast in my mite. Fraternally.

PHILIP BOYLE.

New Windsor, Md.

Brother Holsinger: At the request of brother John Shoemaker, I will give you a short account of our visit to Magado, Summit county, Ohio, the congregation over which brother Showalter presided formerly—whose memory is still dear to the brotherhood. This church is now subdivided into three churches; but being a stranger I am not prepared to give their respective names.

I left Mansfield on the 24th of Feb. last, and arrived at Akron about 5 P. M., where brother Hershberger met me and kindly conveyed me to brother J. Mishler's, 6 miles south of Akron, who received us very kindly because we were of the same craft, not tent makers as Paul and Aquila by occupation, but surveyors by profession. I enjoyed his hospitality that night with much satisfaction. In the evening we walked to the school-house where we met brother J. Shoemaker and a large collection of brethren, sisters and christian friends, who were anxious to hear the word of God. Brother John commenced the evening exercises by singing, prayer, &c., according to order. Then read a portion of the Gospel, made an application of the same for the edification of the church, closed with singing and prayer, leaving the result with the Lord. Thus we passed through the three branches, preaching two sermons a day, filling fourteen appointments. Much interest was manifested.

We are happy to say there were many with whom we became acquainted whose memory will be ever dear to us. The Sunday and the fair weather christian was not there—we met them not. Our anticipations we can say were happily disappointed—the devotedness to the Lord, the close attention to his worship, both by day and night—rain and shine, cold and storm did not abate their holy zeal. They seemed to have forgotten all worldly concerns—determined only to wait upon the Lord. The house of worship was filled to overflowing, every time, with anxious hearers. A deep solemnity seemed to pervade all our meetings. This cannot help but excite admiration in every pious heart. This no doubt constrained Barnabas when he came to Antioch to say, "He had seen the grace of God and was glad—they were living epistles, written not with ink but with the spirit of the living God." The members speaking well of each other and of their ministers—the ministers speaking well of members; but above all the ministers speaking well of each other—no aspiring after pre-eminence—no vain glorying, "but in lowliness of mind, esteeming each other better than themselves." Here is religion, because here is love.

I will relate another circumstance which transpired while visiting the Summit brethren. There was a sick sister living on the road where we passed, by the name of Douglas. The brethren charged us not to pass by without calling upon her. We soon perceived to all appearances that her days upon earth were few—that soon the "golden bowl would be broken and the silver cord would be severed." She asked an interest in our prayers. Brother Murray introduced the exercises by singing the hymn, "O when shall I see Jesus." Brother Shoemaker, after speaking words of comfort to the afflicted sister, asked her, "if it was the will of the Lord to remove her from her family whether she would be willing?" There sat her young husband with outstretched arms to assist her when the spasms of cough came on—supporting two small children, one on each knee, her aged father by her side, afflicted likewise with consumption, her aged mother bathed in tears, watching the progress of the disease. These were hearts that were wrapped together in love—cemented by the strongest ties of affection. Would we not all anticipate a reluctance on her part to be perfectly resigned? It would appear perfectly natural, should she have expressed a wish to have remained a little longer with her helpless children. She was young seemingly—not ripe for the grave—but to my surprise she said, "If it is the will of God I am ready to die." The emotions of her heart changed the expression of her countenance—a heavenly lustre was painted on her face, and with some emphasis repeated "I want to die." Who would not have the hope of Christianity. Surely she endured as seeing one who is invisible. Truly she must have learned what Jesus meant when he took little infants in his arms and blessed them. Brethren let us learn it too.

Soon after our departure from this sad scene, a messenger arrived informing us of her death. We preached her funeral sermon; the occasion was most solemn indeed, so much so that it suggested the passage, "Jesus wept." Then commending them all to the Lord and the word of his grace, we left for home.

PARKERSBURG, Ills.,
March 7th, 1870.

Brother Henry: By the request of many brethren and friends I will give you a short sketch of my visit to Pennsylvania. I left home on the morning of the 11th of January, and arrived at Johnstown on the morning of the 14th. Thence to Davidsville, and Stanton's Mill, by private conveyance. This is in the Quemahoning Congregation. Here the brethren had some appointments, and I attended three meetings at this place, and met a number of brethren and friends with whom I used to associate. From this place I went to my son-in-law's, Jacob C. Schmucker; found them all well. On the 18th to J. P. Speicher's, and in company with him to Jacob D. Miller's in the Middle Creek congregation, where the brethren had a series of meetings. Attended 6 meetings and remained in this neighborhood until Sunday morning, when I was taken to my brother-in-law's, Jacob Schrack, in the Berlin congregation. Attended 2 meetings at this place. Then to my brother Samuel Forney, the only brother living in Pennsylvania at this present. Evening meeting in the Berlin meeting-house. Also Wednesday and Wednesday evening. Next I visited sister Keller, whom I found very ill with Cancer, but strong in the spirit, so that she could express herself in language: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." From this place I was conveyed by brother Samuel to brother Valentine Blough's. Stayed all night. Here I received a letter from my family and learned that they were all well, which was very encouraging. 29th. My daughter and I visited sister Beam; found her very much afflicted. Met Elder Tobias Blough here. From this place to J. P. Spicher's, near Sipesville. Again attended 2 meetings at this point. Monday night, meeting at son in-law's. On Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night, meeting in the Brethren's meeting-house near William Trents. Feb. 7th, in company with brother George Reitz to Berlin meeting-house, where the Brethren held council. In company with my brother, visited my nephew, Franklin Forney. Was very glad to meet him and family all well. Here I was quite unwell, but was kindly cared for by my friends, for which I am much indebted to them.

Friday I started for Maryland. Lodged with Daniel Beachley. Saturday 12th arrived at Josiah Beegly's and found all well. Attended two meetings here, visited among friends until Tuesday 15th. Returned to Somerset Co. Meeting with the Brethren at Meyers Mills; lodged with Elder C. G. Lint. Next day to Berlin, and to brother Michael Wayond's. Stayed with my daughter until Saturday, when they conveyed me to brother Jacob Kuhn's. Next day they brought me to brother Jonathan Blough's. In the evening was conveyed by Elder Tobias Blough to his home; remained with him until 21st. Was conveyed to Johnstown by brother Jonathan Blough; remained here until 23rd. Arrived at Dayton next morning; met a great many brethren here; stayed until 25th; arrived at home on the 26th of Feb., and found all well; thank the Lord. I am pleased with my visit of 47 days to the land of my childhood, as well as the greater part of my pilgrimage. Brethren and friends your care and labor toward me has been great; hope the Lord will bless you, and keep you blameless until he collects his people unto him.

MICHAEL FORNEY.

Brother Henry; As we always like to hear church news we will give the readers of your excellent paper some of our doings here in Indiana. I had thought I would devote all of my time in the winter season to preaching, and commenced about Christmas, and continued for about six weeks, and saw quite a number added to the Church by baptism, and feeling considerably worn down we thought we would have more physical exercise and therefore left home for the Huntington branch of Church, where I had taken a job of seating their new house at Sugar Hill. And while at work the brethren and some friends requested us to talk some at night, so we consented to preach for them in the evening, while we thought we could work in day time, but we only had a few meetings until there was quite an interest manifested; so much so, that some made it known that they were tired of living in sin and we had the pleasure of baptizing several. Some of the brethren requested us to continue for a few days at a time and we had the happy privilege of baptizing twenty-two. Then we closed at once, having no help by way of preaching. So we thought we would introduce the Companion and obtained six subscribers for the same which you may add to your list. Yours as ever.

Questions

For the young readers of the Companion.

1. Who will be first to tell what two chapters of the Bible read alike, except one or two words?

2. What Book of the Old Testament has not the name of God in it?

3. What book, chapter, and verse, has 23 of the 26 letters of the Alphabet in it?

AMOS S. CHAMBERLIN.

Brother Holsinger; While I was listening to the reading of the 13th chapter of St John, 6 and 7 verses, "where the Savior says to Simon Peter: "What I do thou knowest not now, but shalt know hereafter." I inquired in my mind: Why did not Peter know? and what should he know thereafter?" Perhaps some of the brethren could enlighten my mind on the above. JOEL HARTER.

Answer to Brother A. Leedy of Feb. 25th.

Dear Brother; your letter is at hand. You request to know whether I have not made a mistake in the publication of the District Meeting of the Middle District of Ind., as you think it was to be the 2nd Friday before good Friday, which would be the first day of April. In answer I would say; as soon as the brethren at our last District meeting appointed me again as Corresponding Secretary, I noted down the time, and place of meeting as I understood the brethren to decide upon, and so I have published it, and so I feel to leave it as it is published in the Companion which will be on the 29th day of April. Yours in the bonds of brotherly love.

MARRIED.

March 8th, by Henry Jones, brother JOHN NEIFER, of Sangamon Co., Ill., to sister SARAH PARRETT, of Bond Co., Ill., formerly of Wabash Co., Ind.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

Near McConnells Grove, Stephenson Co., Ills., Sept 27th, 1869, LORA JANE, infant daughter of Samuel and Kate Jordan; aged 10 months. On the 9th of Oct., DANNIE JORDAN; aged 4 years, 5 months, & 4 days.
L. JORDAN.

In the Aughwick branch, Huntingdon Co., Pa., on the 24th day of February, brother JOSEPH RUTTER; aged 43 years, 9 days less. Funeral services by the brethren, from 2 Cor. 5: 6, 7. Brother Joseph was a victim of that dread disease consumption and suffered much for years from its effects.

In the same branch, and quite a near neighbor to the above, on the 2nd of March, RACHEL REBECCA DAUGENBAUGH; aged 66 years. Funeral services by the brethren, from Matthew 24: 44.

Near Three Springs, in the same branch, March the 7th, of Heart disease, without one moments warning, Bro. SAMUEL KAUGH; aged 70 years, months, and 20 days. Text: Amos 4: 12.

At the same time and place, an infant daughter of friend SKIPPER, who buried his companion about 2 months before, and another child 2 or 3 weeks before. Funeral services by the same. A. L. FUNK.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria Co., Pa., March 11th, brother DANIEL GOCHNOUR; aged 70 years, 11 months, and 25 days. He leaves a companion, a sister in the Church, and nine children, all married, with many friends, to mourn their loss. Brother Daniel was a member of the Church for many years, and served in the office of a Deacon, ever since the writer recollects anything of him. Shortly before he died he called for the Elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord. Funeral services by the Brethren. STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

Visitor please copy.

In the bounds of the Smith Fork branch, Clinton Co., Missouri, March 7th, of measles, sister MARGARET ELLENBERGER; wife of brother Jacob R. Ellenberger; aged 50 years, and 7 days. Our sister was born in Pennsylvania, and moved to Missouri about 25 years ago, with her father and mother. Three constituted the band of members for a number of years, but with a firm grasp they seized the banner, planted it down in the wild frontier, looking forth with an eye of faith to the time when there would be a church organized here. Through 20 years of patient waiting she saw what she longed for, and most of her children added in their youth and tender years; and just before the day dawn of March the 8th she drew around her the drapery of her couch and breathed her last. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss, which we trust is her gain. She was followed to her last resting place by a large concourse of people. The occasion was improved by David B. Gibson and the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. DANIEL D SELL.

Visitor please copy.

In West Conestoga branch, Lancaster Co., Pa., March 8th, JUSTINA, wife of George BIMGAMAN, and daughter of brother Wm. Neas; aged 33 years and 4 months. The subject of this notice was an obedient young woman. She and her husband were admitted to the church by Council sometime in February. She was very weak at that time, so they thought would wait awhile for better health; but, alas the Master called for her, so she departed without immersion, which she so greatly desired. Funeral services by brethren Christian Bucher, Bomberger, and Brubaker. Text, Rev. 7th chapter, last 4 verses, selected by the deceased. JOS. R. ROYER.

At Brooklyn, Poweshick Co., Iowa, March 11th, MARY, infant daughter of brother J. S. and Maria M. SNYDER; aged 4 months and 14 days. Funeral services by brother Wm. Palmer, from 103rd Psalm, 15, 16 verses.
M. SNYDER.

In the Ashland branch, Ashland Co., Ohio, March 2nd, brother HENRY WILLIS; aged 85 years, 2 months, and 23 days. He leaves a large concourse of friends, a widow, nine children living and two dead; 66 grand children and 10 great grand children. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Rev. 14: 13.
WM. SADLER.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we [illegible] for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Celebrated

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, at once. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Bilious Fever, Sour and deranged stomach, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic, Flatulency, Pain in the Side, Back and Loins, or any disease arising from a disordered state of the Stomach or Digestive Organs. For Female Complaints in all their forms, this Medicine has no equal. For Purifying the Blood, it has no equals in the world. Many have been restored to health who had been given up by their physicians to die of Consumption, after using a few bottles of this Medicine, which proves beyond a doubt its virtues in curing this terrible disease. Many who have been troubled with Sick Headache for years, have been entirely cured by using this Medicine. Paradise.

This term has caused some discussion, and some have labored to prove that it always signifies Heaven, or the final rest for saints. This opinion cannot hold good without doing violence to certain portions of Scripture. We certainly all know that some words have different meanings. It is not necessary to give any instances. A little examination of the Bible will suffice any intelligent reader on this point. Christ's remark to the penitent thief, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," could not signify the final, and ultimate rest within the immediate kingdom of God. Luke tells us in Acts 1: 3, that after the Savior's passion, he was seen by his disciples forty days by many infallible people, 9th verse signifies that he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight; and as he went up, they looked steadfastly toward heaven. John tells us (20: 17) that Jesus said unto Mary, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." Now see Luke 24: 51, "He parted from them and was carried into heaven." Also Mark 16: 19. "So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into Heaven, and sat on the right hand of God."—How can any reader consistently reconcile "To-day," with "Fortydays," identically, with duration of time? Or, "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father," an expression after his resurrection; with "To-day" the very specified time of his crucifixion? We presume all the brethren believe the Savior's omnipresence, and to possess all power in heaven and on earth.—But they also believe that God and the Savior are more manifestly present in one place at one time, than in other places. God manifests himself more especially in heaven where his Throne is; yet, is everywhere present. So Christ is at present especially manifested on his Father's right hand, as an intercessor; yet he is with us alway, even unto the end of the world. The Savior, in his incarnation, manifested himself on earth; yet he was in the Father, and the Father was in him. Then his body was in the grave, and his spirit manifested itself in Paradise, preaching to the spirits in prison—the intermediate state. The third day, as the first fruits of the resurrection, spirit and body were more directly reunited again, and he manifested himself more or less to his disciples during the space of forty days. Finally, his disciples beheld his ascension into Heaven, where at present he manifests himself on the right hand of God.

Scripture teaches a second manifestation of Christ with power and great glory, an army of heavenly hosts following, when the first resurrection shall take place; that of the saints, who will reign on earth with him a thousand years. This is the time the prison doors will be opened, and the spirits of saints released to be united with incorruptible bodies; when "this mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruption put on incorruption." Finally, and ultimately, when the second resurrection has passed, and judgment executed, upon that great and notable day, the saints will be ushered into the immediate and direct presence of God where they shall reap the full fruitions reserved evermore for them.

The term Paradise in some portions of the Scriptures, will admit the signification of the place of God's immediate presence. Why should it not? It is a place of bliss as well as Heaven. But we understand that of the intermediate state is not to the same perfection, because soul and body are not yet united. Paul speaks of a third heaven, and to the Ephesians makes the expression, "He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens." Solomon, in his prayer upon the dedication of the temple, says: "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?" Then, as the earth is only an apartment of God's creation; so an innumerable host of planets may be other apartments. Who can fathom the universe of the All-wise, and know the different places of abode? We see no gross errors in such a magnificent and magnanimous view of the Creator's arrangements, especially when the Bible reveals it so plainly.—None but a co-existing and infinite God could devine such a beautiful arrangement in taking man by degrees from one state of existence to that of another, and higher; to finally prepare him for his ultimate glory.

This essay is not intended for controversy, and hope it may not be viewed to indicate such a spirit. The references are few, deeming it unnecessary. Brethren Brown and Leedy have sufficiently referred to the Scriptures upon the subject sometime ago, whose sentiments, the writer fully endorsed. Hold fast to that which is good. S. B. FURRY.

Shadow and Sunshine.

Shadow and sunshine cast their hues over all things in this sublunary world. Nothing in this sphere of visibility but what the deepning shadows have cast their gloom, and the rays of sunshine have lit up successively, after the order of that law that rules the universe. The curtain of night envelopes the world in darkness, and hangs in folds around everything; but the rays of light that eminate from the great orb of day dispel it all. We know not where it goes—and in its stead light and sunshine pour down in one flood of brightness. When the heavy, lowring clouds loom up in the west, and go up, seemingly, higher and higher, their shadows spread o'er the earth, as the thunders mutter in deeper tones, and the fierce lightnings rend the clouds. Darker and darker grows the gloom. At last the storm in all its fury bursts upon the forest, field, and plain—it passes; the clouds go on, the sun bursts out in splendor and its genial rays warm up the watered earth—vegetation revives—flowers expand and nature becomes clothed in a deeper garb of verdure.

The moral world at one time lay in gross darkness. All, all, was enveloped in one universal gloom. God said: "let there be light and there was light." God's love, the great orb of the moral universe, began to penetrate into the depths of darkness. The light grew brighter and brighter, the dawn of day appeared, and then the glorious "sun of righteousness" arose in all his brightness! darkness disappeared, and God was "made manifest" to the world. And now the love of God—sun of glory—as displayed in Christ, is high up in the heavens, and shining upon the world in all its meridian splendor. Though the sun shines, shadows will come.—Elements of corruption gather; mutterings and thunderings are heard; on, on, comes the threatening storm. Persecutions rage; shadows come over the moral world; the sun's bright rays are intercepted; but it passes. The sun shines again, truth bursts forth, the genial rays of Christianity renovate the "seeds of the church," that persecution has winnowed, and freed from the chaff and pressed firm into the good ground, causing it to spring up. Flowers—(christian graces) are developed in all their beauty and load the air with their fragrance. So it shall be until time shall be no more. The true Church must experience the changes of sunshine and shadows. Prosperity and adversity will attend her while "in the wilderness." But the day hastens when she will not be characterized by those changes. When the prince and power of darkness shall be "chained;" when the "brightness" of the Son of God shall dispel all darkness and gloom, and shadows vanish, no more to return, but there shall be one universal glorious day—darkness being swallowed up in victory through the achievements of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Applied to individuals, shadows and sunshine are the experience of us all, prosperity and adversity, happiness and sorrow, success and reverses, and health and sickness are the lot of all, more or less. The christian knows by sad experience the path of duty, or "narrow way" that leads to life, is not at all times free from shadows or trials; because we must suffer persecution if we live godly; and God chastens those whom he loves. So we need not look for sunshine all the time. Storms will come, and oh, how heavy hangs the gloomy clouds at times—when our hopes are blasted, or our dear ones taken from us, or adversity is laid heavy upon us; or when we would do good, evil is present. Then it is we have doubts and fears, and begin to despond, because the lightnings flash and thunders roll; but let us take courage lest we be led astray by the evil one who at such times tries to blind our eyes, or cause us to be shortsighted, that we see not the golden tinted edges of the clouds, that tell us the sun is shining on the other side.—Through the gloomy clouds we may see God's love and mercy gleaning that tells us all will be well when the storm is over. And then when the clouds disperse how our souls revive at the sight of a dear Savior's smiles, and there in majestic beauty behold the rainbow of salvation—God's promise—which, having emerged from the waters, no more shall destruction hold sway over us. O, then, fellow pilgrims, let us not go back because troubles intercept our pathway.—Shadows and sunshine is our lot here, but beyond is one eternal day. Looking forward to the recompense of reward, let us fight the good fight, that we may become conquerers through him that died for us. J. S. FLORY.

Superfluity.

There has much been said by the brethren how the sisters should appear among the brethren and in public, namely: "That women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." 1 Tim. 2: 9. I cheerfully agree with my beloved brethren, that the above admonition of our beloved brother Paul should be quite sufficient for all our beloved sisters. He only speaks against superfluity. There is no doubt but that we have some sisters among us who transcend the admonition above given, and disgrace the meek and lowly religion of our blessed Redeemer, by putting on and wearing that which neither adds to comfort and much less to the beauty of holiness. Yet we must confess, that as a general rule, the sisters are not so much out of the way; admitting however that there are some that heed not the admonition given, yet a great proportion live in conjunction to it. The brethren tell the sisters that flounces, ruffles, lacings, embroidery, &c., are among the things that may be denominated superfluities, because they add not to the comfort of the body in any wise.

There is, however, another practice prevalent among us, and that, too, among the stronger ones—the brethren—of a greater magnitude, or at least as great in my estimation, as those above mentioned, and that is, the use of TOBACCO, and all kinds of intoxicating drink, when used as a beverage. We have the apostle James to say in the 1st chapter, 21st verse, of his epistle, "lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness." We are aware of the fact that we have brethren that will argue that in the moderate use of either there certainly can be no harm. Admitting this to be so, how many flounces or laces would a sister have to put on her, or her children's dress to make it superfluous? One, two, three or a dozen? Judge righteous judgment.

If tobacco or whisky do not make its subjects in many cases appear filthy and irreligious, I do not comprehend the term. If you doubt this, go to the house of God, where cleanliness should have the uppermost seat, and see if it does not in many cases look more like a tobacco house than a church house. Do we not sometimes see the spittle of a confirmed brother chewer stand on the floor before him in such a large body that he can scarcely find room enough to kneel in prayer, without soiling his fine and costly Sunday clothes. Not only is this filthy practice indulged in by our lay brethren, but to our sorrow we must say we find a large portion of our PREACHERS guilty of this filthy practice. My impression is that God would recognize a well dressed sister almost as soon as he would a brother or brethren guilty of this filthy practice. Not only is it in its nature filthy, but it is in like manner superfluous. It adds nothing to our health; it does not satisfy hunger; it lays no thirst; it cures not where the body is ailing; it does not keep us from freezing. Why then use it? The only answer I know to give, is, for to make the user thereof and the church disagreeable; and above all to ruin the constitution and weaken the mind that God gave you with which to honor and serve him.

Again, we sometimes see another evil practice arising from tobacco; and in this are included some of the sisters. It is that of SMOKING. Oftentimes we must see this habit practiced within the house of God, when the word dismissed has gone forth: and before the sound has barely died away, pipes are being filled, matches ignited, and volume after volume of smoke arising up just as though the subject had been pipes, tobacco and smoking. Brethren, these things ought not to be. C. G. LINT.

For the Companion.

To Brother Andrew Cost, of Maryland.

My Dear Brother: In my late illness I resolved that my first public effusion shall be a letter of encouragement to you, and to others who may be in similar circumstances. The report you have given of yourself in the Companion, is painful in the extreme, but if expressive of your real internal state, such as would appear from a more detailed account. Your case may not be so deplorable as a first view might lead us to suppose. You say all your bounty is spent. This expression is too vague to allow of any definite interpretation. It may mean much, or little, or nothing. From the general tone of your letter, I cannot regard it as having any alarming significance. Such a state of mind as your published letters reveal, may spring from causes which, instead of alienating the heart of Jesus, only the more fully and warmly evokes his sympathy. Overtaxed physical or mental powers, protracted strains on our higher nature, exhausting the natural medium through which it finds expression, may originate despondency so deep and dark, as to the subject of it may seem to be a region of outer darkness and utter exclusion from the Divine favor. Many such poor, gloom-smitten, self-condemned, Christ-distrusting Christians are found wandering in the valley of Baca, whose hearts are closed to all comfort, and whose sun can arise only in a better physiological condition. Without being able to specify any particular sin which debars the holy presence, they have an overwhelming sense of vileness too intensely charged with sin's exceeding sinfulness to allow of dissection. Believing that your dejection is not referable to any overt misdemeanor, or any base but unexpressed designs, I address you with the confidence that the gloom enshrouding you is no indication that you are not as precious to God as in your more sunny days, notwithstanding the absence of sensible joys. Our nearness to God, the effect of His presence upon us, and the manifest tokens of the Divine favor we carry about us, are not always a matter of consciousness. When Moses was on the Mount he was in such close and dear communion with God, that not only was his soul aglow with the blissful throbbings of the Divine life, but his very countenance was so radiant with the light of Heaven, that he could be looked upon only with shaded eyes; and yet he wist it not. It is the privilege of the believer to nestle so closely to Jesus, and drink so deeply out of his brimming cup of love, that those around him stand in awe of the supernatural aureola that ever circumscribes his person, while he inwardly bathes himself on account of the dark spots and foul vapors that hang around the dim miniature of Jesus in his soul. Where others see nothing in us but what savors of heaven, we may make our bed to swim by reason of the stirrings of innate depravity which daily indicates its presence in our consciousness. While the downcast believer wears an under-garment of sack-cloth, like Israel's King in the days of pinching famine, others are noting his heavenly walk, the God-ward bent of his affections, and the unmistakable evidences that his joy, what little is left, is the very quintessence of the love that is better than wine. Sol. Songs, 1: 2.

If we gaze upon the sun at the time of his setting, when his beams are less dazzling than at noonday, our eyes become so changed with light that whenever we look we behold, for a few minutes, the sun's image. So we are to be ever "looking unto Jesus," the author and finisher of our faith, until our souls are full of light and beauty, and we discern images of Divine love everywhere. In him we have the solution of all mystery, and holding him truly by faith, we are no more discouraged at the mysteries of his providence in his dealings with us personally, than stumbled at the mysteries of his Divine-human constitution. Why he does with us thus and so, is no harder problem for faith than what he is. Able to assume such qualities and relations as to become sin for us and yet remain immaculate, and resolve the aggregate of all evil into the means of unexampled honor and glory and felicity, we may safely trust both his power and readiness to "make all things work together for our good." Even the darkest cloud that hangs over our spiritual sky has a golden edge on it that is woven out of the rays of the sun of righteousness. No cloud is so deeply gloomed with trial or sorrow, as not to have a rift through which the fainting soul can discern at least one smiling gleam of heavenly love. Being children of the covenant, we must expect the discipline of the covenant, and meek, unmurmuring submission to the chastening of the Lord, will issue in the blessings of the covenant. The dear Savior, after whose love your soul is ever panting, even "as the heart panteth after the water-brooks," is "not yea and nay," but "all the promises of God in him, are yea, and in him, amen." When immortality can give way, and God falsify his oath, then, and not till then, can his promise fail. And the first promise on which we may confidently rely, is this: "Lo, I am with you always." Amid the tossings of the waves, the fury of the storm, and the thick darkness by which we are enveloped, we may mistake his presence for some malign power. Matt. 14: 26. Or, while bitterly lamenting some sore bereavement, or spiritual desolation, he may be fulfilling the promise his ever-presence, but our eyes are holden. Luke 24: 16. Why cannot the faithful that accepts the incomprehensible in Christ, also accept the inscrutable in his dealings? When adverse circumstances have locked the door upon us, Christ can glide silently into our midst and speak his blessed "Peace be unto you," when we deemed him far away. You need not feel worthy of his presence in order to enjoy it; on the contrary, the more unworthy you feel, the more certainly will its support and comfort be yours. His face may be hid, his "footsteps in the sea," and his "judgments be a great deep," no bewildering mazes incident to his procedure can invalidate the promiseto his church with which he closed his earthly mission.

His word and providence are full of voices and finger-boards, ever calling, ever pointing, to the living fountain where alone intelligent creatures can find happiness and perfection. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden," although primarily intended for those who are perishing outside the gates of Zion, is equally applicable to those within. Rest is the blessed boon he has promised, and rest is what the half-believing, half-doubting, sin-weary soul wants all the way through, from the moment when sin first becomes a burden and a disgust, until the disembodied spirit gains the consummation of its life-long yearnings in the bosom of Jesus within the vail. In many a storm in life's perilous voyage, we may hear the tender chiding of our Omnipotent Pilot, "why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?" Rest is promised us in our assumption of the yoke of Christ, rest in toil and weariness is our foretaste of glory in every stage of our pilgrimage, and rest is the great, all-comprehending promise that infolds our eternity of bliss. Often, indeed, as we stand in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim, within sight of the well of Jacob, we hear more of the curses of the one than the blessings of the other; but no one repairs with empty pitcher to the life-giving spring without meeting Jesus there. Higher petition the sorrowing heart cannot urge than to find rest by faith in Emmanuel; and a deeper bliss and fuller satisfaction the soul is incapable of than when conscious of repose in the arms of the Infinite. "I believe, help thou mine unbelief," has, with all its tears and fears a live spark under the ashes of doubt and darkness, which has been kindled by the breath of Jehovah. In groans, and tears, and wrestling, and desertion, and blood, eternal life was purchased; and in much tribulation, and sorrow, and trembling, it is maintained. Christ rested in the repose of faith and love even in his darkest hours and bitterest agonies, and so may his followers. We do not want more, do not need more, cannot ask for more, nor enjoy more. An unmixed cup of joy would blast our prospects for the future. There is no condition of power with God or accomplishment of Godward ends, given unto the children of men, save that which keeps the body under, and lays self in penitence and sacrifices at the foot of the cross. The terms of allegiance to infinite holiness are no less than utter death, and that by crucifixion, and a consecration so unreserved as to include even the very shoe-latchet. A scion so poisened and dwarfed by sin, engrafted on a stock so royal, so majestic and divinely pure, must needs be subject to much severe pruning and purging before it can "bear much fruit," or be transplanted into the unfading Eden. Not a small number of the saints need nothing so much as a rough, scouring process, to make them sore at every point of contact with the world, unclasp their affections from their worldly treasures, and give the cause of Christ a fresh impetus by their liberality. Woe to the disciple who is at ease because his "ground bringeth forth plentifully," and he knows not "where to bestow his fruit," while the great work of evangelization is languishing for want of open hearts, hands, and coffers. Rest found in having much and doing nothing, simulates the stupor of death. Rest in the all-sufficiency of Jesus, supports under the heaviest burdens, and leads to abundant labors and sacrifices for the advancement of his interests. When Christ was on earth he called all classes of sad-hearted, weary souls to him, and so full was his person of virtue, and so ready was he to communicate, that a simple touch of the hem of his garment was enough to secure the coveted blessings. No poor, suffering suppliant ever applied to him in vain. His heart was wide open through all his ministry to such as sought shelter in its love, and the spear that pierced it on the cross opened it wider still. The wanton thrust of that heartless soldier opened a gash in which a countless race of sinners may bury its woe, and yet not fill it up, or exhaust its efficacy. That quivering, bleeding wound is the only asylum for the soul that despairs of rest in every thing beneath the sun. Although long since healed, in a blessed sense it is still open, still flowing with the purple life-current, still gurgling with the solemn death murmur, still pleading with the sinner in the expiring tones of love, still giving rest to the weary, and speaking peace to troubled souls. He is still "this same Jesus." Not only is it "a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," even the chief; but he is represented as coming into the flesh and dying expressly to "save his people from their sins." Mark, his people. "Every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." To lop off the green boughs "is not joyous, but grievous." "I know their sorrows," is still the sweet cardiphonia of the ever-watchful, ever-loving Shepherd. Not only does he know our sorrows, of the root also whence these sorrows spring. Our deepest, most constant, most corroding sorrow is, that sin still dwells in us and so often pollutes our thoughts and feelings and shows its immanence in a variety of forms in our life. Jesus knows all this and having been made sin for us, knows how to sympathize in our conflict with it. While he remembers the horror he endured on the cross for the very sins that still cleave to his children, he is well pleased to see in us so much of himself in our hatred of sin and daily struggle against it. Jesus hates all sin, but he does not hate all in whom there are yet remains of sin. If sin, any sin, habitually rules us, we are yet aliens and enemies, and are excluded from the immunities of the saints. But if our life is shaped by the supreme purpose of walking after the spirit and not after the flesh, we are safe in Christ, even if we must daily weep over the doubt, and trials, and troubles occasioned by indwelling corruption. To be at unconditional war with sin, according to the Divine tactics, and in the use of heaven's own armor, is to be in Christ, and such a soul can no more perish than Christ can prove recreant. As all sin, and Divine indignation against it, found a victim in one person; so that person, in dying, died for all as though all had been one. While he foresaw you & as enemy, his love constrained him to offer himself as your substitute. How much more precious are you now that you desire above all things to live to his glory. If you turn your gaze within, you will see much to depress and alarm you, but you will also discover there a desire, a longing, a purpose, a love, of which Jesus is himself the author. Let the consciousness of inborn evil humble you deeply, but not hide from your vision the Lamb of God on the altar of sacrifice. Let what the holy spirit has wrought in you, encourage your hope that what he has begun he will also finish, but let not the reflected light of the moon be mistaken for the direct beams of the self-illumed sun. Jesus is the saint's all in all. The best saint is ashamed of himself, and has no hope, no rest, no comfort, but in him who was divine enough to satisfy God, and humane enough to atone for man. "The bruised reed he will not break, and smoking flax he will not quench, till he sends forth judgment unto victory." He does not lavish all his regards on the strong, but has a special love for the weak. There he has promised to manifest his greatest displays of power. If your faith is but as a grain of mustard, which is the least of all seeds, it will take you to glory. The love that bleeds and dies, will not despise the faith that weeps and trembles. Truly and affectionately your brother.

C. H. Balsbaugh.

Humility.

Christ taught humility by parable; by precept; by example; and as "he resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble," we will do well by examining ourselves whether we are truly humble.

With Christ for our pattern this may surely be done. Are we willing to follow where he leads? Through trials and afflictions! Persecutions and sorrows! Ignominy and death!

"A king of kings, and Lord of Lords," he submitted to persecutions by his own subjects. He who had the "hosts of heaven" at his command, suffered vile man to drive nails through his quivering, bleeding flesh. He who was without sin, pure and undefiled, suffered himself to be hung in ignominy between thieves.

Do our lives compare in lowly dejection with that which we cannot equal in excellence? Do we think more of men that are rich than those that are poor? He associated with the poor Gallilean fishermen and despised tax-gatherers.

Do we feel inclined to despise and persecute those who do not attain to our standard of righteousness? He ate with publicans and sinners. Do we seek self-aggrandizement? His whole life was an example of self-abasement.

He taught true, genuine humility—the humility of the heart. If we are truly humble, God knows it, and he will "add his grace" "which is sufficient for us." A garb of man's device can be but a miserable substitute for genuine humility, and if we make use of the former without possessing the latter we put ourselves under condemnation.

As the wearing of crape is not a sure index of genuine grief; and as the widening of phylacteries and the enlargement of the borders of the garments did not show forth a due regard for the divine commands, so no garb of man's device can answer for a substitute for true, genuine christian humility. "By the fruit the tree is known." The fruits of genuine humility manifest themselves—like all other christian graces—in our walk, and conduct, and actions through life. We will, if we have an humble spirit, bear with each other in our weaknesses, remembering that we were all purchased with the same price. We will "labor first to remove the beam in our own eyes," and will hardly "see clearly" enough "to remove the splinter in our brother's eye." The truly humble, knowing how to place a proper estimate on themselves, feel too much depressed by a sense of their own unworthiness for the pharisaical dictum of "stand back, thou sinner, I am holier than thou."

I pray, dear readers of the Companion, that we may, in humility, see ourselves as God sees us, which will make us wise unto salvation, that we may know "what we are by nature and what we must be by grace."

On Acts 1: 25.

Answer to H. Howes.

The brother (or sister) requests an explanation on Acts 1: 25, which reads thus: "That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place."

The querist wishes to know whom the pronoun "he" in the last clause of this sentence means, Judas or his successor.

Answer. The grammatical construction of this passage shows that the pronoun "he" referred to, represents the noun Judas; therefore Judas went unto his own place. This is also proved by the words of Christ, which will be shown at the conclusion of this reply.

Let us analyze: The verse quoted is a compound sentence. The pronoun he in the first clause, represents the successor of Judas, and is the subject of the verb may take; which is in the present tense; but the verb might go, to which the pronoun "he" in the last clause is nominative, is in the past tense; wherefore the two pronouns cannot have the same antecedent; otherwise the sentence would be ungrammatical; because all the verbs in a sentence, which have the same subject, must agree in tense; unless there be a necessary change of tense, which, in this case, there is not. If, however, we assume that the pronoun "he" in the last clause represents the noun Judas, the sentence is grammatical; for the verbs "fell" and "might go" agree in time, both being in the past tense. Any one, who does not understand grammar, can see how clearly it makes "he" in the last clause of this passage represent the successor of Judas, if we substitute "may go" for "might go."

Judas went to his own place then, which was perdition, the same as that of the "rich man." He was lost according to the words of the Savior; who says, referring to his disciples, "None of them is lost but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled." (John 17: 12.) He also says, (Matth. 26: 24): "The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born."

Obedience.

BY E. UMBAUGH.

Obedience converts man from an heir of hell to an heir of immortal glory. Obedience to God, we mean. It is this that was established, by our blessed Savior, as the only means by which we can possibly attain to eternal happiness.—There are those in the world who teach that even baptism is not essential to salvation. We say, too, that not a single ordinance would be essential to salvation, if GOD would have decreed that men and women should be saved without it. But as man has no promise of salvation without first becoming converted, he is under obligation to God to obey all his holy mandates. Hence we claim that not only baptism but every other ordinance established by Christ and his holy Apostles is designed exclusively for the benefit of the sinner. Obedience is required of the sinner. If there would have been no sinners in the world, God would not have established those means of grace by which they can gain his approbation. Men and women must become converted to God before they have any promise of eternal life, and as long as they leave undone one of God's holy mandates they are unconverted and disobedient, and all disobedience is sin and the wages of sin is death. Now there are those who may claim that these are assertions of our own, but we know that they are backed up by God's holy word which will stand firmly when all opposition will fall powerless before the judgment seat of Christ. Dear friend, you who contend against the holy ordinances of God and claim that they are not essential, remember that you will never be converted until you are changed from disobedience to obedience in those mandates which you denounce as non-essential, and while you live in this world is the only time that will be given you for the purpose of bringing about this change. Will you not, then, give up your notions of disobedience which are nothing more than the fragments of error which have been scattered abroad by papal authority? Will you not protest against the "mother of harlots" and also refuse to advocate any of the tenets of her children? We denounce, as unfit for christian practice, everything of popish origin except that which may be traced through the church of Rome to Christ, but we are sorry to say that that church has lost about all that was originally practised as christian duty, and by her papal powers has almost deluged the world in a perverted christianity by which men and women are made to feel secure, and launch forth, undeceived, into eternity.

Hints to Ministers.

Reflect much on the indispensable and transcendent importance of personal religion.

Aim, with the most conscientious solicitude, at purity of motive in all your ministerial engagements.

Let a deep responsibility at the divine tribunal secure ministerial fidelity.

Let pointed appeals to the heart, and direct application to the conscience, form a prominent feature in your discourses.

Exercise a humble and entire dependence on the promised influences of the Holy Spirit.

Endeavor to regulate, on principles which an enlightened conscience will approve, the time devoted to pastoral visits and friendly intercourse.

What folly is it, that with such care about the body, which is dying, the world, which is perishing before our eyes, time, which is perpetually disappearing, we should so little care about that eternal state in which we are to live forever when this dream is over! When we shall have existed ten thousand years in another world, where will be all the cares, and fears, and anjoyments of this! In what light shall we then look upon the things which now transport us with joy or overwhelm us with grief!—Venn.

Virtue is her own reward.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Comforter.

I, even I, am he that comforteth you.—Isaiah 51 : 12.

In God let all his saints rejoice,
With thankful heart and cheerful voice;
Thus saith his word, so kind, so true,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Sweet words! O, let us bless his name,
And joyful all his praise proclaim;
These words shall foes and fears subdue,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Are you in darkness and distress?
Does Satan roar and break your peace?
Fear not, but still this truth review,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Do sore afflictions on you lay?
And pungent sorrows day by day?
Look to this word, 't will bear you through,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

If death in gloomy form appear,
And overwhelm your soul with fear,
Let this sweet word your faith renew,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Thus while you sojourn here below,
As pilgrims in this world of woe,
Make this your song the journey through,
"I, even I, will comfort you."

Learning not Everything.

Many think that only the learned are capable as Sunday-school teachers. For this reason many who have undertaken the instruction of a class lose their courage all at once, and want to give up their position, believing that they have not sufficient learning and culture. It is true that learning and theological education can not be estimated highly enough, and if every Sunday-school teacher had so much of them that he could be a doctor of divinity, it would certainly be a great advantage. But learning alone does not do for a teacher. Not every learned theologian, not even every theological student, is on that account a good Sunday school teacher. We can often see that in the speeches and addresses made by such men to the children of a Sunday-school. They are very learned, and might be quite edifying for older people, but for children neither intelligible nor animating.

The apostles of our Lord himself were not well-schooled, learned theologians, but they were better teachers than all, even the most learned. The Sunday-school teacher should, above all things, be practical. By practical experience he can accomplish far more with his scholars than by mere book-learning. If both are united, so much the better; but learning alone accomplishes much less than simple, practical experience and skillfulness. He who goes at his work with a steadfast mind, given up to God, prepares himself carefully and conscientiously for the lesson, pays attention to order and discipline among his scholars, speaks simply, clearly, and distinctly to them, questions them and reviews them carefully, will not be wanting in success, if it does cost some trouble at first in the unaccustomed vocation of a teacher. Experience makes the master, says the proverb, and it holds good in this case also.—Translated from the German.

The Sort of Sermons People Want.—Fanny Fern, in an article on Sunday in a New York paper, remarks:—"I want a human sermon. I don't care what Melchisedek, or Zerubbabel, or Kerenhappuk did, ages ago: I want to know what I am to do, and I want somebody besides a theological bookworm to tell me—somebody who is sometimes tempted and tried, and is not too dignified to own it; somebody like me, who is always sinning and repenting; somebody who is glad and sorry, and cries and laughs, and eats and drinks, and wants to fight when they are trodden on—and don't! That's the minister for me. I don't want a spiritual abstraction, with stony eyes and petrified fingers, and no blood to battle with. What credit is it to him to be proper? How can he understand me? Were there only such ministers in the pulpit I wouldn't go to church either, because my impatient feet would only beat a tattoo on the pew floor till service was over; but, thank God, there are; and while they preach I shall go to hear them, and come home better and happier for having done it."

Cover up the Scar.

When an eminent painter was requested to paint Alexander the Great, so as to give a perfect likeness of the Macedonian conqueror, he felt a difficulty.

Alexander, in his wars, had been struck by a sword, and across his forehead was an immense scar. The painter said: "If I retain the scar, it will be an offence to the admirers of the monarch, and if I omit it, it will fail to be a perfect likeness—what shall I do?" He hit upon a happy expedient; he represented the Emperor leaning on his elbow, with his forefinger upon his brow, accidentally, as it seemed, covering the scar upon his forehead. Might not we represent each other with the finger of charity upon the scar, instead of representing the scar deeper and blacker than it actually is? Might not Christians learn from this a lesson of charity, of human kindness, and of love?

Good Feeling and Well Doing.

Here is a man who is a roaring good christian. He goes to meeting. There is a revival, and his religious feelings are all aglow. And it is all right. He does feel just as he says he does. There is no hypocrisy in his profession. He takes his hymn book, and the minister happens to be fortunate, and the hymn comes right home and circumstances concur, and the electric influences are favorable, and the meeting is a joyful one, and he will not go home until twelve o'clock. He has sung twenty hymns, and he does feel as though he could not keep himself on the ground.—"A little more, Lord," he says, "and I shall fly away." Now I want to see if tomorrow he will go to his neighbor, with whom he has been at variance, and say: "Look here, my dear fellow, we are wrong; at any rate I am, whether you are or not. I have been ugly. Forgive me. I had such a good time last night, that I must clean my heart. My pride must come down, and I must be reconciled to you."

He did have a good time, and that is the sign that the feeling which he experienced was genuine. That he roared his hymns joyfully was no sign of it; that he had ecstasy of prayer was no sign of it; but that having that elevation, he changed it to a moral purpose; that out of that feeling he wrought garments of duty; that out of that experience he came back to his fellow man more sympathetic, more humble, more Christ-like—ah! that was a sign that the feeling was a genuine one. Otherwise it would have been simply a sign of self-indulgence.—H. W. Beecher.

Turkish Justice.

Translated from an old German Paper.

A Musselman who is charged with setting fire to the house of a Christian, is brought before the Pashaw.

Pashaw, "Thou hast set fire to the house of a Christian."

Turk. "Yes."

Pashaw, (to an officer) "Bring in that Christian whose house he hath burnt down, for I can not give sentence before I have heard the accuser."

Officer. "My Lord! The Christians have burnt along with their house—they are now in eternity."

Pashaw "I can give no sentence without first hearing the accuser. (to the officer) Open the Koran and see what is to be done when the injured party can not appear."

Officer (after opening) "My Lord, here we read—"When the injured party cannot appear, but his residence is know to be at some other place known to us; then the accused shall be sent to that place to be judged."

Pashaw. "Thou sayest the Christians are in eternity?—that is therefore a place known to us:—thou shalt therefore, send the accused by the sword, as soon as possible into eternity: there to receive his sentence from a higher Tribunal."

If a man who prays, could see all that comes to him every day in answer to prayer all the things bestowed which he had desired in prayer, and which would not have been confered on him if he had not prayed, there would no longer be any doubt on the question whether God answers prayer.

"You ought to acquire the faculty of being at home in the best society," said a fashionable aunt to an honest nephew. "I manage that easy enough," responded the nephew, "by staying at home with my wife and children."

Regret not a golden age that is left behind. There is one before, and it beckons you. Its rewards are not for the idle, but for the brave hearts disciplined to toil.

A "Big Mistake."

We suppose our readers did not exactly understand us when we said in No. 11, that we have now booked nine hundred and fifty subscribers since our call for one thousand, and then immediately after stated that we were yet a great way off. That was a mistake and a "big mistake" it was, and it was our own. We first put it on the printers; (the poor printers must take much blame) but the copy was produced with the indentical words So must take it all back. We meant to say we had booked fifty, and lacked nine hundred and fifty of the desired number. Since then we have received fifty more. Making in all 100, only nine hundred more. We will soon have them if you will send one. We mean you who have not yet sent any.

All have our thanks for past favors.

Not Exactly Right.

Following a note by brother John H. Stager, in last week's paper, are a few remarks by the editor, which were intended as a response to the three preceding items, viz from brother E. Geaa, Fleming C. Barnes, and J. H. Stager, but were not exactly so expressed.

We have a few more who report in the same way this week.

Rail Road Privileges to Annual Meeting.

Last Annual Meeting appointed the editor of this paper an agent to confer with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for reduced rates of fare to delegates, and other going to said meeting with a view of participating in its deliberations and privileges. Upon our application to said Company we were furnished with the following

CIRCULAR.

At a meeting of the General Ticket Agent's Association held at Louisville, Ky., October 6th, 1869, the following resolution was adopted:

"RESOLVED, That we, the representatives of the various Rail Roads of the United States, hereby agree, on and after January 1st, 1870, to refuse in future to accept any certificate of the Secretary, President or any other officer of any convention, religious, political or otherwise, whether it be local or through; in other words, make no reduction of fare unless it can be done by issuing round trip tickets."

In accordance with the terms of the above resolution, the issue and use of Free Return Certificates by the Pennsylvania Rail Road, and the Philadelphia & Erie Rail Road, for delegates and others attending conventions and meetings of a religious, political, educational, agricultural, or other character, will be discontinued on and after January 1st, 1870. Arrangements will be made for the sale of Excursion or Round-Trip Tickets, for delegates to such conventions and meetings, as may from time to time be deemed proper and expedient, under the following regulations and conditions:—

Orders for Excursion Tickets will be printed, stating the name of the organization, place and date of meeting, and calling for the sale of Excursion Tickets, on certain days to be specified, at the usual rate of about two cents per mile, to and from the place of meeting, if located on the line of the road, or to the point of divergence if beyond the line. These orders will be supplied from this office to the secretary or other proper officer of the convention or meeting, to be sent to the persons entitled to them previous to their leaving home. They are to be issued only to those persons who are entitled to be in regular business attendance at the proposed convention or meeting as delegates or members having the right to participate in its deliberations and to vote therein. They must be presented to the Ticket Agent at any station on the road, who will retain them, and sell to the holders Excursion Tickets good in both directions as specified in the orders. These not disposed of must be returned to this office with a certified statement showing the consecutive numbers of those actually issued and the name and address of each person to whom they were severally given or sent.

We have complied with the regulations set forth in the circular, and have been furnished with a number of orders which we are now prepared to supply to those who are entitled to them.

Our directions are to issue them "only to those persons who are entitled to be in regular business attendance at the the proposed meeting." Our decision upon this point is that any member of the Church, brother or sister, who goes to the meeting for the sake of the meeting, is in business attendance, and we shall issue the orders in accordance with said decision. A certificate should accompany every application from persons with whom we have no acquaintance. A remittance of 10 cents should also accompany each application.

Understand: the order we send you directs your ticket agent, anywhere on the Pennsylvania Railroad or its branches, to sell you an excursion ticket on June 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, to be made good to return until June 20th, thus allowing 20 days to return.

PITTSBURG FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILROAD.

We have also made the same arrangements with the Pittsburg Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and can therefore supply orders for tickets through to Chicago.

We are also endeavoring to obtain special through rates from Philadelphia to Waterloo, for those who may wish to remain longer. Will announce the result as soon as ascertained.

Answers to Correspondents.

JOS. CONNELL. Yes; we will call it square. Thank you.

C. OAKS. John Kelley's subscription is out, if our books are right.

JOHN A. STRAYER. We have no charges against you; so the money must have come to hand.

JOSEPH ZAHN. It will cost you 75 cents.

JOSEPH WEAVER. The Companion will be $1.20 and the Youth 75cts, or $1 90 together.

SARAH HARLEY. We think the money never came to hand.

H. F. ROSENBERGER. One dollar and twenty cents will pay to end of 1870.

J. L. MILLER. Forty cents more will pay all arrearages and in advance to end of present volume.

C. G. LINT. Yes, it was a mistake. But your article had originality enough in it to show its author. Will do better, or try to do so.

Change of Address.

Brother John H. Filmore has changed his address from Altovisto, Mo., to Mt Etna, Adams Co., Iowa.

James A. Sell. from McAleveys Fort, to Newry, Blair Co., Pa.

Messrs. Geo. P. Rowell & Co, Advertising Agents, No. 40 Park Row, New York, are authorized to receive advertisements for this paper at our lowest rates.

Brother John H. Filmore, while writing to have his address changed, embraced the opportunity of sending us four new subscribers. We are not particularly fond of changing addresses, but when orders are accompanied with such important matter we should not object if a few more should move. We like a move in the right direction.

Notices.

LIFE IN UTAH, or the Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism. Being an expose of the Latter Day Saints, with a full and authentic History of the Mormon Sect, from its origin to the present time. By J. W. Beadle Editor of the "Salt Lake Reporter."

The above is the title of a book of which advance sheets have been received at this office. It is being published by the National Publishing Company, 26 South 7th Street Philadelphia, and will be sold by subscription only. Agents are wanted in every county.

Brother Holsinger; As I noticed in the Companion that you still wanted nine hundred and ninety subscribers I thought I would try and do what little I could towards raising them. So I went to work and found two that would like to have the paper for which you will find three dollars, enclosed.

SUSAN E. BURKMER.

There is another sister that has filled her quota, and one over. What is there to hinder every one from doing the same. Nothing but the effort. Some say there are no members in their neighborhood. That is no matter. Your pious and upright life will give you an influence over others. Your neighbors will want to know what influence it is that enables you to be humble—so self-controlled, kind, charitable, zealous, and industrious. Tell them it is the influence of the religion of Jesus as taught in his word, and held forth in the church of the Brethren; and advocated in this paper. Ask them to subscribe. You need not be afraid to solicit their subscriptions. They are not backward in asking you to support their press. Even some of the politicians have the audacity to ask our Brethren to support their vile sheets.

How many more sisters will "try?" That is the successful word. We know that much may be done when one tries. We have tried, and we mean to try again.

There are only nine hundred wanting now. Shall we not have them?

The One Thousand.

Our friends are still making an effort to fill their quotas. John A. Eikenbery says: "This was our meeting day, but it was so very muddy so I worked for you, and have one more subscriber."

John H. Brumbaugh says: "In the last No of C. F. C. you say Try your neighbor. So I did, and succeeded in getting the above name."

There are quite a number of others who would succeed if they would try, try again.

Now is the time to make the effort before the men take off their coats, and the women roll up their sleeves to take hold of the Spring work

Moving Time.

Moving time is approaching, and with it scores of orders for changing addresses. How we do wish people would not be under the necessity of changing their homes. Nevertheless if they can suit themselves better, we will cheerfully perform our part of the flitting. Moving is not such a great matter if the roads are not too muddy, and you know where to go to. So it is not much trouble for us to change the address of a subscriber when the way is clear, and we know where he comes from and where he wishes to go to. When both these are not known we don't move. Make a note of this fact.

:o:

Many of our correspondents are loud and emphatic in their expressions of approbation of our publications. It does not make us a bit proud; we are only made to feel more sensibly the weight of responsibility that is resting upon us. Besides, we have not time to reckon how much of the credit belongs to ourself. At first glance it appears to us to be a very small share. Gradually we hope our friends will cease their laudations, lest peradventure their frequent repetitions may lead us into temptation, and we become vain.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's nam and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Benjamin Franklin's Bible.

Brother Holsinger: In current volume page 104, is a question asked by Rosie Snowberger; viz: "In what part of the Bible the following chapter is found?"

This question was answered in No. 10, that it is found in the 59th, chapter of Benjamin Franklin's Bible.—This answer does not satisfy us, neither does it satisfy the question. The question is, in what part of the Bible is it found, and not in what Bible. When we use the definite article "the," we refer to a particular object. When we say the Bible we refer directly to the word of God. We therefore claim the question is not answered, and if no one else can give a more satisfactory answer, we shall call on sister Snowberger for an explanation of the question.

Brother Holsinger; This blessed Sabbath morning I have had the privilege of reading the Companion. It is a welcome messenger to me, as I am alone. There are no members near, and I have not heard any of the brethren preach for six months, nor preaching of other denominations. I must do the best I can without preaching as there are no ministering brethren near. Brother Flory has so many calls, he cannot have preaching often here; but I feel thankful that I can hear of some still coming out from the world. It makes me rejoice to see the young sisters near my own age, and hope they will not have the crosses to bear that I have. I have been a member of the church nearly nine years. I would be glad to have the brethren come and preach for us.

Your unworthy sister.

Mary A. Hughart.

Fayette Co., Wt Va.

Friend Sarah Stem; I was glad to hear from you, and that you are still on the land of the living. We are anxious to hear from our old friends generally, as we are a great ways apart. We should be happy to meet some of our old friends that we left in Pennsylvania. I gave my Post Office address in my last; it was a mistake of the Editor. My address is Middletown, Montgomery Co., Mo.

George Hipple.

Brother Holsinger; This blessed Sabbath day I have been enjoying the privilege of reading the Companion, while no one else is near, and I can heartily say it brings a welcome message in my behalf, and do think it is as good as preaching to me, when I have no opportunity of going to meeting, for at this time I feel almost forsaken. As God knoweth all things best, he has seen proper to call my loving companion away into eternity, and thus I am left a lonesome widow, without a bosom friend to soothe my troubled mind, or ease my aching heart. It is a trial that none knows but those that have had the experience. Oh, brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may endure my troubles and trials unto the end, and then meet my loved one never more to part. May the God of grace ever be with you, and help you to carry on your work rightly and acceptably in his sight, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

Elmira Armstrong.

White Oak, Ill.

Brother Henry; I have been a reader of the Companion for one year, and am a subscriber for 1870, and can truly say I am well pleased with the paper. It makes its regular arrival and brings with it good, wholesome doctrines, such as is calculated to encourage the Christian on his travels through this world; and feeling an interest for the paper and its editor, I thought I would communicate a few thoughts for its columns.

I learn there are a great many of our dear brethren and sisters living entirely remote from the brethren, and are deprived of hearing preaching. To such let me say, be not discouraged but continue to fight the good fight; stand firm upon the rock that is able to bear us through all the trials and conflicts of this world. Then let me say to you, brethren and sisters, who are blest with the glorious privilege of hearing the gospel preached, think of those that are deprived of these blessings. Give them a few words of encouragement. We should have love for, and pray for one another; by so doing we may discharge our duty. And let us look unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith, ever having that love for one another that our Savior had for us.

From the Manor Congregation, Md.

Brother Holsinger: Finding, through reading the many articles written by many brethren and sisters scattered over the United States, and published in the Companion, that church news is much desired, and eagerly sought after, and read with delight, particularly so when it is of a cheering character; we conceive the idea that the intelligence that we are about to present, is of such a character as to cause the heart of many a brother and sister to glow with gratitude to the dispenser of all good, for his great love manifested to usward, "in that he hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Surely the good Lord has been blessing the efforts that have been put forth by the church here during the three last months. We are truly having a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The joy, peace and comfort that is obtained and enjoyed through obedience of the Gospel of Jesus Christ our Savior, has found its way into many families and individuals, who have received such a consolation that no man can give or take away. Fathers and mothers, husbands and wives, have been made to rejoice with each other that they and their children have found the pearl of great price, that they have been enabled to see, and their souls to taste of the salvation of the Lord, and to drink deep out of that well which springeth up into everlasting life.

Since the twenty-fourth of December, no less than thirty-six have been added to the church, and have covenanted with God in baptism to renounce all the sinful practices of the world, and to live faithful unto death. Some have received the admonition of the wise man, "to remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Eccl. 12: 1 For in the number was the youngest boy and girl of thirteen and fourteen summers, up to the gray haired father and mother, that had neglected this great salvation until already past the meridian of life; but bless God, they think on their way, and "have turned their feet to the testimonies of the Lord, and made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments." Psalms 119: 59, 60. For "blessed are they that do thy commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14. Of this number were those that had professed the faith of the German Reformed church, the Lutheran, the United Brethren, and other opinions of men, and to accept of the self-denying and much despised doctrines of Jesus Christ, and neither persuasion, ridicule, nor contemptuous remarks, about some of the plain commands of the Lord could restrain or deter them from obedience. But in their actions thus clearly demonstrated, that they considered it better to obey God than man, and thereby declaring, by their actions—which always speak louder than words—that their "faith is wrought in God," and that they would "rather suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season," and would sooner that the finger of scorn should be pointed; than to be ashamed to confess Jesus fully and without any reserve. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Mark 8: 38, and Luke 9: 26.

And we will farther remark that so deep were the convictions that they would turn out and travel over the worst of roads to meeting, and go to the waters side when the rain and hail were falling fast, and during severe snow storms; and to go down into the liquid stream to be buried with him by baptism into death; "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Rom. 6: 4.

We have had many special meetings since the first of December. In the early part of that month brethren Moses Miller and Adam Bealman from lower Cumberland, Pa., labored faithfully among us for some seven days; and about the eleventh of February brother Daniel Good, of Franklin county, Pa., came and continued for about a week, holding forth the word of life in its purity; and on the evening of the fifteenth brethren Jacob Trostle and Ephraim Stoner, who were traveling and laboring among the brethren of the different arms of the church in Maryland and Franklin county, Pa., came to us on a mission of love, and at the three meetings that they were with us contended faithfully for the faith once delivered to the saints. Besides these, brother Leonard Emmert, from an adjoining congregation, was with us occasionally, and helped to expose error and to do battle against spiritual wickedness in high places, and our prayer is that the good Lord may bless those brethren that have labored so faithfully with us, and that they may be comforted with the thought that their labors have not been in vain, but that they may ever be zealous and persevering in the good cause; and the Lord grant that they may have souls for their hire; that they may have the consciousness of doing the will of the Lord while on earth; and in the evening of their day, can say with the apostle: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5: 1.

We are fully convinced by past events that there can be much more accomplished on the part of the brethren if we would persevere more. The object in view is a noble one; none higher, more to be desired or more worthy of our consideration, none more lasting and fruitful of good results, than to labor to rescue the precious souls from impending dangers to which they are exposed while living in sin. If there is a class of people that will encompass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when made he is two folds more the child of hell than they are themselves; then should we not be zealously engaged in trying with all our power to get precious souls truly converted to Jesus Christ, in his own appointed way. Surely, knowing the terror of the Lord, let us persuade men to leave their wicked ways that drag souls down to perdition; and get them to accept of the elevating and heaven saving doctrine of Jesus Christ, that will comfort us through life and make our "dying beds fell soft as downy pillows are," and eternity one continued scene of enjoyment.

DANIEL WOLF.

A Letter.

To sister Elizabeth Hillary, widow of Elder Howard Hillary, dec., of Marshalltown, Iowa.

My dear sister; Your kind letter came to hand about the fifteenth day of December. I thought of answering it before this, but my companion who commonly writes for me, has been, (part of the time,) in feeble health; and his engagements are such, that he has seldom got time to answer letters as he would wish to do; hence, I hope you will in patience bear with the delay. It is now some six or seven years since we enjoyed the privilege of being together. Many changes have happened since you and your family have left Maryland for Iowa; and some of those changes have been very serious, as you know from experience. In the providence of God it has so happened that your husband has been taken away from his family, and his brethren and friends here on earth; and we sincerely hope he is only gone before to that heavenly mansion, which Jesus told his disciples he was going to prepare for them. In view of this, we shou'd "set our house in order," so as to be ready when the time arrives for us to leave this world. It is hard, and sometimes very hard to have our friends taken from us; yet it is a part of wisdom to submit, for it to be so; hoping that it is all permitted for some wise purpose.

Amongst the changes that have happened since you left Maryland, I might mention the death of a very considerable number of our brethren and sisters, with whom you had oft held sweet converse, and whose society and friendship you had enjoyed while together, but they too (like your dear husband,) have gone from this to another, and we hope, a happier world; let us then bow with humble resignation to our heavenly Father's will, inasmuch as all things shall work together for good to them who love God.

As to the church here, I would state that the ministry are still contending for the faith and doctrine delivered to the saints: but they are not quite as successful in their efforts as they, perhaps, would be under other circumstances, yet, there is still a few additions making from year to year. We, for the last several years, have had three communion meetings each year, one at each of our meeting houses.

In the fall of 1869, the brethren concluded to hold an election for two teachers. Brother David W. Rowland was chosen at Meadow Branch, and brother William H. Frankin was chosen at Sams Creek. During the same year there were two brothers chosen for deacons, brother Amos Cayler and brother Joel Roop. With this additional number, the church here has two bishops, three elders, two teachers and seven deacons; and the best of all, I consider them to be orthodox, and, consequently, the brethren are trying to keep house in the church, as they did forty years ago; but circumstances are such, and surrounding influences together, that it is more difficult to keep up that love and harmony, which should always be cultivated among the brethren living in the same arm of the church; but notwithstanding things are not quite so favorable as we wou'd wish them to be, yet we are not disposed to find fault, or to complain, but our object is, and should be, "to strengthen the things that remain" and see that no man take my crown. I must now close for this time. Please tell your son, Charles, that my husband has received his letter, and is much pleased with the same, and he intends to answer it through the Companion, as soon as it may be convenient for him to do so. Now, dear sister, may the grace of our Lord Jesus be with you and yours.

This leaves us in tolerable good health, and our friends also, with some exception. My husband joins me in love to you all. I remain yours as ever, in the Gospel.

RACHEL BOYLE.

New Windsor, Md.

Dear Brother; I send answers to several questions that appeared in Companion no 8, present vol. Those who can give more light I hope will do it, without personalities or criticisms. It is light we want and not controversy. Let all answer that can give light on any question. Let us strive to enlighten one another as much as possible; we need all the light we can get. The best light shines the brightest, so the best answer has the greatest weight of testamony. No need of criticisms at all on one another's answers. If I have not given a correct answer, you give a correct one; and if we both are incorrect, let a third, or a fourth, 5th, 6th, or 10th, give a correct answer. That is what we want; we are seeking after knowledge, not above what is written, but to understand what is written for our learning. Yours in love.

A. J. CORRELL.

Very well said, brother Correll. We remarked in a private letter to a dear brother, who has since gone to his reward, that we hoped he would not stop to defend his own explanations. The brother referred to answered a great many queries through the Companion, and his answers almost inevitably led into a controversy. What we desire is light. And if a brother's lamp makes no light he ought not to complain when another "blows it out." But we are so apt to defend our own. Trim your lamps, brethren and sisters, make the light shine brightly, and it will eclipse your brother's "dark lantern," and he will hide it under a bushel.

Information Wanted.

Brother Holsinger; My parents raised a young woman by the name of Lavina Siplinger. She left our family about 12 years ago, and settled at New Carlisle, Ohio, and married a man named Doise. We have not heard from her for a long time. We would be very thankful for any information of her.

Queries.

What wonderful article of food, described in the Old Testament, was typical of Christ?

MOLLIE E. SULLIVAN.

Will brother Brown, or some other brother, give his views on Matt. 12: 40. "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Was Christ really in the heart of the earth?

F. M. SNYDER.

Will some brother or sister give an explanation through the Companion; Jude 22nd and 23rd verses? The words read as follows: And of some have compassion; making a difference. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garments spotted by the flesh. J. Y. SNAVELY.

MARRIED.

March 17th, by the undersigned, at the house of Harry Wissinger, JACOB W. GIFFER, to MARY ANN SHAFER, all of Cambria county, Pa. STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the village of Haldane, Ogle county, Illino's, March 14, MELVINE E., son of brother Emanuel S. and sister Maggie BUTTERBAUGH; aged 4 years, 9 months, and 4 days. May the blessings of God rest upon the father and mother, that they may be comforted by the consolation, that if they continue on in meeting God's divine approbation, that they shall meet their little son whom they loved so dearly, in the arms of Jesus. Funeral services by brother Michael Emeret, from a portion of the 90th Psalm.

NOAH EARLY.

In the Antietam congregation, Franklin county, Penna., March 4th, SUSANNAH, wife of Jonas STUCKEY, and daughter of brother Henry Bonebrake; aged 24 years, 9 months, and 28 days.

Early in the Winter she took sick by confinement and endured a siege of twelve weeks of intense suffering. Previous to her sickness she spoke of her return to God, but thought to defer her baptism for a few months, anxiously looking forward to the time when she would obey the Lord in his appointed way. But alas! her designs were frustrated. During her sickness we met with her, sang and prayed with her, and besought the Lord for mercy. She desired to be received into the church. The brethren were called and we received her as an applicant for baptism, and offered her encouragemont. She then appeared to be reconciled; and as she was young and consistent in her ways, we trust that the will has been accepted for the act. O! that all would obey the Lord while they have time and opportunity.

The occasion was improved by Jacob Price and others, from Amos 4: 12: "Prepare to meet thy God." J. F. OLLER.

In the Conemaugh branch, Cambria county, Pa., March the 15th, sister CATHARINE FISHER, consort of brother Samuel Fisher; aged 62 years, 4 months, and 11 days. Sister Fisher was a consistent member of the church for many years. Funeral services by the writer from the words: "Set thy house in order for thou shalt die and not live." Isa. 38: 1. STEPHEN HILDEBRAND.

(Visitor please copy.)

Near Shinersburg, Wayne Co., Ohio, March 11th, by explosion of a boiler on a steam saw mill, LEWIS and DAVID HOOVER, brothers in the flesh. David lived three hours after. Age: Lewis, 30 years, 5 months, and 8 days; David, 22 years, 7 months, 22 days. Both single; sons of brother Martin and sister Elizabeth Hoover, from Morrisons Cove, Pa. Funeral occasion improved by friend Beary, and J. B. Shoemaker,

In Lick creek congregation, Owen county, Ind., on the 11th of March, LYDIA ELLEN, a daughter of brother and sister John and Catharine SHOWALTER; aged 2 years, 5 months, and 1 day. Funeral occasion improved by Elders Moses Hochstetler, and David Culler. O! how happy must those be who die in their infancy. Text. 1st Peter 1: 23, 24. JOHN LONG.

Near Westminster, Carroll county, Md., March 11th, brother CHRISTIAN BOYER; aged 70 years and 14 days. He was an exemplary member of the church for many years, and for the last 20 years of his life, he was a worthy minister of the Gospel. He was considered a Gaius, his house was always open for the brethren and friends; he was remarkably good to the poor; and in the church he was an excellent counsellor and a good helper. On the morning of the 13th inst, his remains were taken to, and buried in, the Brethren's grave yard at Meadow branch. He has left a widow, with a large number of children, and many relations and friends to mourn their loss. The occasion was improved by the brethren present. Text, Rev. 14: 13. There was a very large concourse of persons present.

PHILIP BOYLE.

In Antietem branch, Franklin county, Pa., at the house of her son-in-law, brother Joseph Gossert, on the 12th of March, sister MARY BOWSER, in the 77th year of her age. Disease, cancer. She bore her afflictions with christian fortitude, fully resigned to the will of God. Her remains were conveyed to their last resting place on the morning of the 14th. Funeral services by Elder Henry Koons and brother Daniel Holsinger, from Numbers 23: 10. JACOB FRIEDLY.

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promises of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we hope, for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Celebrated

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging, by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, and so on. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Billious Fever, and all derangements of the internal viscera. You have in this medicine a PANACEA for some of the most painful and dangerous of all diseases.

As a Female Regulator it has no equals in the world. Married ladies, who never have had children, seldom know the cause of their unhappy condition, which is very often depending upon a faulty state of the Uterine Organs, which can only be removed by the use of suitable remedies.

LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The state and quality of the bile must first be attended to, in order to preserve health. The bile in a vitiated state, or when not duly secreted, is oftener obstructed in the liver and gall bladder, and becomes a source of dyspepsia, constipation, and nervous complaints, jaundice, etc. The Panacea being strictly vegetable, and containing great anti-billious properties, and great alterative properties also, will act like a most magical medicine in this complaint. Thousands have found relief, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine, after exhausting their purses and patience in search of health.

Giddiness of the head, dullness of the mind, fœtid breath, coated tongue, loss of appetite, pains and weakness in the stomach, enlargement of the liver, yellowness of the skin, constant fever and thirst, with a total disrelish for business, pleasure, or any kind of employment, FAHRNEY'S PANACEA, if taken and persevered in for a few days, will remove this whole class of symptoms. The fluids of the body become pure, the mind clear, the stomach strengthened, the tongue clean, the appetite improved, and the whole system so benefited that disease, during bad weather, is less liable to afflict you.

"An Ounce of Prevention is worth more than a Pound of Cure." The PANACEA will not only cure old standing and malignant complaints, but is one of the best preventatives of such disorders, ever offered to the world.

You can avoid severe attacks of acute diseases, such as Cholera, Small Pox, Typhoid, Billious, Spotted and Intermittent Fevers, by keeping your blood purified. The different degrees of all such diseases depend altogether upon the condition of the blood, for if this vital fluid is deranged, you will take a disease much more readily than otherwise, and the suffering will be in proportion to the amount of foreign matter in the blood. This is so reasonable that we need not here make any illustrations.

This Medicine is highly recommended for all manner of chronic or old standing complaints, such as Scrofula, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, &c.

"Why Stand ye Here all the Day Idle."

In order to improve the passing moments, and also to add one mite to the advancement of our Master's Kingdom, we will try to consider for a few moments the above words, as they stand recorded in the parable set forth by the blessed Savior, while in his humiliation. The words are of great importance. There is no one of us that has come to the years of accountability that can say the Lord has not been willing to hire us; for most assuredly if we are not at work in our Master's vineyard it is no ones fault but our own; for the invitation has gone out from early in the morning (which is far the best time to accept) even down to the eleventh hour, which includes all. None need wait because too young, neither need any despair because too old. Only come; work faithfully in the vineyard, and whatsoever is right that shall ye receive. And what of us, my dear sisters and brethren? We who have been made willing to accept of the gracious invitation; are we indeed at work in the vineyard? Or are we still standing idle?—This should not be the case, when there is so much to do. Methinks there is work for all, and if we have heretofore been idle it is high time to awake out of sleep, and bestir ourselves, for now saith the beloved Apostle "is our salvation nearer than when we believed." We that feel so weak and imperfect, let us try if we cannot be more diligent and more engaged about our Master's business; if but to give a cup of water we shall in no wise lose our reward.

And you, my dear sisters, whose husbands stand as embassadors for Christ, and are often called away from home to labor in the vineyard, when they talk of going a journey to labor for the good of souls don't say: "you had better stay at home." You know who has hired us.—When evening comes we shall receive our reward. The above thoughts have come to our mind and we have given them out of love, we trust. Yours in love. B. A. STONER.

The Christian Life.

If we read the prophesies made by the Lord, and the history of the Apostle, how they had to bear troubles and trials; if we consider all these, then the Christian in our days has certainly some consolation. First he knows that these things will happen; and secondly, that they have happened already. But by all this, we are never prepared for them. The Savior says: "Behold I have told you before." We know this, and still we claim to be an exception; we want to have the crown, but we do not want the cross. But this seems to be impossible. If we want to get the crown, we must first bear the cross. The reason why we do want the crown without the cross, is simply this: The cross seems to be very hard to bear by times. Even the Lord Jesus himself sunk under its weight, at one time, and we see a good many sink under it, and never rise anymore. But should this be so? We answer no, by no means. If we find that it is getting heavy, then let us ask God, and he will send us help.

The reason why we sink so often is something like this. We do not look enough to God for help, but expect help from men, who cannot help themselves. Man cannot always help us, and will not if he could, always give us a helping hand. On the contrary when they see that we are going down, they sometimes try to give us a downward push, in order to get us as low as possible. Sometimes when the cross is getting too heavy for us to bear, in place of trying to make it lighter for us, they put on all the weight they can.

Brethren and sisters, this may be simple language, but we have experienced it, therefore we can write from experience. We have passed some fiery trials, such as we do not wish to have again. We know of what value it is to have some encouraging words, and we know how we love those brethren and sisters who gave us all the comfort and consolation they could in our hour of sorrow, and troubles.

And why is it, that whenever we hear a slanderous report put into circulation by some enemy of our brethren or sisters, when we know it has no foundation, that we help to circulate it?—Why not ask for proof first. Every one of us has his enemies; even Christ and the Apostles had theirs, and do we think that we serve God by joining hands with the enemy. Stop brethren, consider what we are doing.

It is true, such things will not, and cannot hurt us. The Savior has promised to be with us in our trials, and if we are of his, all the power of satan cannot keep us away from God, for the Lord will help us to overcome all.

But considering everything we must admit, that often we are the cause of our own trouble. If we would stay nearer to God and Christ, we would not be exposed to such great danger.—But these fiery trials and troubles, will bring us again nearer to Christ.

Now may God help us to do our duty one to another; and then in common to our God, and when this life is passed, we then can inherit that life, where all those things will be known no more, is the earnest prayer of your fellow traveler. M. HADY.

Growing in Grace.

Grow in grace, and the knowledge of the truth"—PAUL.

That there is a growth in grace, I presume none will deny, unless it be those who advocate the doctrine of the new birth with such perfection that there is no possibility for any improvement. There seems to be an idea in the world, that when a person is born anew, that they are then a fullgrown Christian, and indeed, to see them at such time one would be most likely to conclude that such was really the fact. I believe that all who have heard me upon this subject, will, in justice to me, admit that I am as zealous an advocate of the new birth as any man in Tennessee; but notwithstanding my zeal in advocating the doctrine of the new birth, yet I must confess, that I have not much confidence in that kind of birth which is larger when first born than ever afterwards. They resemble young wasps so much in that, that they decrease in size every day of their lives. In the science of Physiology, when treating upon the subject of medical jurisprudence, we have what is called "false conceptions," and "monstrocities." These occurrences, are caused by the perversion of some of the organic laws of our physical being. They are so nearly like the natural process of generation, that there are no means of detecting the difference between them, until the time of gestation is ended, and they are developed to the world, and even then we are oftentimes liable to be deceived in them. Those monstrocities, or unnatural births, always present a much better, and more natural appearance at first, than they do ever afterwards.

Dwarfs are a shade of perfection above monstrocities, in that, that they often attain to some size and to some degree of perfection, but yet, they are always very imperfectly developed.—Premature births are also subject to many vicissitudes, and oftentimes to immediate death. These are all the result of the violation of some of the physical laws of our being, and therefore a just punishment for the same.

But on the contrary, a birth which is in strict harmony with all the laws of nature, both physical and mental, are invariably sound, healthy, and well developed. They are therefore in a proper condition of growth, naturally speaking. So also with regard to the spiritual birth, when they are properly matured, and developed, and born, "not of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God." This being the case, there will necessarially be a strong, healthy constitution, and the result will be a growth in grace and knowledge of the truth. Therefore they will add to their faith virtue, knowledge, patience, temperance, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity. These things being in them and abounding, they are neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

However ready all may be to admit the truthfulness of the idea of the possibility, and also the necessity of a growth in grace—yet we are made to conclude—from the conduct and expressions of many, that they are neither slow to admit the latter proposition; viz, a growth in the "knowledge of the truth."

The inquiry naturally arises in the mind at this point, to determine "what is truth?" This is a question which was asked by Pilate when our Lord was arraigned before him, on the memorable night of the betrayal. In order to arrive at a true definition of the above interogatory we will appeal to the author of language himself.—In his intercessory prayer to his Father in behalf of his Disciples he said: "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Therefore we have truth defined to be "the word of God." We are therefore requested by the Apostle Paul to grow in the knowledge of the word of God. If there is no possibility of an advancement in the knowledge of the understanding of God's word why are we required by the Apostle to grow therein? And to earnestly "desire the sincere milk of the word, and to add to our faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge? That there is such a thing as a growth, or improvement, in our knowledge of the important truths contained in the Scriptures of eternal truth, I most candidly believe. That there is nothing human, or mortal, that is perfect, is a fact which is admitted by all. The Psalmist David says: that, "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." St. James says: that, "whosoever looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, shall be blessed in his deeds." To the infallibility, and perfection of God's word we all fully concede; but to the fallibility and imperfection of our judgments in understanding its teachings we seem not so ready to admit. Let us then, one and all, "search the Scriptures" and endeavor the better to understand them, that we may "grow in grace, and the knowledge of the truth." JESSE CROSSWHITE.

Religion the Source of true Happiness.

That we have a destiny to fill is conceded by all to be a fact; all have something to do. The noble and ignoble, the poor and destitute, the rich and nobility of the gay societies, all are destined to fill some station in life, which will qualify themselves for happiness in this world and in that which is to come, or sink into eternal despair. We may have various means by which we can be happy in this world. Some while moving around in the gay circles of society, esteem themselves happy, others who possess gay clothing, houses or lands, and have all that wealth can afford, may feel happy. Others may possess a beautiful country, with fields decorated with flowers of the sweetest perfume. They may be placed in beautiful gardens with their pebbled walks around the beds of verdant shrubbery in which the birds of the air may warble their sweetest anthems of praise to their Maker. Man may live in this Edenic garden, drink the sweets of the flowers, emblematical of innocence, purity and love, yet with all those facilities of enjoyment he does not feel truly happy; and why? because he has centered his affections upon perishable objects. He has not centered his affections on heaven and divine things, upon that God who gave him life. We cannot be really happy in this world unless we have a "Saviors love shed abroad in our hearts." That holy religion which pours its genial rays of heavenly light into our hearts, which animates us with new zeal, and gives to us glorious anticipations of happiness in a future world, must reign supreme or our happiness is only measureable.—Man, it is true, may live a moral life; he may live peaceably with all around; he may contribute to the poor and do many charitable acts; his heart swells with gratitude to God for the disposition to give. He feels contented, happy. He pursues this course, goes on with the tide of life. By and by he descends the declivity of life, has lived his three score years and ten, his hoary head is fast blooming for the grave, his life is fast waning away, he looks forward into eternity with gloomy prospects. He now gets his neglected Bible down and reads; he finds the "one thing needful" is neglected. Here his happiness ends, and why? because he has not obeyed the Lord in all his precepts. His past life he cannot recall. He now must resolve what to do, and if he has but the "faith of a mustard seed" he will apply for mercy, which will be granted, even if applied for at the eleventh hour. If he does not sue for pardon, he sinks to misery and woe.

But on the other hand the Christian, who has embraced that holy religion, has followed the Lord, "through evil as well as good report," has obeyed his holy commandments, he is happy, truly happy in this world, and a bright prospect of eternal felicity beyond this veil of tears. You approach his dying bed, he is calm and happy; has "fought a good fight and kept the faith."—He exclaims:

"Jesus can make a dying bed Soft as downy pillows are."

[illegible] eternal happiness. Seeing the great contrast let us live [illegible] with new energy, that we may so "number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom," that when the [illegible] that welcome applaud "Well done thou good and faithful servant [illegible] thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A Fragment.

Your letter came duly to hand, and coming from the heart, went to the heart. I was about as glad for your message of love and sympathy as Jonah was for his gourd, only that my joy lasted longer than his. The worm that found its way to the marrow of the prophet's miraculous booth, and into all creature good, does not so easily gnaw the vitality out of the heart of love. The gourd came up in a night and withered in a night, but love is a plant that has its root in the heart of the Eternal, and is ever moistened and freshened from the River of Life. God brought up the gourd over Jonah's unsheltered head, and he also prepared the worm that destroyed it. But love is not only of God as a product, but of his essence, which he is interested to cherish in infinite intelligence as in himself. "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." He will never destroy his own work and nature in the soul. When love begins to decay, and its green leaves and fragrant blossoms and luscious fruit begins to droop and die, we must not ascribe the sad decline to God. He that sent the worm into the gourd to teach Jonah compassion and humility, cannot invade his own province with hostile designs. "Every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." Apart from the Divine purpose in the case of Jonah, various features in that strange event are of solemn significance to us all. In creating good or evil, evolving one out of the other, as may be most consonant with his character and plan, God may well say to every rising murmur in his creatures, "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?" The eternal forecast of the Divine mind must necessarily fore-ordain and pre-arrange all his acts, but this leaves all finite intelligence as free in their sphere as God is in his. The self-knowledge of God precludes the possibility of an after-thought in relation to ought that can ever be or transpire. In his eternal prevision he knew when and where to drop a gourd-seed in the precincts of Nineveh, and also knew how and when and under what circumstances his almost untractable prophet would take his seat "on the east side" of the doomed city. All these points were brought into conjunction by laws which had all their force in him, and among them was the law of free agency in finite mind; and the whale to swallow the refractory ambassador, and the worm to smite the gourd, were also at hand, prepared, directed and commissioned, in accordance with their respective natures, to accomplish supernatural ends. How little did that unsightly grub on the banks of the Tigris knew that in feasting on the rich pith of Jonah's gourd, it was putting a link into the chain of God's eternal purpose, and that it would be placed upon the records of inspiration for the instruction of all coming ages. Truly, the ways of God are past finding out, and the saint may well trust his wisdom and goodness to cause "all things to work together for his good."

A worm is a little insect, often loathsome and venomous, and held in general contempt, but it has been employed in the fulfilment of heaven's high purpose, and may blight the work of God. No doubt it carried on the work of destruction in silence, while the prophet dreamed not that so tiny a creature could cause him such loss. Perhaps the first intimation that Jonah had of its presence, and that an inch of vitalized dust was busy in taking down his cooling shelter, was, that he saw its broad green leaves wither and droop. Oh, what a solemn lesson! The causes of our spiritual declension do not generally work in open day and above ground. The worm that blights our graces lies concealed at the root of our inner life, and often makes sad havoc while we think all is well. We have a subtle foe, and he is sure to approach at a time when we least suspect him. He sows his tares while men sleep. He nibbles the fibres of our spiritual life when we are engrossed with the life that now is. If we would be watchful, not so much blinded and deadened by worldly interests, we would feel the first bite of the worm of sin at the roots of our Christ-given life. We fell asleep under the influence of secular opiates, and perhaps do not discover that the enemy has been scattering poison-seeds, until we see it spring up among the wheat. The worm lets the tares alone. When God commissions a worm to execute his will, it may cost us what we deem most needful and hold most dear, but which in the end is better blasted than cherished. But satan never fails to smite what is essential to our well-being. He never mistakes tares for wheat. His own sowing he is ever fructifying, while the Lord's planting he is blighting with the mildew of hell. He is ever irrigating with the bitter waters of the curse, the seeds and germs of sin, while his baleful breath is ever threatening the celestial plants of love, holiness, humility, forbearance and patience. Love preserved, all else that is of heavenly origin will grow around it like the petals of a flower. Where this is ever green and fresh, the other graces will also bloom with Divine beauty. Love that cannot sacrifice itself for others is not love; but when it is in fellowship with Christ's death, it cannot be destroyed, no, not even by the worm that never dies. C. H. Balsbaugh.

Bible Business Rules.

Solomon was rather a knowing man, and he knew enough to give good counsel to business men. To be sure they do not read it or heed it very much, and hence have to suffer in consequence. We give a few of his directions, not doubting but some of our readers would have saved hundreds of dollars by reading and heeding these proverbs of Solomon years ago, God's word commands Christians to "Owe no man anything," and hence it does not countenance their being involved in embarrassments which, disobedience and worldliness bring upon others. Here are some of the wise man's words to those who in his day were asked to strike hands or stand as sureties for their friends and for strangers:

"Be not thou one of them that strike hands, or of them that are sureties for debts. If thou hast nothing to pay, why should he take away thy bed from under thee?" Prov. 22: 26, 27. "He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it: and he that hateth suretyship is sure." Prov. 11: 15. "A man void of understanding striketh hands and becometh surety in the presence of his friend." Prov. 17: 18. "Take his garment that is surety for a stranger." Prov. 22: 16.

The Savior teaches us to "Lend, hoping for nothing," and this is the only way we can lend and be safe from disappointment. So if a man becomes surety for another, let him do it with the full understanding that he will be called upon to meet the demand, and then let him act accordingly.

Little Christian.

"Could you," inquired a peace-man of a military officer, "could you, after a battle in which you had stained your hands with the blood of your brethren, ask God to forgive you as you had forgiven your enemies?" "I am not a christian, said he, nor do I profess to forgive the wrongs done to me and me country; but I know I should be a hypocrite and a blasphemer, if I should ask God to forgive me as I had forgiven my enemies, after I had been killing them.—When I ask him to forgive me as I have my enemies, I will cease to kill them or to encourage others in doing so."

Self-Examination.

"What have I done that is worth the doing? What duty have I left undone? or into what new folly run?" Truly, what have I done that is worth the doing? "All that is worth doing is worth doing well," is a familiar adage; but has it all been well done? Ah, here is a question that will lead us all to self-examination. Would it not be well for us to look over the events of the past, and determine, if possible, what path we are pursuing. How many good deeds have we done, that will meet the approbation of our divine Master? Was there the least of the Pharisee's feeling in our hearts when we extended a helping hand to raise that downcast and half discouraged brother or sister, or friend? If so God help us to get freed from it. If not, he loveth the cheerful giver, and even the cup of cold water he has promised to reward if given in his name.

And now, it we can in all good conscience answer this satisfactorily, shall we not try to think what duty we have left undone, where and in what respect have we turned a deaf ear to the whispering of the spirit? Where have we neglected to help the sick, bind up the broken heart, and relieve the afflicted? And above all, have we ever been ashamed of our profession and shrank at the cross of Christ? Let us see to this, for if we are ashamed of him, he will be of us, and we shall lose eternal life.

Now comes the last. "And into what new folly run?" Where have we left the strait and narrow path, forgetful that we have been purged from our old sins, and run off into the beggarly elements of the world? Have we shown our folly by being too anxious to lay up for ourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust corrupts, and thieves break through and steal? Jesus was born in a stable, and he said at a certain time, he had not where to lay his head, for even hereunto were we called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps. And now if in the past we have been lead out of the way into any alleys or bylanes, that lead to the broad road, let us take the Bible that teaches us "that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ."

The Great Question.

John Newton, one evening at a party, mentioned that a young girl had died. "And how did she die?" asked a young lady. "You have forgotten," replied the good man, "to ask a far more important question." Why, sir, what can be more important than how one dies?" "Yes," said he, "it is far more important how one lives."

And so it is. If one lives well, God will take care that he dies well.

"Make Home Bright and Pleasant."

"More than buildings, showy mansions,
More than dress and fine array,
More than domes or lofty steeples,
More than station, power and sway;
Make your homes both neat and tasteful,
Bright and pleasant, always fair,
Where each heart shall rest contented,
Grateful for each beauty there.

More than lofty swelling titles,
More than fashion's luring glare,
More than mammon's gilded honors,
More than thoughts can well compare.
See that home is made attractive,
By surroundings pure and bright;
Trees arrayed with taste and order,
Flowers with all their sweet delight.

Seek to make your house more lovely,
Let it be a smiling spot;
Where, in sweet contentment resting,
Care and sorrow be forgot.
Where the flowers and trees are waving,
Birds will sing their sweetest song;
Where the purest thoughts will linger,
Confidence and love belong.

There each heart will rest contented,
Seldom wishing far to roam;
Or, if roaming, still will cherish,
Memories of that pleasant home.
Such a home makes man the better,
Pure and lasting its control;
Home with bright and pure surroundings,
Leaves its impress on the soul."

To the Beloved.

My dear brethren and sisters in the Lord; God is good, and knows all my thoughts. O, how careful should I be when I know I will have to appear before God. O, what a great sight it will be to see the righteous gathering home; but how will the sinner feel, when God will say, "depart ye cursed into everlasting fire." But he will say to the righteous "come ye blessed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, from the foundation of the world." O, who will be so happy? Will I be one of them? I know I want to be. O, who does not want to go where Jesus is? I think there is not one who would say, "I do not want to be with Jesus." But what a great mistake will those make who "stay and come too late." Oh, why so careless and unconcerned, when you know you have a heaven to obtain, what joy will be there, when all the saints get home.

What tongue can express the love of Jesus. There is a glorious day coming for those that are prepared "to enter into his rest."

Dear sisters, you could do much good if you would talk much about loving Jesus. There are many who read the Companion, that I have seen, but there are a great many I have not seen; but yet we can talk with each other through the Companion.

O, how often I think of those who are with God. We can read that they are all dressed in white, with palms in their hands, having the harps of God, singing glory to God and the Lamb. Dear sisters, let us be ready when God calls us away. Yes, who would not forsake all our sins that we may win Christ. How often I think how much time is spent in idle talk, and yet we must give an account for every idle word we speak. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation."

"Lovest Thou Me."

"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" John 21: 16.

Many things arise which throw a doubt upon our love; our Lord may well, therefore, put the question, "Lovest thou me?" We cannot love Jesus, except we know him. We do not know Jesus except we believe in him. We do not believe in Jesus, except we surrender ourselves and all we have to him. Just in proportion to our faith in Christ will be our love to Christ: 'Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious." Do you love to read of Christ, to hear of Christ, to think of Christ, to speak of Christ, to work for Christ, to commune with Christ, and do you desire, if the will of God be so, cheerfully to suffer for Christ? Does Jesus appear to you as the chiefest among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely? If Christ could only be obtained by purchase, what wouldst thou give for him? If he could only be acquired by labor, what wouldst thou do for him? If he could only be procured by suffering, what wouldst thou suffer for him? Do you love him? Then you desire to please him, you fear to offend him: then you are willing to deny yourself for him, and you will seek his interests before your own. Love is often better proved by what we do than by what we say, or even than by what we feel. After the first flash of excitement is over, love settles down into a habit, and instead of inflaming us with violent emotions, inspires us with gratitude and leads us to self-denying obedience. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." We must judge by what a man does rather than by what a man says, whether he loves Christ or not. Some doubt their love to him, when no one else can; and others feel sure they love him, when others stand in doubt of them.

"For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments; and his commandments are not grievous."—1 John 5: 3.

I Am Sincere.

"I am no hypocrite;" is the inconsiderate declaration of many an individual, implying at once a reflection upon professors of religion.

When the Lord's table is spread, and his followers come around it, they make a profession of faith in Christ. Those who come not around this table, often, when they are asked, "are you followers of Christ?" they plainly answer, "No, but we are no hypocrites." Such persons differ from true Christians, both in profession and reality; but they differ from hypocrites only in profession; with this single exception they are alike. Both are destitute of true religion. Sincerity is no evidence of a gracious state. It is possible for a man to be sincere in embracing error, and practicing iniquity; and the greater the sincerity, the worse the condition. If what is sincere were always right, sincere hatred to our neighbor would be right. We have reason to believe that a very numerous class of sincere sinners is found throughout Christendom; they profess to have no piety, and they are sincere—and even boast of their sincerity, while they throw out insinuations of hypocrisy against professors of religion. God commands them to repent, but they love sin too well to part with it and they are sincere. He commands them to believe on his son, but they are unwilling to be saved from sin, therefore they reject the Lamb of God—and are sincere. God requires them to be everything that a Christian ought to be, but they are no Christians; oh, no, far from it—and they are no hypocrites. What sincerity! the wonder is that they are not ashamed of it. Can hypocrisy itself be much more displeasing to God than such sincerity? But we remember that God is sincere. Man may lie; God cannot. And if they are sincere in being unholy, impenitent and unbelieving, God is sincere in saying, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." 'He that believeth not shall be damned' As such persons are sincere in their impenitence, we trust they will be sincere in repentance. But we hope they will boast no more, while they live in sin, that they are no hypocrites

Family Devotion.

The gathering together, morning and evening, of the family circle, to read the holy precepts and precious promises of the gospel, to sing the praises of the Most High in the sweet songs of Zion, to bow down in humble adoration of his majesty, and pour out, with one accord, their heart felt thanks for his many blessings, and seek the consolations of his infinite graces, presents a spectacle, which, in beauty and simplicity, surpasses all other forms of worship, and before which all the pomp and pageantry of the false religions of earth sink into insignificance. These daily seasons of devotion have a softening influence upon the hearts of the children, which renders them peculiarily susceptible to religious impressions. And the lessons of piety thus inculcated by the parents, will sink deep into their hearts, and like seed sown in good soil, will spring up in after years into fruits of righteousness, crowning their lives with heavenly graces and Christian virtues. Prayer is a necessary element in the Christian character, and that parent who does not, at stated times, bring his family under its hallowing influences, is recreant to the high trusts which God has committed to his care. By an observance of this truly christian duty he familiarizes his children with the precepts and requirements of the gospel; imbues them with a love of righteousness and virtue, and a veneration for himself on account of his Christian character, which will make them strong to resist temptation when they leave the parental roof to go forth into the world to battle for themselves. As Daniel in his captivity in a land of idolatry, when he was beset with the spears of his enemies, kneeled down in his chamber with his window open toward Jerusalem, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God. So will they when dangers surround, and temptations assail, with a vivid recollection of home and the family altar, and the gray-haired father that still follows them with his prayers, raise their hearts to God and be strengthened by his might, and consoled by his spirit.

A pious, devout family, however obscure their lot in this life, possess a certain dignity of mind and equanimity of temper, founded on their hope of a blissful immortality beyond the grave, that commands the esteem and admiration of those that are far superior to them in the honor and riches of this world, and yet have not the courage to turn from these vanities unto the living God. And why should they not have the respect even of the princes of earth? Although poor in temporal possessions, yet they are rich in faith and have great expectations. No less then a crown of glory in the Kingdom of the Redeemer, and a participation with Jesus Christ in an inheritance that is incorruptible, and fadeth not away.

Music.

Having noticed an article in No. 9. page 132. current volume, with the above title; and as I am a great lover of music I thought it may not be amiss, to give my reason for the same. I consider music, or singing, one of the fundamental principles in Christianity. If it were more practiced in our churches, we must believe it would be a great auxiliary in winning souls to flee from the wrath to come, and at the same time as brother Lehr says—"drive every evil spirit out of the congregation." Brethren, what do we go to meeting for? One says to praise God. "Praise—approbation expressed in words or song." (Webster). "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; Exodus 15 : 21: "Is any merry? let him sing psalms." James 5 : 12. Now then if this be correct it must be admitted by every intelligent man or woman, the more we strive to sing in harmony, and with correctness, the more pleasing it will be in the sight of him that sitteth upon the throne. In my opinion this is entirely too much slighted in many of our churches. Then let us be up and doing, and put our musical faculties to work, and make such selections for brother Holsinger's work, that he is now preparing, that his work may comprise all the best tunes suited to the different hymns in our hymn books. In order that this may be accomplished, we must do our part. I have not written this, with the intention of throwing more light upon the subject, but I was so well pleased with brother L's remarks, that I desire to endorse them.

Musical brethren and friends let us hear from you.

Thoughts Suggested From the Reading of Acts 17: 23.

Brother Henry; Whilst perusing and meditating upon some of the substance contained in 17th chapter of Acts, my mind was forcibly impressed with Paul's language as it reads in the 23d verse addressing the Athenians, thus: "For as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription: To the unknown God. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."

Upon looking over the broad expanse of God's earthly heritage, prospecting upon the various fields of operation by the many respective faiths and practices of the great body religious, the variety of dogmas, as set forth and propagated as the basis from which the respective theories are proclaimed, as the fundamental and saving efficacies pertaining toward the redemption of souls, we become almost lost in amazement and wonder, to know if God's great economy of saving grace was ever destined by the will of the Almighty to have such wide range, or whether from prophecy we can conclude that all things are transpiring in the course of human events as have been foretold. Paul declares, "Now the spirit speaketh expressly in this wise, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrine of devils." And in his instructions to Timothy, which are very explicit:—"Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." We are also commanded to "try the spirits, whether they be of God. My word is spirit, my word is truth."

With all due deference and charity for all the mighty intellects that come looming up before us, and the rapid strides that are being made in the religious world, the variety of doctrines that are sought to be indoctrinated into the children of men, as essential to salvation, I am almost lead to express myself in the language of one who has said: "Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator?" I exceedingly fear there are many who make the word of God a nullity, by "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men," and right here this bold and fearless assertion comes to my relief: "That if any man preach any other gospel than that I have preached, let him be accursed." When we examine the context we find perhaps more palliation for those Athenian brethren than may be allowed us in this our enlightened age of the world, for we have this softening expression, "the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men, every where, to repent." Then this very important question arises: is that same God whom Paul declared unto them at that early day, declared and made known unto the people in this age of the 19th century, in the same apostolic and saving sense, that Paul in all his holy inspired teachings was wont to declare him? We are taught that the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, and my convictions are in contemplating the variety of scisms gotten up by the great body religious, that God's great economy of grace has become very much adulterated by the assumed wisdom of man, made to subserve to the many peculiarities, conveniences, and pride of poor fallen and degenerate man.

For instance we will cite one item, a very important one in the plan of redemption, in an essential point of view. Take up and examine the declarations that have fallen from the pens of many distinguished commentators and church historians. Sift for a moment the expressions that have escaped from them in regard to the signification of the ordinance of baptism. The very many full and complete acknowledgements, I was almost going to say, they were forced to make relative to the validity of immersion. Paedobaptist as they are, force of circumstances, significant associations, time and place peculiar to the institution, could not help but force admissions on their part, though it may have been very reluctantly. These have carried their influence with them.

We will notice one expression and there are many more with which he abounds. The great reformer Luther says: "I could wish that such as are to be baptised should be completely immersed into water, according to the meaning of the word and the signification of the ordinance." Mark the above phraseology and the ridiculous, inconsistent, and contradictory expression following: "Not because I think it necessary—but it would be so beautiful to have a free and perfect sign of so perfect and full a thing, as also without doubt it was instituted by Christ."

One other, Doctor Wall, upon whom was conferred the degree of D. D., by the University of Oxford, for his history of infant baptism, thus writes: "This immersion, so plain and clear by an infinite number of passages, that one cannot but pity the weak endeavors of such pedo-baptists as would maintain the negative of it. So also we ought to disown and show a dislike of the profane scoffs which some people give the English Baptists, merely for the use of dipping. It is one thing to maintain that circumstances are not absolutely necessary to the essence of baptism, and another to go about and represent it as ridiculous or foolish, or as shameful and indecent." Now mark the following admission: "When it was in all probability the way in which our blessed Savior and Redeemer, and was for certain the most usual and ordinary way by which the ancient christians did receive their baptism. 'Tis a great want of prudence as well as honesty to refuse to grant to an adversary what is certainly true, and may be proved so; it creates a jealousy of all the rest that one says. Or I might add, when we attempt to deny that which every person ought to know to be true, people are inclined to doubt any other assumption we may make."

I merely quote from these Pedobaptist authors to exemplify before our readers the admissions they are forced to make relevant to this one divine institution which in all probability they would happily evade making, did not the sacred declarations of God Almighty's truth stare them in the face. I might quote from many others who have made just as lucid admissions, but it is not necessary, as I just desire making this point, that were we not conversant with the plain Bible instructions pertaining to this much mooted ordinance, the plain acknowledgements escaping from the Pedo-baptist community of divines, and commentators ought to be sufficient to convince any mind.

Suppose we let our minds revert and notice some of the destructive features employed by St Paul in his administrations, and the way he declared Christ and his doctrine unto the people who came under his immediate teaching, and which has been written for our instruction in righteousness We are told to obey whether in word or our epistle. Can we discover where he declared one thing and practiced another? I trow not in the law and testimony. After giving his Roman Brethren some preliminary instructions in regard to the prerogatives pertaining to the Christian graces, the advantages flowing from justification by faith, and after satisfying them fully upon these essential qualifications, then, in view of all that has been said, he makes this startling appeal: "What shall we say then? shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? No: God forbid. How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein? Do you not know that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death. Notice that little significant we, including himself among the number showing very clearly what was the character of his baptism. Is it not then reasonable that consistency would naturally require him to teach to those to whom he was sent to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation, to accept this ordinance in the very same sense that he received it. Or can we suppose that he, one of Christ's inspired mediums, who by his powerful conversion was made a happy instrument in the hands of Almighty God, for the conversion of others, would, like Luther and a host of others, preach one thing and practice another? I for one do not accept of such an unnatural construction. God is not the author of confusion nor conflictions. Our teaching must be made to harmonize with his holy word.

Paul still declaring that same God, says farther unto them, as if to fasten conviction upon them as to the true significance of this holy institution. "Therefore by being baptized into his death we are buried with him by baptism into death, like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. I will right here give you one more Pædo-baptist comment, from Adam Clark.

"But as they receive baptism as an emblem of death in voluntarily going under the water, so they receive it as an emblem of the resurrection into eternal life, in coming up out of the water." It has been my experience to know, that all Pedo-baptists, in endeavoring to break the bread of life to a dying world take very especial care to evade these important and significant declarations of St Paul, and do not include them as a part of that Gospel which he has said is the power of God unto salvation, to all who believe, but in consequence of their enlarged views they regard it as well as many other essential qualifications, as matters of indifference, professing great liberality of sentiment; perhaps like Beecher, in the superabundance of divine love in his heart, it seeks avenues of escape as he in the Richardson and McFarland dynasty becomes a party in encouraging adultery, when brought to account by his people, very coolly replies, that in his zealous and unbounded love for the welfare of his fellow man, it is liable sometimes to step over. It is passing strange that people are so loth to declare the whole counsel of God, and shirk the responsibility, in the face of all the plain injunctions we have received relative to these important demands.

We may well exclaim whither are we tending, when we take cognizance of the many portentious occuring events of the day. We are reminded very forcibly of this holy admonition "to redeem the time because the days are evil." Disintegration, turmoil, and strife are developing to a fearful extent in many of the so called evangelical bodies. Divisions have been created upon the adoption of new creeds and ceremonial institutions. Lutheranism Reformedism, and Episcopalianism have taken up their march toward the bosom of their first love and the goal of their affections, looking for shelter under the protecting aegis of the forms and ceremonies peculiar to the Romish Church. And whilst rapid strides are making in the direction of Romanism, there seems to be a general upheaving in the bosom of the so called mother church. The Pope has been made to rest uneasily in his pontifical robes. The dogma of infallibility is fast becoming nauseous upon the stomach of Catholicism, and looks as though a few more good and effective emetics might produce such an erruption as will cause it to throw off the infecting bile and thereby strip his majestic holiness of the sacred invested rite so dogmatically conferred "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." 2nd Thes. 2: 4.

Then my brethren, "let us give the more earnest heed unto the things we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip." For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation?" Let us profit by the misfortunes and excesses of others so that we keep close vigil upon our own frail bark, lest she too be driven upon the breakers and become a wreck to the fatal delusions that are ever and anon casting their delusive spray over her. Cling closely to the helm Jesus Christ, the rock of our salvation, and when adverse winds appear to check our onward career, let us call upon our captain to guide us by the true chart and compass, that when we are called from this life into the realities of a never ending eternity, we may sail into port with flying colors having this motto inscribed upon our banners, "Safe at home, safe at home;" having attained that glorious hope which was the anchor of the soul all through the changing vicissitudes of this life, we may cast our anchor and dwell forever in the harbor of safety, with Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Lo when the Christian pilgrim views
By faith his mansion in the skies,
The sight his fainting strength renews,
And wings his speed to reach the prize.

The hope of heaven his spirit cheers,
No more he grieves for sorrows past;
Nor any future conflict fears,
So he may safe arrive at last."

Our Assistant.

Our advertisement for a clerk has been responded to by a number of applicants, several of whom are competent for the situation, some more competent, others less. All, however, have our thanks for volunteering to come to our assistance. Of course all expect an answer. This we fear we cannot do in every instance, as we are already overrun with business. But in due time we will announce our selection, and as we can employ only one, the rest will need no farther answer.

And allow us yet to say to all who have already addressed us upon that subject, as well as to those who have thought of doing so, to be fully competent for the situation requires no small amount of preparation. In our absence he is expected to take charge of the office, editorially. He will have the copy to select and correct. In doing this he must exercise a considerable degree of judgment as a critic, moral and intellectual. He will have the letters to read—good, bad, and indifferent—to answer them, and to attend to their business; the books to keep &c. And last of all—and as much as all the rest—he will have the proof to read, which requires a good practical knowledge of the English language.

Added to the above qualifications, a considerable acquaintance with the Scriptures is invaluable. That these accomplishments may all be acquired in a few years is not to be expected. We can therefore not expect them from one quite young in years.

The position is one of much responsibility, much more responsible than that of the minister. We address a congregation of from five to ten thousand persons, weekly, composed of all classes, from the most credulous to the over scrupulous and doubting.

After considering these things seriously, we trust that all who may be disappointed, as some certainly must be, will allow themselves to be gratified with the consolation that while nothing has been lost much labor and responsibility will be avoided.

"Boil it Down."

There has been quite an awakening among our correspondents in the last six months, and our "Manuscript box" is completely crammed, and a number of sheets have "run over" into a side attachment. And when we turn to it in a hurry for copy, we often think of a remark of brother James A. Sell, when speaking upon this same subject. Tell them to "boil it down" said he How we do wish that some of it were boiled down. It would occupy so much less space. And then it would be entirely too weak to use in its crude state.

It is not for want of charity that any of our correspondents are excluded. Neither is it necessarily for want of space. If all would study brevity—boil down—we would have ample room for all to make use of their talents. Brethren and sisters, when you have written your essays boil them down, & skim them off, until they become strong enough to bear the public eye without undergoing another powerful rectifying process in the editorial caldron.

Rather than exclude a good contributor, one who advances good ideas, and will do us the honor of bestowing care and attention in preparing them for press we will issue a supplement or extra occasionally. But for careless and indifferent writers we would hardly be willing to make so much sacrifice.

Several of our correspondents are following the rules and instructions to young writers, as given in No. 10, and in the March No. of the Pious Youth. And if all were aware of the satisfaction it gives us, and how it pleases every one connected with the office, we believe many more would observe them. There is no good reason why all should not do so. We can afford to allow ample time to boil it down.

Somebody sends us the following; I desire through the columns of the Companion to ask the Brethren a few questions: When there is a choic eheld for a speaker, and he accepts of the ministry positively, what is his duty? Is it to stay at home and tend to his worldly affairs or to go and preach the gospel.?

The above has undoubtedly reference to somebody. Now who is it? The writer fails to give us his own name, as well as the delinquent minister's. But perhaps this will come to the notice of the good brother who has been remiss in his calling, and then his conscience may call him to make confession, and thus the matter may be set at rights.

The questions are of course not for us to answer, but if we had any decision to make we would say that a brother who accepts the ministry ought not to stay at home to attend to his worldly affairs. Let him go about his Master's business, and his brethren and sisters at home, who have sent him out will attend to his worldly affairs. They will provide for his family, and see that his temporal affairs are prosperous to an equal degree with their own.

The Postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, notifies us that Amanda J. Medie does not call for her paper. Can anybody tell why it is? Her name stands on our book, good for Vol. 6.

Re-enforced.

The Pious Youth

For April is now ready, and will reach subscribers soon after the reception of this paper. We bespeak for the April number a most hearty welcome by its young readers.

Information Wanted.

Some brother has reported that there is an amount of money at Baltimore, for the heirs of one Anna Krug. Anna Krug married Weldy; her daughter Anna married Abraham Myers; her daughter Sally married John Shiveley, and these Shiveley heirs have not received their share of the inheritance. Any of the Maryland brethren who can give reliable information will be rewarded for their trouble. Address this office.

The Brethren at Milledgeville, Ills., have changed the time of their Love-feast from last day of May and first of June, to 29th and 30th of May.

Change of Address.

Elder John Nicholson from Moultrie Station, to Shanesville, Tuscarawus county, Ohio.

The address of Elder Samuel Murray will hereafter be Wabash, Indiana.

Answers to Correspondents.

Jacob Scott. Yes the money came to hand and we sent you one Immersion, and one Moomaw on the 23rd of March.

Joseph G. Snyder. You are credited to volume 7. No. 10, so your money must have been received.

Jonathan Myers. Have sent you what back Nos. of volume 5 we could find. Hope they will reach you in safety.

James McQuoid. The price of the Debate on Immersion is only 75cts. What shall we do with the 30cts?

D. L. Bowman. We do not know where the Wondering Soul may be had. Will try to ascertain and give notice.

Notices.

Technologist. Especially devoted to Engineering, Manufacturing, and Building. Industrial Publication Society, 176 Broadway, New York. Monthly, $2.00 per annum.

It is one of the best publications of its class that we have examined.

How to get Rich, or a Key to Honest Wealth. New York Publishing Company, 21 Courtlandt St., New York.

Rather a readable book, of 144 pages, for 50 cts, post paid. Of course everybody will not get rich by reading this book, but we doubt not that it will suggest many useful hints, which if followed will lead in that direction.

The Handy Book of Husbandry. Guide for Farmers, young and old. By George E. Waring, Jr., of Ogden Farm.

We have been favored with advance sheets of the above work, from which we are led to believe that it will be a book eminently useful and interesting to the Farmer. It is to contain over 600 pages, and will be ready in a few weeks. Price $3.50 and upwards. Sold only by subscription, for which agents are wanted. Address E. B. Treat, Publishers, 654 Broadway, New York.

The Phrenological Jouinal for April is on our table. S. R. Wells, 389 Broadway, New York.

The Largest Newspaper Mail which goes to any one firm in this country, is received by G. P. Rowell & Co., the New York Advertising Agents. Their place of business is at No 40 Park Row.

Lord's Supper.

We have received a contribution covering 13 pages of foolscap, under the caption of "The Passover and the Lord's Supper," and signed John Holdeman, New Pittsburg, Ohio. We have not yet had time to examine it carefully, but from a "skimming" we think it very doubtful whether we shall consider it worthy of publication. We fear the object of the author is not to defend the institutions of the Savior, but to advocate his own prejudices. We may have something farther to say of it.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother H.; I consider the Pious Youth a most excellent paper. I wish you success. I will send you subscribers whenever I can procure them. I should like to see it in the hands of all our young folks, instead of that most dtestable yellow backed literature with which our country is flooded.

I would here take occasion to say that I am also a constant reader of the C. F. C., a good paper. I love it and could not, or would not, do without it. But there is one feature in it I do not like, and I presume a majority of your readers are getting tired of reading those long and dry reports, where all the little particulars are so minutely given. It is not, and cannot be interesting, or in any way instructive to the general reader; only to those perhaps who are intimately concerned. We do not care to know who took brother H. home for dinner, or who he lodged with, &c.; but if there should any thing of a special nature occur, give the facts in the case, or any additions to the church, that will be interesting, and something that will concern the whole Brotherhood. I would therefore suggest that brethren, when out on a mission of love, and make a report, if nothing special occurs, make it very short. Now what I have said I have said out of love for the Companion. S. W. Tombaugh.

Scenery Hill, Pa.

"H." is one of our initials, but we do not presume that our brother intended it for us alone, though we may have been guilty of such offense. But even if it should be us, we stand corrected, for we have no doubts but that such reports are very dry reading to persons who have no knowledge of the persons or places named. May we not expect a reform in this particular?

Dear Companion; As you are engaged in visiting a great many of our brethren and sisters, and their children, I will tell you good news of great joy, which has been among the brethren and sisters here; hoping you will be so kind as to communicate it to your many friends, so that our rejoicing in the common salvation may be mutual. You have often told our family of great joy in other churches, that were visited by the blessing of God's grace to the word preached, so that it became powerful in calling sinners to repentance. Yes, we have often shed tears of joy when hearing such good news, and the angels in heaven rejoice in looking down to see the work of redeeming grace in the hearts of the children of men. So there is a sympathetic joy in heaven and earth, and sinful men are made partakers of a joy that fills heaven, and swells the bosoms of the seraphic host around the throne of the eternal. Thus the elder son is glad to see the younger returning to the Father's house, though there was a time when he did demure, not understanding the mystery of his Father's will. Paul says, Eph. 3: "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, to the intent that now unto principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church, the manifold wisdom of God. For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." In Acts we read of great rejoicing among the saints, because many were added to the faith. The number is frequently given. The yearly meeting has advised not to give the number. The brethren were fearful it might lead to vain boasting; but you must not tell it in that kind of a spirit. The brethren are telling us of the number added, thinking it too good to keep, desiring to make others partakers of their joy. So we would like to communicate through you, dear Companion, what the Lord has done for us here.

The brethren here commenced holding meetings, without intending to hold a series of meetings. They had no help, only the brethren of three little churches, that were one a few years ago. It soon appeared the Lord was blessing the labor. An unusual interest was manifested, such as had not been since Brethren live here. Meeting after meeting was called for, and soon two girls were made willing to follow Jesus. We bless the Lord for these two young sisters whom God called to lead the van, in the great work which he intended to do, in calling sinners to repentance, to be the first fruits unto God among the many precious souls that have since been called. A day was set to baptize these two sisters. When the day came there were five. That afternoon more were made to feel the need of a Savior. Groans were heard, strong men that had long resisted the calls of mercy were made willing, young maidens were seen to weep, shedding tears of Godly sorrow for sin. Before night three more said, "we will go to Jesus." The next day was set to baptize them, and when the day came, there were ten. Up to this time twenty-eight have been baptized, and nine more have said "we are ready."

I will now say a few words to my dear brethren who are a little afraid of protracted efforts in preaching the Gospel, I wish you had been here. Every thing was done in the strictest order of the Brethren, as we receive it in the Miami Valley, where I was raised, under the care of such brethren as Christian Frantz, John Frantz, David Bowman, John Hart, John Brower, John Darst, Michael Etter, and others. The word was preached with more power than is sometimes the case, for where is the minister that would not feel strong when all eyes are fixed on him with the strictest attention, while many faces were wet with tears. Even now while I am writing, the unbidden tear starts to my eyes. God be praised for his work of grace among his children. DAVID FRANTZ.

Queries Answered.

To Brother J. H. THARP.

In No. 10, current vol. Companion, bro. Tharp asks: 1st. "Who was the author of the Brethren church? When, in what year?"

We answer, the Lord God who "was manifest in the flesh" in the character of the Lord Jesus Christ, was the author of the Brethren church. Reason 1st. The word "church," if I mistake not, was first used by Christ to Peter. Peter said to Christ, "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." Christ says, "upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." (Matt. 16.) After that the word church is frequently used in the Gospel.

Reason 2nd. Christ the "chief corner stone" says: "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Hence it is plain they that do the will of our heavenly Father—obey the doctrines of which Christ is the author—are all a body of believers, having the name of brethren and sisters constituting the "one body," or Church of Christ. Those that believed in Christ unto true obedience to his commands, called themselves "Brethren." They were called by different names by others, and owing to the innovations that crept in, the true church seemed to have been lost sight of; but those were always a few of the chosen ones, that would emerge from superstitious darkness and unfurl the glorious banner of true religion again to the world. Persecutions often scattered them to the mountains, disorganizing them so much as to make their enemies believe they had become extinct. But the Lord was with them, and blessed them unto a reorganization as believers in that faith once delivered to the saints.

Our opponents these days make use of these reorganizations of the Brethren banding together in a church body after the order of the apostolic church, as being the time of the origin of the church. How careful we should be to not give them occasion for such fallacious arguments to be used against us, by giving heed to useless histories or "endless geneologies which minister questions rather than godly edifying."

As to the time of the origin of the Brethren (in Christ) church, it was about the year 32 or 33, in the days of Christ's stay on earth, and endowed with full power on the day of Pentecost.

Query 2nd. "Why do the Brethren preachers always close prayer in public assemblies with the Lord's prayer?" We suppose because Christ says: when we pray we should so pray, and as we want to obey him in all things, in this we should also. He also says, "if two of you agree as touching anything that they shall ask it shall be done for them of my Father." So two pray that the assembly may know that at least "two agree," and Paul says "let all things be done decently and in order, and it is order to so close our prayer and if not contrary to any laws of the Lord it is not wrong to do so.

Query 3rd. "Why do Brethren dismiss the congregation by saying, you are respectfully dismissed, or why do they not ask the blessing of God as a parting blessing on the assembly?" I believe brethren do generally ask a "parting blessing on the assembly" in their prayers while humbled in a kneeling posture before God, and it is probable it will be more acceptable to him if asked while in that attitude. The custom of pronouncing a "benediction" I don't think had its origin in Christ. In dismissing something should be said, and every brother should dismiss his congregation in a respectful manner. It is not customary for brethren everywhere to use the phrase the brother quotes, and if used is used doubtless as a matter of courtesy. And Peter says "be courteous."

J. S. Flory.

On Acts 1: 25.

In current volume, No. 10, is a query asked on Acts 1: 25: "And they prayed and said, thou Lord which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these thou hast chosen, that he might take part of this ministry and Apostleship from which Judas by transgression fell that he might go to his own place."

The query is: who does the last pronoun he personate? Or who was to go to his own place I answer emphatically, Judas; and will endeavor to prove it. First, as a general rule where personal pronouns occur, they generally refer to the antecedent nearest to them. Secondly. If it had reference to the newly elected Apostle the language does not convey that idea, for the new Apostle was to go to the place of another person, and not to his own place. Thirdly. I think the Savior on a certain occasion says: "I have chosen me twelve and one of you is a devil." Consequently while Judas was with the Apostles he was out of his place, and for that purpose he fell from that position that he might go to his own place, the place prepared for all such characters. We hope this answer may satisfy the query. A. B. Miller.

Another Answer.

1st. There lived a man in ancient days, above eighteen hundred years ago; whose birth was predicted, years before it came to pass; and when it was fully accomplished, it puzzled the wise men to find him, until they directed their attention to the Scriptures. So many are wondering who is the author of the brethren Church, and if they could find some man to be, then they could find a similarity to themselves We have an author and nearly all men that are Bible readers know his name. and they say he is called a Nazarene, the carpenter's son; Christ Jesus, the Son of God and Jesus Christ.—He is the author and none other, for others are impostors

2nd. We close with the Lord's manner of prayer, because the author said: "When ye pray say: "Our Father who art in Heaven," &c.

3rd. We have never adopted the latter as a custom, and prefer to act in unison as much as possible.

Brother Holsinger; You say you are still a good way from the 1,000 new subscribers. And then you ask do you know why? I suppose it is because I had not sent any. But you shall not fail on my account. O, no. I shall not allow that. So here I send you two, one for delay. As we enjoy the visits of the Companion very much, we desire that our brethren and sisters should have the same privilege.

W. C. Fadely.

Editor Companion: Your paper came to-day, as I directed you to send it. The specimens you so kindly sent me I am distributing to the best advantage, and so far they elicit general satisfaction. I like the feature of introducing the "German Column;" and would like to see those French brethren favored with a column in the French language. The Apostles were gifted with other "tongues," enabling them to preach the Gospel among the nations; and it certainly would be no disadvantage to the brethren to acquaint themselves with a language so popular, and, perhaps, more extensively used on the continent of Europe than any other. Let us acquire living languages rather than dead ones.

Daniel Hays.

Greenland, W. Va.

Brother Henry: The brethren here in Bango branch were impressed with a duty of having a series of meetings. We invited brother Jessie Calvert and Daniel Shively; but they disappointed us by not coming. But Elder Witmore and Elder C. Wenger and John Panhard came to us, and we opened and continued the meeting a few days, and had 13 additions to the Church by baptism. Then Elder David Miller and Jacob Cripe came and we continued the meeting a few days longer, and had 13 more; that made 26 that were added to the Church. May the Lord bless us all, and awaken many others to a sense of their duty Yours in love. Joel Shively

Those who are prejudiced against anything new should know that Dr. Fahrney's Blood Cleanser or Panacea was used in practice by old Dr. P. Fahrney of Washington county, Md., as far back as 1789. It is now put up in bottles but the medicinal properties are the same. Unlike anything else in market it can be taken with benefit in all diseases from a bad cold to a violent fever From a ringworm to a bad case of scrofula or cancer. Infants can take it as well as the aged and feeble, and sells readily wherever it is known. Will be sent upon the most liberal terms to those who will introduce the same among their neighbors. THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we hope, for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Celebrated

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging, by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, and so on. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Billious Fever, and all derangements of the internal viscera. You have in this medicine a PANACEA for some of the most painful and dangerous of all diseases.

As a Female Regulator it has no equals in the world. Married ladies, who never have had children, seldom know the cause of their unhappy condition, which is very often depending upon a faulty state of the Uterine Organs, which can only be removed by the use of suitable remedies.

LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The state and quality of the bile must first be attended to, in order to preserve health. The bile in a vitiated state, or when not duly secreted, is oftener obstructed in the liver and gall bladder, and becomes a source of dyspepsia, constipation, and nervous complaints, jaundice, etc. The Panacea being strictly vegetable, and containing great anti-billious properties, and great alterative properties also, will act like a most magical medicine in this complaint. Thousands have found relief, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine, after exhausting their purses and patience in search of health.

Giddiness of the head, dullness of the mind, fœtid breath, coated tongue, loss of appetite, pains and weakness in the stomach, enlargement of the liver, yellowness of the skin, constant fever and thirst, with a total disrelish for business, pleasure, or any kind of employment, FAHRNEY'S PANACEA, if taken and persevered in for a few days, will remove this whole class of symptoms. The fluids of the body become pure, the mind clear, the stomach strengthened, the tongue clean, the appetite improved, and the whole system so benefited that disease, during bad weather, is less liable to afflict you.

"An Ounce of Prevention is worth more than a Pound of Cure." The PANACEA will not only cure old standing and malignant complaints, but is one of the best preventatives of such disorders, ever offered to the world.

You can avoid severe attacks of acute diseases, such as Cholera, Small Pox, Typhoid, Billious, Spotted and Intermittent Fevers, by keeping your blood purified. The different degrees of all such diseases depend altogether upon the condition of the blood, for if this vital fluid is deranged, you will take a disease much more readily than otherwise, and the suffering will be in proportion to the amount of foreign matter in the blood. This is so reasonable that we need not here make any illustrations.

This Medicine is highly recommended for all manner of chronic or old standing complaints, such as Scrofula, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, &c.

Work of the Righteous.—No. 3.

BY D. B. MENTZER.

It is testified that in keeping God's commandments there is great reward. Ps. 19: 11. The same witness also testifies that the servants of the Lord are warned by these commandments; and if the warning is strictly heeded, those servants will be the righteous. To be obedient to God's commands is to do right, and it is the keeping of these that makes men righteous.—Right or wrong characterizes all our deeds or acts. Every act on our part is weighed in a balance, and will, in so much, either justify or condemn us. The righteous do right, and "follow peace with all men." Doing right is the work of the righteous.

When we search the Holy Scriptures to find who were the righteous in the ages gone by, we find that they were such only who observed the commands which the Lord had given them. I refer to faithful Abraham as an example; for we learn by what is "written for our learning" that he believed and obeyed God, "and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." Gal. 3: 6; Heb. 11: 8. I refer also to Zacharias and Elizabeth. Of these it is written that they "walked in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless." The sacred writings abound with examples of this character. The references just made show at a glance what is required to make men and women righteous. Man is fallible: a right way and a wrong way lies open to receive him. If he holds on the right way, he will attain to righteousness, and in the evening of life it shall be well with him; for he shall have the Lord's rod and staff to comfort and support him as he walks through the valley of death's shadow, until he arrives at and enters the home of the righteous. This is the destiny of the righteous man; and what a glorious destiny it is! But "if the righteous are scarcely saved," where, my kind reader, will the unrighteous appear! The inference is easy; and, therefore, you may drawn the conclusion, for yourself, for "every man shall bear his own burden."

"The work of the righteous" is of such a nature and character that it will answer God's design in such as shall be found righteous. The righteous are precious in the sight of the Lord; indeed, so precious and valuable are they that he will, sometimes at least, stay his judgments for their sakes. Remember Sodom. If you have read the Scriptures of "the law and the prophets," you recollect that the Lord would have spared Sodom from the great destruction which befell it, if it could have complied with the conditions upon which the Lord proposed to spare it. Every one that peruses the pages of the Holy Bible as thoroughly and frequently as they should be perused, is so well acquainted with the circumstance that I need only say, that great city of Sodom would have been spared if only ten righteous persons could have been found in it. Here we observe that potency of the righteous character of persons. I do not mean self-righteousness. I do not mean a character of righteousness which has its origin in mere religious presumption, or in a "form of Godliness" which denies the power; or, if you please, the Gospel, for it is written that "the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation." So says Paul to the Roman believers. Neither do I mean such righteousness as has for its foundation "the commandments of men," or a perverted Gospel of Christ. But I mean that character of righteousness which has its essential origin in the keeping of God's commandments as they are revealed and written, without addition or subtraction.—He that professes to do so and so, and obeys not all God's commands, is not doing right, and hence, is not righteous. In so far as man disobeys God, he is rebellious; but "the work of the righteous shall be peace." Not peace in some respects, and rebellion in others, but a perfect, lasting peace, and peace in all things. The Lord does not require of us a half submission, or a partial obedience. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We may think all is right, and we may feel that we are on the right; but thinking and feeling does not make it truly so. How of-must do as the wise virgins, arise and trim our lamps. As it is not enough to have to fair lamp of profession, so it is not sufficient to have only the oil of grace in the lamp; or to have it burning in some degree. There is more requisite at this time. That our souls may be actually ready, the lamp must be trimmed, which imports a supplying if with more oil; we must seek to have our grace increased, to have new strength and new supplies of grace given as from God, to fit us for the last conflict with our spiritual enemies, and especially the last enemy, death. It imports a stirring up of the oil, and raising the wick some, thing higher; so there must be an exhortation of grace, which may be in a low, declining condition; we must endeavor to stir and raise it up to a lively exercise, and more elevated acts. Stir up the gift that is in us; make the oil burn clear and shine bright. Let us bring faith, love, repentance, and holy desires, to a lively exercise.

This trimming imports the cleansing of the lamp, by taking away the dead ashes that cloud the light, or prevent its burning so clearly as it otherwise would. So we must labor to take away the dead ashes of corruption that hinder the shining of grace; we must remove all unbelief, earthliness, deadness, self, and formality, and whatever else that suppress the exercise of faith, love, and heavenly mindedness; let all these dead ashes be snuffed away by repentance and mortification. As we ought to strive earnestly against all those heart-evils in time of health, now let us give them a dead stroke when death's harbinger gives us a summons. Let us be diligent in gathering up all our evidence for heaven and eternal life, that so we may not venture into the dark valley at an uncertainty. The comfort of dying will much depend on the clearness of our evidences; it is therefore our wisdom to examine them carefully, and see if we can say, "we know in whom we have believed;" we have consented with our souls to the method of salvation laid down in God's word and grace. We are desirous that the glory of it should be eternally ascribed to the free grace of God, and the creature be wholly abased in his sight. We have chosen God for our portion, and Christ for our Savior; and the happiness which we aim at is to enjoy God in Christ forever. And, in order thereto, we depend on the holy spirit to apply the redemption which Christ hath purchased to us, and to sanctify us perfectly. There is no sin but what we hate and desire to part with. We would rather have more holiness, than have health and all the pleasures in the world. We earnestly desire the flourishing of Christ's kingdom, and prefer "heaven to our chiefest joy." If this our evidence be clear, we may cheerfully take death by the cold hand, and welcome its grim messenger, and long to be gone that we may be with Christ. We may say, "though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death, we will fear no evil, for thou art with us." We may go off the stage with these words in our mouths, "into thy hands we commit our spirits, for thou hast redeemed us, O Lord God of truth." Let us earnestly labor to overcome the love of life and fears of death, so as to be contented to part with all things here at God's call. O, brethren and sisters, what is there in this earth to tempt us to hang back, when God calls us to depart? While we are here, we may lay our accounts with many losses, crosses, disappointments, griefs, and calamities of all sorts. Friends will fail us, enemies will hate us, lust will molest us, satan will tempt us, and the world will deceive us! Death is the way that the dearest of God's saints, and all the clouds of witnesses have gone before us; yea, the Lord our God our head hath trod this path, and hath taken the sting out of death. and hath paved a way through its dark valley that we may safely follow him. The captain of our salvation is gone before us, and will any of his soldiers shrink to follow him? Are we content to remain always at the same distance from God and to enjoy no more of his presence than we now do? Are we satisfied to live forever with no more knowledge of God, no more love for Christ, no more holiness or heavenly mindedness, than at present we have? Are we not desirous to go to the place where we will never complain of weariness or wanderings in duty any more? For there we shall be as fixed pillars in the temple of God, and shall go no more out; the eternal adoration and praise of God shall be our delight and element forever. Let us strive to conquer the fears of death and desires of life, which are often great clogs to our preparation for eternity. Let us often be meditating upon the heavenly glory which shortly all of us will see and enjoy. Let it be much in our contemplations of the glorious company above; behold Christ upon his throne, at the right hand of God, and Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, Moses, Aaron, David, Elijah, Peter, Paul, and all the rest of the faithful ones, with their crowns of righteousness, triumphing in their Redeemer's love. O think, brethren and sisters, how happy will that day be when we shall meet with our fathers and brethren, and we shall see Jesus on the throne, ready to pass sentence in our favor, "come ye blessed of my father." What frame will we be in when he sets the crown of glory on our heads? O, wonderful free love! we will cry, "O, Jesus, thou didst wear a crown of thorns, that we might wear a crown of glory." O, how happy we will be.

Suppose we had been a companion with John in the isle of Patmos, and had got such a view of the glorious majesty, the bright thrones, and heavenly hosts, and shining splendor which he saw; the saints in their white robes, with crowns on their heads and palms in their hands, and heard them singing the song of Moses and the lamb, and trumpeting forth their eternal hallelujahs; what a heavenly rapture would we have been in? Well, then, O dear believing brethren and sisters, we shall shortly have clearer and sweeter sights than all those which John saw while here on earth. Surely that heavenly glory is a subject worthy of our thought, and most suitable for us to meditate on in time of sickness, when in view of death. It would be very suitable at all times, in order to our actual readiness for death, to be frequently looking out for Christ's coming. As Abraham stood in his tent door, ready to go forth to meet the angels that were sent to him, so should we keep ourselves in a waiting posture at all times. We should look upon ourselves as pilgrims here, wandering in a wilderness, absent from home, and at a distance from our father's house. O, when shall the time of our pilgrimage, and the days of our banishment be finished, that we may get home in heaven to our friends above, where our Lord is gone and entered into his glory! Our brethren and sisters many have gone to their blessed rest, where they see God's face, and sing God's praise forever; and how can we be willing to stay behind, when they are gone? Must we be sinning here, when they are serving God above? Must we be groaning and sighing, when they are triumphing above in God's love. Let us cry, O Lord, how long? when shall we be delivered from this world of sin, and fly to our Savior, and be with our Lord and our God?

Christ in the Heart of the Earth.

Reply to brother F. M. Snyder.

He first refers to Matt. 12: 40: "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth;" and then asked the question: was Christ really in the heart of the earth? We believe that he really was, because it is his own positive declaration. We are aware that it is almost universally believed that this prophecy was fulfilled when he lay in the grave; which is the reason why some are ready to doubt the literal fulfillment of it; knowing that he was only buried on the surface of the earth, and not in the heart of it; for by the heart we understand the center: and also knowing that he only lay in the grave one day and two nights, or about thirty-six hours, only half the time mentioned in the text.

We will now endeavor to show that he (Christ) was actually, or personally, in the heart of the earth. We will first refer to first Peter 3: 18, 19. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison. Here we may come in contact with the views of some; but mark the language of the Apostle, he was put to death in the flesh, but quickened (or made alive) by the spirit; by which (spirit) also he (Christ) went and preached unto the spirits in prison. We do not believe that his spirit went to preach to spirits in prison while his body lay in the grave; not that his spirit preached to the antediluvians through Noah: for the personal pronoun "he" undoubtedly refers to Christ; hence if language has any meaning we are driven to the conclusion that the same body that was put to death, was quickened, or made alive, by the spirit, and by the same spirit it (Christ's body) went and preached unto the spirits in prison.

We will offer another passage which we think will suffice. Ephesians 4: 8, 9, 10. "Therefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things." Now we think this is conclusive evidence; for we know that the same body that was put to death, was resurrected and ascended into heaven, from the Mount of Olives. And the Apostle Paul says the same that ascended, first descended into the lower parts (or heart) of the earth.

The question may now arise when did he descend into the lower parts of the earth? We conclude, from the foregoing scripture, that it was some time between his resurrection and ascention, which was a space of forty days.

Study it carefully,
Think of it prayerfully,
Deep in thy heart, let its kind precepts dwell.
Slight not its history,
Ponder its mystery,
None can e'er love it too fondly or well.

Accept the glad tidings,
The warnings and chidings,
Found in this volume of heavenly lore.
With faith that's unfailing,
And love all prevailing,
Trust in its promises, of life evermore.

With fervent devotion,
And thankful emotion,
Hear the blest welcome, respond to its call.
Life's purest oblation,
The heart's adoration,
Give to the Savior, who died for us all.

May this message of love,
From the Triune above,
To all nations, and kindred be given,
'Till the ransomed shall raise,
Joyous anthems of praise,
Hallelujahs on earth and in Heaven.

Let Us Make the Best of It.

Life is but a fleeting dream,
Care destroys the jest of it;
Swift it glideth like a stream—
Mind you make the best of it.
Talk not of your weary woes,
Troubles, or the rest of it;
If we have but brief repose
Let us make the best of it.

If your friend has got a heart
There is something fine in him;
Cast away his darker part,
Cling to what 's divine in him.
Friendship is our best relief,
Make no heartless jest of it,
It will brighten every grief
If we make the best of it.

Happiness despises state—
'Tis no sage experiment,
Simply that the wise and great
May have joy and merriment.
Rank is not its spell refine,
Money 's not the test of it,
But a calm, contented mind
That will make the best of it.

Trusting in the powers above,
Which, sustaining all of us,
In one common bond of love
Riddeth great and small of us.
Whatsoever may befall—
Sorrow or the rest of it,
We shall overcome them all
If we make the best of it.

None too Old for Eternity.

When persons feel sickness arresting them, then they fear death is approaching. We begin to die as soon as we begin to live. The lamps of our lives are wasted almost as soon as they are lighted. The sand of our hour-glass is run out when we think it is but newly turned. Every man's passing bell hangs in his own steeple. Take him in his four elements, of earth, air, fire, and water. In the earth he is as fleeting dust; in the air he is as a disappearing vapor; in the water he is a breaking bubble; and in the fire he is as consuming smoke. Many think not of living any holier till they can live no longer, but one to-day is worth two to-morrows. We know not how soon the sails of our life may be rolled up, or how near we are to our eternal haven; eternity will find us at any age, and if we have not Jesus as our pilot within us, we will suffer an eternal shipwreck.

What will you do if you begin to die naturally before you begin to live spiritually? How can you bear to give up your spirit before you have received the Holy Spirit? If the second birth have no place in you, the second death will assuredly have power over you. O, how just is it that we should miss of heaven at last, who never seek for heaven till the last! How reasonable is it that God should deny those who deny him, and abuse his grace to sin!

Aged, how much of your life is gone, and yet how little of God is known! Your being ancient in days will be no plea for you before him who is the Ancient of days. The Lord hath made a promise to late repentance, but he hath not made a promise of late repentance. If the heart of man be not now thawed, it may be forever frozen.

You who are young in years, who are just in your prime, your days may deceive you; they pass away like a shadow by moonshine, which appears longest when the moon is lowest. You may not have half a day to live, when you think that you have not lived out half your years. And when the soul takes her flight from her loving mate, the body, they shall meet no more till the great day of retribution.

When you are decorating your body with the varieties of art, then reflect how the eternal word put on the rough suit of humanity. Think how mercy undressed herself to cover you with its garments!

When you take off your apparel, remember that you must put off this tabernacle. Be going to your bed as if you were going to your grave; and so close your eyes in this world as if you were immediately to open them in another.

Do not spend your youthful life in following youthful lusts? Do you not know that the blossom is as subject to be nipped as the flower to be withered? Veins full of blood may be emptied by an accident as soon as those that are leakish with old age. And as there are none too old for eternity, so there are none too young for mortality. And how will you live when you die, if you are dead when you live? Every step that your body takes is toward the earth; oh! that every step your soul takes may be towards heaven! You may be unhappy all your days for despising the happiness of these days.

The Marriage Feast.

"Go out quickly into the streets, and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind, and the servant said Lord, it is done, as thou hast commanded," "And yet there is room." Luke 14: 21. 22.

The above words, spoken by our Savior, to the unbelieving Jews, is part of a parable of a marriage feast, or supper, recorded in the 22nd chapter of Matthew, as well as in the 14th chapter of Luke, the substance of which is to be found in the 6th chapter of St John, and in the 25th of Isaiah; namely: "the great Gospel feast," Christ and his fulness, the new covenant, and its mercies.—Heaven, and its glories, are thus spoken of in these chapters, and fully described by a feast, a marriage supper, and we are the favored guests, invited. Yet how ready are we to make some excuse. Would you treat any other king, or friend so unkindly? And yet he still wishes you to come, and his servants are commanded to go out, and compel, press, them to come in, that my house may be filled.

Should we not feel to rejoice, my dear brethren and sisters, and to return thanks, to our ever good and merciful God, that the door of mercy is still open, the invitation still given to all who are willing to hear. For some of us have dear children, and near and dear ones, by the ties of nature, who are still out of the ark of safety. O that they might enter in now, while they may, before the door is shut. Although this invitation has been given over eighteen hundred years ago, and has been extended down from generation to generation, by his appointed servants, unto the present time. "And yet" to-day "there is room." In this parable the Savior most graciously, and earnestly invites all; yes all are bidden to this marriage supper. None need stay away. No reasonable excuse will be taken. The invitation has gone forth; come then without delay, for most encouraging indeed are the words "And yet there is room." But for whom is there room? the only answer is for sinners.—"Christ came to call sinners to repentance." Yes, there is room for the high and the low, the rich and the poor. Although riches are, as it were, golden bars, and silver bolts, to obstruct us on the narrow path that leads us to our eternal peace and happiness, yet with God, we are told, all things are possible. He therefore can pull down the strongholds of satan, and reduce the sinner to that true and humble obedience of faith and love.

Here, too, at this great feast, although given by a king, the poor can find room. Yes, "the poor have the Gospel preached to them," and the poor in spirit receive it. No previous state of preparation is needful to justify the first approach unto Christ. You need not wait till next year, to be better, "Him that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out." The invitation, and the promise is to-day, not to-morrow, next week, next month or next year. "To-day if you hear my voice, harden not your heart." Although like the church at Laodicea, you be poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked; yet come to Jesus, "come without money." To this marriage feast you are invited, you are bidden by the king. All that is required is to have on the wedding garment, for if found there without the wedding garment on, you will be bound hand and foot, "and be cast into outer darkness, there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 22: 13.

There is room also, for the "BACKSLIDER," and if this should meet the eye of any, who have turned their backs to the "City of Zion," and their faces and steps toward the city of destruction from whence they came. I pray God that you may return unto that narrow path. The end thereof is peace, love, joy, and eternal life. "Return says the Lord" ye, backsliding Israel, for I am married unto you. I will heal your backslidings. Is there no balm in in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered."

But my subject or text, seems to contain language of warning; for we must inquire before we close, before we lay the pen aside. "How long will there be room?" The answer to this most important question, seems to be, that there will not always be room. No; there is a time coming, when our seat at this feast, to which we are now invited, and if by some excuse we fail to accept, will be filled, every avenue to the kings court and to heaven will be closed. The door will be shut. When death comes there will be no room for the careless sinner, if he neglects this great salvation, and slights from day to day this kind invitation, as long as he lives; God has declared. "that he will not always strive with man." Except you repent" you will, you must inevitably perish; but the word, YET, is a word of encouragement, as well as of warning. Therefore, I would warn you, careless, and thoughtless sinner, young or old, of your eternal peace and happiness, and as there seems to be a little, a moment, as it were of time yet granted unto you, seize, oh seize the golden opportunity, embrace the present time, NOW, to-day, for yet there is room.

And to you my dear brethren and sisters; let us be encouraged that there still is room, And having entered the ark of safety, we hope ere long, after all the storms, trials, and temptations in this life are passed, to sit down with all the redeemed, in our Father's Kingdom, to this marriage supper of the Lamb. Did I say hope? yes, we have a hope, "which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which enters within the vail." Heb. 6: 19. Let us then not be weary in well-doing, but ever rally round the standard of the cross, for we are truly living in perilous times, "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." And does not "iniquity abound, and the love of many wax cold?" But let us who have built upon the sure rock, Christ Jesus, by being "buried with him in baptism unto death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." (Romans) let us stand fast, in that "faith which was once delivered to the saints," let come what will and then, when done with time, and time's things, we shall be ready, when the cry is given, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," to enter in, and sit down to the marriage supper, and shall then enjoy the fruits of our labor, and join in the song of all the redeemed. O may our good and ever merciful God ever keep us faithful unto the end, should be the daily prayer of us all.

Direction

For all of us who may be visited with sickness, to set about actual preparation for death and eternity."

Every one of us that believes we have our main work done, and are always in a gracious state, by reason of our union with Christ and our reconciliation with God, through the merits of Christ's blood, and the universal change that is wrought in us by regenerating and sanctifying grace; upon which account every one of us who is a child of God hath habitual preparation for meeting with death. Yet when sickness comes, there are many things out of order with us that makes death frightful, and undesirable. We must make preparation for death, and seek to have our souls made ready for the bridegroom's coming. And here we will show wherein our actual readiness consists, which should be our proper work and exercise in time of sickness, especially when sickness is lingering, and does not destroy the use of reason. But let us not put it off till sickness comes; no, the time of health is the main working season, and all of us should be beforehand, as far as possible, but, seeing even the best generally find much to do at the very last, seeing sickness is a means appointed of God for his people's good, and particularly for fitting us for a better world; let us labor earnestly to reap the benefit of sickness, seek God's blessings upon it, that thereby we may be helped to discover more of the evil of sin, and that we may see the more effectually the vanity and vexation of the world and get our hearts loosed from all the things of time, and brought to a willingness to be dissolved, that we may be with Christ.

In the time of sickness and death is the time of our greatest need: let us pray earnestly to God for Christ's sake, for such special assistance, influence of his holy spirit, as he knows needful, for us in our present low and weak condition, in order to carry on and complete our actual readiness for meeting God at death, and entering into the invisible world, and being fixed unalterably in our everlasting state.

In order to our actual readiness to go forth to meet the bridegroom, when coming to us by death, we do our thoughts and feelings deceive us! "Deny thyself" of friends, great men's opinions, and all else, if need be, for "the word's sake." Nothing short of an humble submission to God's will, a full denial of self, and faithful obedience to the laws of righteousness, will make our work a work of righteousness, and secure to us the benefits of this Divine beatitude: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city."

Truth.

This very important word may be considered in two different points of view; the first we will call logical truth, which consists in the conformity of a proposition or assertion with the actual state of things. The second is moral truth which consists in the agreement of our words and actions with our thoughts. Logical truth belongs to the thing or the fact asserted; moral truth, or what is termed veracity, has a reference to the person who utters it. In both these respects truth is of immense importance to all intelligent men and women, the importance of which I shall try to show.

In the first place it is the bond of society, and the foundation of all that confidence and intercourse which exists among us as rational creatures. By far the greater part of all the knowledge we possess has been derived from the testimony of others. It is from the communication with others and from a reliance on their veracity that we who were never beyond the limits of these United States know that such a place as Europe exists; or those of us who were never beyond the limits of the state of Ohio, know that such a place as New York exists. On the same ground and veracity of others, we confide in all our domestic relations of life. On the implied veracity of others we retire from our labor at certain hours of the day and sit down to our table to refresh the body; and to go to places appointed for the worship of God. Upon the same ground the child depends on his parent for sustenance and protection, and the wife to her husband for support; and we all rely, every moment, in the faithfulness of God for the regular return of day and night, summer and winter, seed time and harvest, and all other things which we need for our moral existence.

Again; Truth is the foundation of our present comfort, and of our future prospects. On the veracity of those ancient worthies that have lived before us, whose declarations were confirmed to us by signs and miracles, we depend for the hope of the forgiveness of our sins and acceptance with God; and for the consolation which is calculated to strengthen the mind under our sore afflictions, and to cheer us in the prospects of a glorious future, our hopes of happiness beyond the grave. O, how cheering when we can reunite with our departed friends and associates, with angels and just men made perfect, and enjoy their unmixed felicity without interruption and without end. These things we have from the truth of God's word, and the veracity of those penman who placed them on record for our benefit. And any man who would endeavor to take advantage of the sacred records, by misrepresenting their meaning by sophistry or false reasoning, ought to be viewed as a deceiver, and as an enemy to the human race, who would try to deprive his fellow men of their most substantial enjoyments, and their most cheering prospects.

Hence we are told in the Book of Revelations: "that the city had no need of the sun, nor the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it and the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it, and there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abominations or maketh a lie, but; they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Thus it appears that truth is of the utmost importance to all rational creatures, as it forms the source of our knowledge, the foundation of all social intercourse; the ground of our present comfort and future prospects; the basis of all the views we can take of the divine character, and the enjoyment we expect in the eternal world. It is the bond of union among all the inhabitants of heaven; it is the chain which connects the whole moral universe, and it constitutes the immutable basis on which rests the throne of the eternal.

Let us now take a look at the other side of the picture, and see what the effect would be, suppose the law of truth were universally disregarded. In this case a scene of horror and confusion would ensue, of which it is difficult for the mind to form any distinct conception. It is evident we could never improve in knowledge beyond our personal observation, and it is seen at a glance how limited our knowledge would be if we could not know whether the earth was one thousand or ten thousand miles around it. We could not tell that there existed any rivers or lakes, any mountains or hills on its surface unless we had made the tour in person and viewed it with our own eyes; and of course we should remain in absolute ignorance of the existence and attributes of God and our moral relation to him, and of the realities of a future state? In the next place all confidence amongst us, as intelligent creatures would be completely destroyed. Disappointment would attend every purpose, and every scheme we wished to execute if it depended in the least upon the assistance of others. Confidence being destroyed there could be no friendship, no union of heart, no affection, no comfort in the hour of distress, no hopes of deliverance in the midst of danger. In such a case the mind would feel as though it were in a wilderness, even when surrounded by fellow creatures. Every one would feel as if he were placed in this world on his own footing, and in such a case would flee from the society of men as he would from wild beasts, and hide in forests and caverns of the earth, until death should put a period to our miserable existence. All social intercourse would cease. Families could not possibly exist, nor any affectionate intercourse between the sexes, for truth and the confidence which is founded upon it, or implied in all the intercourse of husband and wife, of brothers and sisters, of parents and children; and the human race would drop into the grave like the leaves of Autumn, without any successors, and soon be entirely extinct.

In short, if truth were completely banished from the earth it would present a picture of that dark and dismal region where all liars have to take up their abode, where deceivers and deceived together shall dwell, amidst the countless multitude of deluded souls, without one ray of hope of ever being delivered therefrom. Such are some of the dreadful effects which would follow if the law of truth were universally violated. In our world this law has heretofore only been partially violated, and see what dreadful mischief, even beyond conception, has its frequent violation created, ever since the time when the father of lies deceived our first parents. How many thousand liars have trodden in his footsteps, and what a host of falsehoods have followed in their train, and destroyed the harmony of the people, and robbed the world of harmony and repose.—Yet how little are we affected by the frequent violation of this law, and how seldom do we reflect that every falsehood we utter is an infringement of that law on which rests the throne of Almighty God, and the eternal happiness of all. For if one lie may be vindicated, on the same principle a thousand might be vindicated, until falsehood became universal among all. And the moral order of the intelligent creation be completely subverted.

Love and Obedience

"If ye love me, keep my commandments," was the language of our Lord to his disciples. "Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Love prompts to action, and is a moving power whereby faith is received, and seals this testimony, "that God is true." Love places confidence in a parent, the little son, or daughter, are ever willing to do that which pleases them. "If ye love me" was the great moving power that prompted the disciples to keep the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ. That "faith that works by love," moved them and made them willing to labor for the Lord, under the many disadvantages, in order that they might preach the "glad tidings of good things," and advance the good work to all the nations of the earth. They were not discouraged, although surrounded by persecuting foes and bitter enemies of the cross. They went forth amid all the storms of earth. Through fire and sword they remained as faithful vindicators of the eternal word of God. Their confidence in the Lord Jesus Christ was strengthened by that love which proved stronger than death, and more endurable than gold tried in the fire.

Oh, what a contrast there is between the first Christian and many who pretend to be Christians to-day. Wherever ease and comfort calls they are willing and ready to go, but where trials and afflictions, and disadvantage invite they seem loth to go. But not so with the old veterans of the cross; they were ready to go; give all, spend all, for the name of Christ. Let us return to the principles of Primitive Christianity, by showing our love to God in keeping his commandments, and in loving one another.

In the path of duty God promises his special protection: He will keep us safe, and bless us.

For the Companion.

A Familiar Letter to a Deeply Afflicted Believer.

Love not only draws its mantle over a multitude of infirmities, but over a multitude of sufferings and sorrows, extracting the hues of heaven out of the prism of our anguished tears. The more our thoughts and emotions are "the stirring of Divinity within," our words and actions the expressions of holy love, the more will we "grow in grace," and the great work of Christ be advanced. Our private correspondence should be comprised only of love-letters, our journals be promoters of love, and the aggregate life of the church be the exponent of the Divine Mind and Heart. When correction and discipline and criticism are needed, why not send our impulses through the aorta instead of the bileducts? It is impossible to love any aright unless we first love God with a supreme affection. "The pure in heart" alone can "see God," and these are commanded to love one another "with a pure heart fervently." This requires rigid self-scrutiny. Not all the fires that burn in the human bosom are holy. How often, alas, has the most abominable lust been cloaked with the semblance of love. A seemingly holy demeanor, and the reverent handling of heaven's holiest symbols, have too often been the whitewashing that hid from view the ghastliness and putridness of the sepulcher. It is hard so to crucify the carnal nature as to love as God loves; and yet this is the essence of Christianity, the badge of true discipleship. Our renewed state, and the relations it involves, are summed up in these words: "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." There is no lack of love in the world, such as it is, and some of it is expressive of a high degree of native excellence. But the highest type needs transformation, and in the church the rarest attainments in love admit of defecation. We must diligently watch our deceitful hearts lest the serpent beguile us. The shame of Baal Peor is not yet erased from the records of the church. Divine love is not only pure, but intelligent and just. It not only throttles unhallowed emotion, but circumvents and overmasters prejudice. The faintest breath on the window dims the view. The finest film perverts the vision. Thus love connects itself with humility. To these God giveth grace, and this alone serves as the condition to right being. Love counts not sacrifices to get near its object, and there alone is the fountain of vital manifestations clarified. We must be in close, dear, loving sympathy with Jesus, if we do not sometimes dislike and blame where God loves and pities. Such a love as God's, which makes the sun to rise on the good and the bad, sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust, is broad, and high, and deep and wonderful. Pity does not make it mawkish, neither does integrity to righteousness make it unjust. It holds an even balance. To get into its mighty current, is to be carried out of ourselves, and be God's anointed few. No wonder the love-bearers and love exhibitors of Love Infinite, are called "a peculiar people." The love of God, ever swaying us after the Divine Mind will invest us with such strangeness as to make the world stare. The incarnation of Deity in a body of sin, was a thirty-three years rebuke of the world's innate selfishness. We are not of the world, therefore the world hateth us. Our reputation with the world ought never once to suggest itself in deciding where our path of duty lies. What God requires of us is so to love him as to do all to his glory. As soon as we begin to calculate personal consequences, we are "like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind, and tossed." Love is the only way to "be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." As soon as we are governed by the consideration of other people's opinions, Christ hides his face, and then our hearts are fitly mirrored by the sea in a storm. "Looking unto Jesus"—this is the great secret of the continuous influx of Divine Love, of growth in all symmetry of character, of comfort in all our tribulations. And where the gaze is ever riveted on the All-lovely, there will be abiding, holy, ardent, ever-increasing love among the saints. We look unto him, and behold the perfection of beauty in his person, and the perfection of love in his heart; and then we turn to his true representatives and discover in them, however faintly, the same lovely lineaments. In the absence of the original, we dearly prize his likeness, even in connection with deepest poverty and personal unattractiveness. Oh, who that is a Christian indeed, can keep back his love from any of God's chosen, even if it be a Lazarus, full of sores, and a companion of the rich man's dogs. I would rather have Lazarus for my brother, with all his rags and ill-odor, than the richest, wisest, most fascinating person out of Christ that ever lived. And even in the Church, I will sooner salute a poor, self-loathing colored member, than one whose very garments are impregnated with tobacco odor, and whose lips are stained with the liquid extract. Personal pollution, in whatever form, if not inevitable, is a disgrace to the Church. Love bears all things and endureth all things, even niggardliness and defilement by the weed, but it also hopeth all things. While it groaneth, and is burdened, in view of laxity in many directions, it longeth incessantly for the increase of itself out of the fulness of Jesus. Were it not for love, the many disintegrating elements of human infirmity would long since have submerged the work of Christ in oblivion. The heaving, struggling spirit now at work, presage a monstrous birth, and can only be smothered in embryo by the tender yet effective manipulations of love. Let each esteem the other better than himself, and then we have a short and easy way to adjust difficulties. The flower of Eden ever puts on its richest hues and emits its sweetest fragrance, when it grows out of the ashes of consumed self. The loving of Jesus and the hating of our own life, denote a moral equation. Why should we be ashamed of one whom Jesus acknowledges as his own? If Lazarus was so esteemed by God as to be escorted to glory by a convoy of angels, he is good enough for our society. Not only does he yet speak, being dead, but he has still his counterparts in the church. Love never fondles Dives, nor does it give a cold, shy look to the poor. It holds all things common, so that "the brother of low degree can rejoice in that he is exalted," and "the rich, in that he is made low." Love cures the evil of partiality, makes one common Brotherhood, cements and entwines till we are, in the most exalted, blissful sense, one in Christ Jesus. What is the great want which we most incessantly feel, and the aspiration that ever stirs the soul's profoundest depths? Is it not that we may be so "rooted and grounded in love" as to "be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that we may be filled with all the fulness of God?" If we had more of this, how near and dear would we be to God, with what beauty would he clothe us, what power would he give us, and what shining examples of devotion and self-sacrifice we would be. Although we are not what we desire to be, thanks to Redeeming Love that we are not utterly destitute of this crowning grace. "We love him, because he first loved us." "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." Kinship is the natural basis of our love, but so dear are you to me in Christ, and so strong the bond of sympathy that grows out of sanctified suffering, that when my heart is most aglow with affection, I forget that we are related by a lower tie than that which has its root in the love of God.

It seems that God is still putting fresh fuel into the furnace in which you have so long been a prisoner. If our love often seems strange to the world, God's love seems not less strange to us. That his tenderness should be measured by stripes, and his most paternal intentions by chastenings, requires a faith essentially Divine. His heart-prompted hand and his love-prompted heart, are recognized only by a supernatural vision. That the soul should chant its psalm when his rod lights heavily on the flesh, may well be a wonder to angels. That the saint should rejoice in the consciousness of being the object of God's love when he is discharging his quiver into our keenest sensibilities, is only less astounding than the "great mystery of Godliness" in which it originates. Days of agony, wearisome nights, and sorrowful months are appointed unto thee, but your bed is made and your pillow smoothed by the hand that endured the world's woe in its nail-pierced wound. He was made perfect through suffering, and offers you the same condition that he may share with you his glory. No thorn can goad, no satanic messenger buffet, and no experience afflict you, which has not formed an element, if not an item, in his earthly history and in which he is not present with the most tender, loving sympathy. There is nothing capricious in his dealings. He leads you into darkness, because he sees through it, and has gracious ends in every threatening cloud that mantles your sky, and in every drop of wormwood that mingles in your cup. And when your drink seems all bitter and acrid and flaying to the quivering sense, it is that you may be brought into closer "fellowship with his sufferings." If we would never be emptied from vessel to vessel, but suffered to settle on our lees, our scent would remain in us, and our surface-sanctity would ever be soured by the sediment of dominating selfishness. Our vessels must be turned completely upside down, and our bottles broken. Jer. 48: 11, 12. God knows our frame, our sorrows, and our way; and because we are blind, he presents himself as our guide, because we are impotent, he offers his Almighty arm, because we are sinful he engages to be our Righteousness, and because we are foolish and obstinate and self-willed, he chastens "for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness." Who would not submit the life-time of Methuselah to the rod of correction, in order to spend the life-time of God in the beatitudes of perfect love? Weary not, my dear fellow-suffers, of the Divine tenderness and fidelity, although it be expressed in a tone as rough as that of Joseph to his brethren. God knows best how to chip and chisel us for our niche in his heavenly Temple. He will not pluck his fruit before it is ripe, and he will see to it that it gets the right proportion of sunshine and shade to bring it to maturity. We cannot ripen ourselves, but we can hold still under the discipline of God, so that he can tint and mellow us for the great love-banquet in the Upper Paradise. Let us offer the right eye for extraction, the right hand and foot for excision, promptly bearing and suffering what Divine Love appoints, being assured that "the loss of all things" here, will be compensated a million fold in the "inheritance of all things" in the world to come.

Reasonable and Unreasonable.—A Bishop met a female parishioner on the street whom he had not seen for several weeks. His cordial greeting was met by a frigid reserve on her part. He inquired the cause. She replied, "I have been sick for three weeks, and you did not visit me once." "Indeed!" replied the bishop, "I am sorry to hear that. Were you sick enough to have a physician?" "Certainly, he came every day." "How did he know you were sick?" "I sent for him, sir," was her reply. "True," answered the bishop; "and, if you had sent for me, I would have come too."

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In the Bachelor Run branch, Carroll Co., Indiana, March the 25th, without a minute's warning, our much beloved brother LEWIS HARTER; aged 55 years, 10 months, and 5 days, leaving a wife and nine children to mourn his loss. He was walking through the field of a neighbor with some of his boys with him and all at once fell on his knees, and then backward to the ground. He was immediately raised up by his boys, but never drew another breath that could be perceived. It was a severe shock to the family. Funeral services attended to by the Brethren.

Jacob B. Landis.

In the Elklick branch, Somerset Co., Pa., March 31st, of fever, sister SUSANNA, consort of brother Peter BROWN; aged 39 years, 11 months, and 13 days. Occasion improved by the writer. C. G. LINT.

In the Otter Creek branch, Macoupin Co., Ills., March 16th, infant daughter of friend Henry and Mary STUTSMAN; aged about 8 months. Disease Whooping Cough. Funeral occasion improved by John Crist and C. C. Gibson, from Isaiah 38: 1.

Also same branch, March 20th, sister CATHARINE BECKNER; aged 36 years, 1 month, and 14 days. Disease Consumption, with which she suffered for several years.—Occasion improved by Nicholas B. Brubaker and John Crist, from 1st Thes. 4: 14 which deceased had selected.

Also, same branch, March 21st, Infant daughter of friend Levi and Mary GANGER; aged 8 months, and 22 days. Disease Whooping Cough. Funeral sermon by John Crist, and Nicholas Brubaker. John 18: 11.

Same branch, March 27th, daughter of brother Henry and sister Amanda SNELL; aged 4 years, 6 months, and 14 days. Disease Whooping Cough. Occasion improved by Daniel Vanimen and John Crist from Hosea 13: 14. ISAAC H. CRIST.

In the Milledgeville congregation, Carroll Co., Illinois, on the 29th day of March, our well beloved sister MARGARET, wife of brother Samuel KECKLER; aged 34 years, 2 months, and 19 days. She leaves a sorrowing husband and 5 children to mourn their loss, which we hope will be her gain. Four of her children have preceeded her to the spirit world. Funeral services by Elder Samuel Holdeman, and the writer, on Revelation 14: 13.

Visitor please copy.

MARTIN MYERS.

In Philadelphia, March 29th, WILLIAM H. Son of brother Jacob and sister Hannah SPANOGLE; aged 17 years, 6 months, and 13 days. At times he suffered extremely, yet never murmured or complained, and passed off so quietly we all thought he was sleeping, and were not aware he was dying until after his spirit had taken its flight.

Our little Sabbath School on Crown St. has lost one of her brightest jewels. "None knew him but to love him." Father, mother, brothers, and sisters, mourn their loss deeply, but not as those who have no hope. Services by brother Fox, and Umstaed. Funeral proceeded to Brethren's burying ground at Germantown.

Visitor please copy.

J. S. THOMAS.

In Johnstown, Juniata county, Pa., on the 18th, of February 1870. TILLIE daughter of brother William and Mrs. EDMISTON; aged nearly 17 years.

Our young friend had been afflicted for several months; yet little did the now bereaved family think that the icy hand of death was approaching to grasp one from our midst whom they so much loved. I can hardly believe her death to be reality, but it is only too real. We sympathize with the bereaved family, for they are bereft of one that was near and dear to them, and also dear to me. She was respected by all.

Also in the same place, March 13th, SUSAN, wife of Solomon SHIRK, and daughter of Gideon and Elizabeth Halteman; aged 23 years. Disease Inflammatory Rheumatism.

This young woman was sick not quite one week when she was called from earth away. We can scarcely realize that she now cold in death is sleeping. But a few months ago we witnessed her at the matrimonial altar becoming a bride in the bloom of health and womanhood, and prospects of a long and happy life. But Alas! he on whom she trusted for future happiness and protection was soon robbed of one that was near and dear to him. On the day she had intended to leave the parental roof for the duties of married life she was confined to her bed, and instead of adorning the house of her husband she occupies that narrow tenement of clay to which we are all hastening. We join the family and friends in mourning her untimely end.

Funeral services by brethren Christian Myers, and Martin Bowers (River Brethren) from Psalmist 90: 12. MOLLIE HOSTETTLER.

In the Bush Creek congregation, St Clair Co., Mo., March 11th, sister, ESTHER ULREY, wife of Aaron Ulrey; aged 52 years, 3 months, and 3 days. She left an affectionate husband and three children to mourn her loss, which was seriously felt. Funeral service by the brethren. Text: 2nd, Corinthians 5: 22. ELI M. COTTRELL.

PLATTSBURG, Mo. }
March 27th 1870. }

Dear Brother Henry; On the 18th I left the above named place for the Hamilton congregation being solicited when I was on my way from the east to assist the brethren there in a council meeting. We met in council on the morning of the 19th, in company with Elder Peter Overholser, and Christian Root, from the Log Creek branch. Had many considerations and meditations with the church there, and the result of our labors was Daniel B. Sell chosen to the responsible station of deacon, and solemnly installed into office. There were several other meetings held at the same place with interest, and we trust with profit. Left that arm of the church in the evening of the 24th for home. After my arrival home, I received two letters which I shall acknowledge in this public manner. They contained money, sent to help us along with our house. A brother P. P. Brumbaugh of Coffee Run Pa., $1.00. The other signed her name "a sister, $2.00." This was the shortest letter in words we ever received, but it spoke volumes of comfort and consolation to us. She only wanted to know that she was depositing her money in the bank of heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. The cause, brethren, is surely a good one, and we hope many hundreds not yet heard from will follow our brother and sister in quick succession, and by this means help us to carry the Gospel through the Missouri Valley, till it echoes along the rocky mountains, and many yet in darkness may be brought to the light of the Gospel.

The people here seem to be interested in the good cause. I was at meeting to-day in our new house, tried to labor with my co-laborer, Daniel B. Gibson. After meeting there was a young man came up and took me by the hand and addressed me in the most sympathetic manner, that he wanted to unite himself with us, as he believed we were the true followers of the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. Brethren think of us in our infancy. Pray for us that we may be kept humble, and from the power of temptation that is to try us all.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Brother Holsinger; Brother G. Baker came to us March 5th, and attended 12 meetings; one baptized; good attention given to the word preached. From the 10th evening we had crowded houses, apparently anxious to hear the Gospel preached, which we believe they did hear hope that it may have the desired effect upon the hearts of those yet unconverted to God. We have repeated inquiries about brother Daniel Smith that preached for us in the Missouri Valley branch, Iowa. Our desire is that that same brother D. S. will come to our small branch of 14 members and preach the Gospel to all inquiring, and that the result may end in good. We have a large field of labor open here, mostly families from Indiana and Ohio, and generally good citizens. Also a good healthy country for brethren to get homes cheap and good. We expect to be at Annual meeting, trusting that we will see brethren there that will come home with us. And those traveling west are invited to call with us and preach as it is much needed.

May the Lord bless those ministering brethren and those that go over the bleak prairies, and mountains high to preach the Word to sinners, and tell us all what we should do to inherit eternal life. May the Lord bless all their efforts for good, and finally be saved with the redeemed in heaven.

L. S. SNYDER.

Mo Valley, Iowa.

Brother Henry; When I read the following passages of God's word I have to wonder if our ministers are doing their duty: "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 15. Here in Illinois we are very much in need of more preachers. We have a small congregation, the Cole-creek branch, of Fulton county, and we are very much scattered; only two speakers, and our bishop, Daniel Zook, is very old; so that it is not best for him to venture out too far. The field is too large for one to do it justice. When I look back to Pennsylvania and other places, where I have seen from four to six preachers at the table at one time, I have to wonder why don't they single out, and go where there are none. "You have not chosen me but I have chosen you and ordained you." John 15: 16.

Brethren, he has chosen you, therefore you ought to go, and fulfill your mission. There are so many teachers in these days, who teach the money gospel, and make men believe they are sent, and tell them this and that is not a commandment, and as they have never seen any believers who do keep the commandments of the Lord, and as these are learned men, they think they ought to know, and thus the people are misled.

Well, but, says one: They have the Scriptures to read." True they have, but in case they inquire for information of one of those men that can construe it to suit their taste? The eunuch inquired of Philip how can I unless some one guides me? Oh, for more such guides as Philip.

Brethren, would it not be more in accordance with the gospel, if you would single out more, and establish more churches. "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, teaching them to observe all things, and lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Matth. 28: 19, 20. Brethren you have the promises of God that he will be with you. O, what a glorious promise. You need not fear, if you do your duty. He will not let you suffer, no matter where you are, so that you are working for him.

P. R. OAKS.

Brother Holsinger; Another branch has sprung out from the true and living vine. The brethren at and in the vicinity of Dodgertown, Indiana, on the 26th day of March last assembled at the house of brother Levi Fox, and organized, assuming the name of "Spring Creek branch."—A choice was held, and brethren John Schriver, Sam'l Bowman Levi Fox and Jacob Smell were called to office of deacon. And as the inspired apostles who received their inspiration directly from Jesus, gave instruction to individual churches and the church in general, we hope that those who have received inspiration through God's holy word will also instruct, by writing friendly epistles to this church of "Spring Creek."

E. UMBAUGH.

Brother Holsinger; I am but a young man, and have but lately entered the service of God. Only a few years ago I was taken out of the whirlpool of politics into which I had been drawn, and I feel very thankful that I was arrested from its allurements.

Since then I have read the Bible and Testament with a prayerful and I trust a sincere heart. I have been particularly interested in Christ's Sermon on the Mount. I consider it the key to the whole Gospel.

One declaration stands very prominent in that lesson, namely "No man can serve two masters," "ye cannot serve God and mammon." Brethren, how many of us show forth in our daily lives our wisdom by taking heed to these words? Have our affections, our desires, our whole heart been given to him who has given us these life-giving words? Or are our minds and affections taken up contrary to his teachings? Perhaps in speculating how we may get filthy lucre. Or are we taking thought in advance of to-day, how we may get fine clothes to wear, so that we may appear to advantage along with the rest of the world? "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Or is it in taking thought how we may have many acres of this earth? Or how many government bonds I may be able to possess? And so we might go on with the things of mammon, but this will suffice. Allow me here to quote a few remarks by B. Pomeroy, in one of his sermons. He says, "There are continents of holy entertainment unexplored, while the entrance to the kingdom is crowded with halting, hesitating souls who want no knowledge of the things of the Spirit world—at least such as come through holy experience. As if unwilling to break friendship with a vain world they linger in the outer court, with the verdancy of Emanuel's grounds stretching off over the Lebanons, and Pisgahs of spiritual Canaan. They have stopped to balance the pleasures of a carnal world against the glories of Jesus Christ." And how lamentably true are these words when we look over the actions and practices of professed Christians in this age of the world. When Christ says forsake all for my sake he means it. When he says forsake father, mother, sister, brother, house and lands he certainly does not mean that we shall spend our time in seeking after them, and have our enjoyment and life in them.

A Call for the Needy.

Dear brethren and sisters; I received a letter from sister Mary A. Bartlett of Council Bluffs, Iowa, wherein she requested me to apply to the church for help. And not knowing any better way than to do it through the Companion, I will here say, that I am personally acquainted with their circumstances. They had lived neighbors to me, but moved west four years ago. There are seven in the family, the parents and five children.

Bartlett himself is not a member of the church at present, but has been. He has been sick for a long time, and is not able to labor, and all the family has been sick a great deal for the last year. They have lost their team and are very poor in this world's goods. In fact they have not any thing. All their dependence is on the mercies of the people, and two little girls, the eldest about fourteen years.

Now as the request is to me I do not wish to be burdensome to any one arm of the church. But will here suggest a plan that will not be burdensome to any one. Let each arm of the church give one dollar and as much more as they feel able. And let them direct it to my address and I will send it to the sister, and will receipt through the Companion. Or let them send direct to Mary A. Bartlett Council Bluffs, Iowa. Any one desiring more information can get it by writing to the sister.

Now brethren and sisters, those who have this worlds goods, respond freely. Remember that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

JOSEPH WEAVER.

BRIMFIELD,
NOBLE CO., IND.

Brother Holsinger; This is Sabbath day, and it seems rather lonely to us, from the fact that we are not permitted to attend meeting on account of the inclemency of the weather. I thought this morning that I could not remain at home. I desired to mingle my weak voice with the humble worshippers of the house of God. Really I could not bear the idea of it, yet our better judgment taught us that it was not prudent to go. This caused us to call to mind what a sad bereavement it would be if we were deprived of the glorious privilege of meeting together at the house of God, as no doubt many of our brethren and sisters are. I have thought to-day that those of us who are happily privileged to attend meeting every Sabbath do not fully appreciate the favor. We feel our inability to be thankful enough for such blessings, knowing how entirely unworthy we are. But we need not be idle at home; we can find employment, if we wish. We can take our Bible and there find many sweets, which will refresh us, and cause displeasures to vanish, and happiness to fill our breast. We can there find a rich balm that will heal every wound, and settle every pain. We are also favored with two periodicals, namely, the Companion and Visitor, wherein we find many good lessons, and useful instructions, many of which I hope are indelibly imprinted on our minds.

The conclusion of the above was accidently mislaid, and therefore we omit the author's name, as it would do her injustice.—EDITOR.

The Draft of 1000.

Brother John H. Roberts, Tindall, Mo., says: I take pleasure in being able to send you four names this time, a gain of one; and I think a few more of our friends will subscribe when they become better acquainted with the Companion and Youth.

Brother D. L. Miller, Polo, Ills., says: "I found to-day how easy it is (at certain times) to obtain subscribers. I spoke to a friend who I hardly expected would take it, and the answer I received warrants me in sending one of the above two names. I expect to send in two more soon and thus fill my part of the 900."

Brother Jonas F. Engler, Lindsay, Ohio remarks: "I have been watching for a chance to do something to assist in getting the 1000 subscribers, and it has come at last. We have but a few members in the Black Swamp congregation, and they are scattered over two counties. But last Saturday being my meeting day a few of the brethren came to us on Saturday and I succeeded in getting three names for the balance of the year, for which find enclosed three dollars."

Brother Daniel Wolf, Fairplay, Md., sends us twelve subscribers for the balance of the year, with twelve dollars cash. D. N. Wengert, Franklin Grove, Ills., sends six, and says he will continue to work. Joseph Zook sends several names and advances pay for some delinquent subscribers. Hope they will not allow him to suffer. D. H. Garber, Batavia, Iowa, sends three names and cash. C. Wise, of Mansfield, Ohio, sends three subscribers.

And so we might continue on naming, and had intended to do so, but find the list is too long. For the rest see our List of Monies, which tells the story in few words. All have our thanks. Only eight hundred and thirty-five more and our call will be filled We will have them if each friend will send one.

Questions and Answers.

"Is it according to the order of the Brethren to receive ministers, when they remove from one arm of the church to another, by all the members present giving the right hand and the salutation?

And is it required that an ordained elder be present when ministers are received?" J. H. Roberts.

ANSWER.

1. It is not the order with us to receive ministers who move from one branch to another by hand and kiss. The branch from which he moves gives him a certificate according to his position, and the congregation to which he moves receives him by consent, or refuses him entirely.

2. It is not necessary that a bishop be present when ministers or other members are received by letter (or upon certificate), but when a congregation has an ordained elder who prefers to do all such business himself, he might as well be gratified, as it is not a matter that need be done hastily, for a minister may live in the congregation and participate in the service without being formally received. Avoid every occasion of giving offense.

Contributions.

We acknowledge the receipt of two dollars from J. D. Rosenberger, and ten dollars from Abraham Rohrer, of the Pennsylvania House of Representives, to be sent to brother D. D Sell for the use of the Smith Fork branch, Mo.

The Brethren at Aughwick have changed the time of their Lovefeast from the 17th to the 24th of May. Those who are interested will please note this change.

Information Wanted.

Mary Ann Blough, of Newville, Cumberland county, Pa., wishes to hear from Isaac Schmucker, formerly of Ashland, Ohio, of the whereabouts of Susannah Way. Isaac Schmucker was formerly on our list at Lanark, Ills.

Brethren's Tune & Hymn Book

Sometime ago we gave notice that we proposed publishing a Tune Book, which should contain a tune adapted to each hymn in our new Hymn Book. It was our intention then to have the book printed during the early part of this summer: but by the advice of the great majority of those who are friendly to the proposition, we have decided to defer anything more than collections of tunes, and receiving suggestions, &c., until after next Annual Meeting. We understand that a request for such a publication has been passed by one of the District Meetings of the state of Indiana, and we desire that our Brotherhood may have but one book of the kind, and that that shall be as good as possible, whether we publish it or not. Brethren let us act in harmony, and keep discord out of our Tune Book.

In the mean time we invite all who are friendly to the movement to send in their favorite tunes, written either in round or patent notes. We expect to use the patent notes in the Tune Book. Other systems have been proposed, but a very large majority prefer the Patent Notes.

Music Books.—Those who have ordered the "Song Crowned King" are requested to have patience, as we are out of the books, but expect a supply shortly. Of the "Christian Harp" we have a good supply, and can send by the dozen or single copy. See price list

The postage on the Pious Youth is three cents a quarter, or twelve cents a year, payable in the same way. We pay the postage in advance on all other matter sent from this office, except papers sent to regular subscribers.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's nam and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. Al communications for publication should be writ-en upon one side of the sheet only.

Brother Henry; In No. 10 present volume, brother I. H. Tharp asks: "Who was the author of the Brethren Church?" We answer the brother that it was Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God who established it 1870 years ago in the land of Judea, commencing in Jerusalem. From there she spread forth, until persecution sent her into the wilderness "to her place, where she was nourished forty and two months." But she could not be confined there all the time, for the time of her deliverance came. Our forefathers in search of her, saw her coming up out of the wilderness, "leaning upon her beloved." They hailed her presence with joy, accepted her doctrine at once, obeyed her mandates and reorganized themselves as a branch into the old mother church, which took its rise at Jerusalem, Jesus Christ (not Peter nor the Pope of Rome) being the head thereof. And she will continue until she smites the great Image on the feet, and grinds all to powder, and the wind shall drive it away, and then the Church of the living God shall fill the whole earth, and the Kingdoms of this world will become the Kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever.

2nd. Why do the Brethren close prayers with the Lord's prayer? We answer, just because Jesus Christ the head of the Church has told us to do so. And that ought to satisfy any reasonable man or woman.

3rd. "Why do the Brethren dismiss by saying, you are respectfully dismissed. Why not ask the blessing of God upon the parting assembly?" Why our Annual Meeting has decided against asking a blessing upon the parting assembly, I cannot tell. I have often thought how appropriate it would be for all to rise to their feet in reverence to God and the place, and invoke a blessing from God upon the people, in the language of Paul: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the Communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all." Who could say this would be wrong? If it is I for one would like to be enlightened upon it.

Again, in No. 12, Amos S. Chamberlin asks: "What book of the Old Testament has not the name of God in it?" The name of God is not found in the Book of Esther. Neither is God's name found in the Song of Solomon. I want to ask a question here, and it is this, I have often wondered how some Brethren (and others too) can see such a vivid resemblance to Christ and his Church in the Song of Solomon. Did you ever notice that Christ and the Apostles never quote a word from it? Not a quotation in the whole Bible from it. Hence when I hear a brother, or anyone else, take a text from the Song of Solomon, I conclude he is sharper sighted than Jesus or the Twelve Apostles. If I am in error will some one enlighten me on this?

JACOB MACK.

Brother Holsinger; I want to give you a sketch of our series of meetings in the Big Creek congregation, Richland county, Illinois. According to previous arrangements elder George W. Studebaker from Muncie, Delaware county, Ind, visited us and commenced preaching at the Oak Grove school house, on Thursday evening, March the 17th, and continued (generally twice a day) until Sunday evening, the 27th. As we have no meeting house in this congregation the meetings were held in the Union and Oak Grove school houses and at the brethren's houses. Also 5 meetings with the brethren in the neighborhood of Samsville. Some of our meetings were not very well attended, which was rather discouraging to the ministering brethren; but our beloved brother labored faithfully in preaching the word and establishing the whole doctrine of the Gospel. There was general interest manifested; the brethren and sisters were very much encouraged, and sinners were made willing to confess Christ as their Lord and become obedient to the Gospel. Seven were added to the church by baptism and one reclaimed. Others were almost persuaded to become Christians. Some who professed Christ for years were made to doubt whether they had ever been baptized according to the commission. Brother Studebaker in one of his closing remarks on Trine Immersion made the following proposition: "If any man will compose language that will command Trine Immersion plainer than the commission teaches it in Matthew 28: 19, when all is expressed that is understood, he will be very thankful for the information and will acknowledge it through the Companion. And if he cannot compose language that will command single immersion plainer than the commission, he will never say that the commission teaches Trine Immersion, as plain as language can make it. Any one wishing to answer the above proposition can address him through the Companion, or at his address as above stated.

On Friday the 25th we were assisted by brother Joseph Cripe from Salem, Illinois. On Saturday had council and choice. Elected brother John B. Allensworth to the ministry, and Barnett Losh and Christopher Marshall to the visit. May God add his blessings to the labors of the church, and qualify these brethren for the work assigned them, and bless the brethren who have so faithfully labored among us with all God's people everywhere, is our prayer.

SAMUEL M. FORNEY.

Parkersburg, Ills

Dear Brother; You will find one dollar enclosed for the Companion. This will add one more towards your number. I have been trying for the last year to get subscribers, but this is the first. There are no Brethren in this county that I know. There never was any preaching in this neighborhood until this winter, brother J. P. Moomaw came and preached for us. So now we have meeting once a month, by him and brother David O. Brumbaugh, for which we feel to thank and praise our heavenly Father.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we hope, for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Celebrated

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging, by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, and so on. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Billious Fever, and all derangements of the internal viscera. You have in this medicine a PANACEA for some of the most painful and dangerous of all diseases.

As a Female Regulator it has no equals in the world. Married ladies, who never have had children, seldom know the cause of their unhappy condition, which is very often depending upon a faulty state of the Uterine Organs, which can only be removed by the use of suitable remedies.

LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The state and quality of the bile must first be attended to, in order to preserve health. The bile in a vitiated state, or when not duly secreted, is oftener obstructed in the liver and gall bladder, and becomes a source of dyspepsia, constipation, and nervous complaints, jaundice, etc. The Panacea being strictly vegetable, and containing great anti-billious properties, and great alterative properties also, will act like a most magical medicine in this complaint. Thousands have found relief, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine, after exhausting their purses and patience in search of health.

Giddiness of the head, dullness of the mind, fœtid breath, coated tongue, loss of appetite, pains and weakness in the stomach, enlargement of the liver, yellowness of the skin, constant fever and thirst, with a total disrelish for business, pleasure, or any kind of employment, FAHRNEY'S PANACEA, if taken and persevered in for a few days, will remove this whole class of symptoms. The fluids of the body become pure, the mind clear, the stomach strengthened, the tongue clean, the appetite improved, and the whole system so benefited that disease, during bad weather, is less liable to afflict you.

"An Ounce of Prevention is worth more than a Pound of Cure." The PANACEA will not only cure old standing and malignant complaints, but is one of the best preventatives of such disorders, ever offered to the world.

You can avoid severe attacks of acute diseases, such as Cholera, Small Pox, Typhoid, Billious, Spotted and Intermittent Fevers, by keeping your blood purified. The different degrees of all such diseases depend altogether upon the condition of the blood, for if this vital fluid is deranged, you will take a disease much more readily than otherwise, and the suffering will be in proportion to the amount of foreign matter in the blood. This is so reasonable that we need not here make any illustrations.

This Medicine is highly recommended for all manner of chronic or old standing complaints, such as Scrofula, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, &c.

Selected by DAVID D. SELL.

A Crown of Glory.

A crown of bright glory, by faith I now see,
A mansion in heaven preparing for me,
Oh, faithful I'll strive, till my Savior doth come
To bear me away up to yonder bright home.

Though thorny my pathway, and rugged and drear,
'Tis the path of my Savior, then why should I fear?
His promise is faithful, to those who will heed
The call of the Savior, who for us did bleed.

O come unto me he so sweetly doth say,
For I am the truth and the light, and the way;
I'll comfort thee, bless thee, and give thee sweet rest
All through the lone valley, O lean on my breast.

The voice of my Savior, falls sweet on mine ear,
It bids me rejoice and it gives me good cheer,
A little while longer, mid scorn and distress,
And then a glad welcome in Heaven to rest.

The glory, the glory, I feel it just now,
And clouds of bright glory encircle my brow,
A foretaste of Heaven, 'tis joy to my heart,
Oh never, dear Savior, from thee will I part.

"And He is the Head of the Body, of the Church."

Col. 1: 18.

Various are the figures used by the inspired writers, the Apostles, for the purpose of illustrating the church of God, the pillar and ground of the truth, and in every such figures Christ is spoken of as supreme. Are the members of the church represented as branches of a living vine, then he is the true vine. Is the church represented as a flock of sheep, then he is the good shepherd, who even gives his life for the sheep. Is the church spoken of as a kingdom, then he is the king who reigns over that kingdom. Is the church represented under the figure of a body, as in the text above, then he is the head of that body, for God has given him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, &c.

I fear we do not esteem the church as highly as we should, for we do frequently hear of members leaving the church, and many seem to take so little interest in the prosperity and welfare of the church. And why should we not estimate the church very highly, when it is declared to be the body of Christ. And Christ the head of that body, who is declared to be the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person, by whom all things were created, and who upholds all things by the word of his power. How exalted then is the position of those who are members of that body, and how highly should we prize our relationship in that body of which Christ is the head! And how should we strive for the health and well-being of that body! Christ said to Peter: 'Thou art Cephas and on this rock will I build my church." He did not say churches, but church.

Again, Paul writes to the church at Ephesus: "As a glorious church not having spot or wrinkle, or any such things but that it should be holy and without blemish."

The next item that we will notice in relation to the church, under the figure of a body, is the union that should exist among the members. This subject is often spoken of in Scripture. The union of God's people, was one great object for which the Savior labored. It was has instruction. It was the subject of his prayer: "that they all may be one as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." O, how near and how dear must that union be! Then should not all the members of this (Christ's) body have the same nature, and should not that be, that Heavenly and Divine nature of which Peter writes, (second Peter, first chapter.) The union that should exist between the members of the body of Christ, is illustrated in the writings of the Apostles to the church at Rome. He said: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another, in the natural body." Every joint supplies its place. The members are fitly (not unfitly) joined together. So should the members of the body of Christ be united. Each should supply his place in the body and all be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment. And each should know his place, whether bishop or preacher, or deacon, or private member, and should labor for the general good of the church the body of Christ.

And there should be no schism in the body, but the members should have the same care one for another. Suppose a member of the church has been overtaken in a fault, and has stepped out of the way, then the members should not turn from that member with cold indifference. They should not speak lightly of him, for this is certainly not the way we treat the members of the natural body; but we should make him feel that all are concerned and interested in his welfare. Amputation is never resorted to in the natural body until all hopes are lost for the restoring of that member. And then it is a painful operation. And so it should be in the church of Christ. Expulsion should be the very last resort.

And now we will consider the union and relation that should exist between the head and the body. And if we acknowledge Christ as the head of the body, the church, then our wills should all be lost in his. Self should be crucified with him and in all our future actions, we should be governed by his righteous will for the Apostle said, "let that mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." He came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him. Therefore arm yourselves with the same mind.

In the human body the head is the seat of judgment and will, by which all the members are controlled. One body, one head, and one will, is heaven's order. One body with two heads, would be a monster, and such would be one head with many bodies.

Again; the head is the seat of sensation. What is done to the members is felt in the head. By this means all the members sympathize with each other, and all the members sympathize with the head, and the head sympathizes with all the members. By this we have but a faint representation of the relation and sympathies that exist between Christ and the church. When Saul of Tarsus persecuted the church, it was said: "Why persecutest thou me?" Yet Christ was in heaven, and the members of his mystical body upon the earth. Yet Christ, the head, might say: "I feel every pain that they endure for my sake; when you persecute them you persecute me." How near then must be the union between Christ and his people!

Again; what head hath ever shown such interest in the well-being of his body as hath the great head of the church, even Christ! Therefore we should all co-operate in all the interests of the church, that the body of Christ, the church, may be a healthy growing body. The members of this body should keep themselves pure; "for every one that has this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." Paul saith to Timothy, "keep thyself pure." Shall we then take the members of Christ's body, and introduce them into the beer saloon, or playing and surprise parties, pic-nics, and such? If we do, we dishonor the head. Then let every member keep himself unspotted from the world, which is an evidence of pure and undefiled religion."

The Fifth Gospel.

Great excitement has prevailed among Biblical scholars, whenever a new manuscript or version of the sacred Scriptures has been discovered. There is a fond hope prevailing that there will yet be found, in some old convent, or in some oriental city, among now reclused libraries, or in some house of neglected antiquities, precious copies of the sacred Scriptures.

A Fifth Gospel has been discovered! and has been in the possession, for some time past, of eminent persons. It is more complete than either of the four now in the Canon, and throws a flood of light upon many points which have hitherto been obscure to most readers of the Bible. No complete copy has as yet been transcribed, although parts of it have been written out. Many persons are now engaged in transcribing it. Such is the great value of this Fifth Gospel that those who have made themselves familiar with it declare that without it the other four are scarcely intelligible. At any rate, no one who has once had the fifth will ever again read the others except under its influence. The Fifth Gospel adds but little to the external history of the Lord; but it makes the facts already known clearer than they were before; changes somewhat the order of events, and clears up some obscurities in history, topography, manners, and customs. But its chief value consists in the great light which it throws upon the spiritual portions of the Gospel, or what may be called the inner truths of the Christian faith.

Although we would wish every Christian person to secure a copy of the fifth Gospel, we do not know of any place where it is for sale. Still, we can, perhaps, point out a way, in which those who are enterprising may get a sight of it, and then procure a copy of their own. But it will require diligence and earnestness.

"Let one become so familiar with the four evangelists, that the life and history of our Lord shall stand before him in a clear light; let him put all the practical points of the Gospel to daily use; let him translate its spiritual elements into personal experience, and its ethical teachings into daily practice, and he will find rising out of the four Gospels the fifth, which will be his own personal Gospel, truly inspired, since it will be the fruit of the Divine spirit in his soul! As in a steroscopic box, two pictures conspire to bring out a third one in the beholders eye more statue like than either of the factors, so on the soul of a Christian the four Gospels cast their combined image rounded out and made more full than is either one of them alone.

They that have only four Gospels have not one. Only they have four who have five. The fifth Gospel is the evidence and interpretation of all the others. With some it is a mere collection of scraps and fragments. But with others it is large, full, overflowing, increasing every year. Blessed are they who have an ample Fifth Gospel.

To Procrastinators.

Have you a habit of putting off till a better time—through an indolence inexplicable even to yourself—little matters that may seem trifling, but which you should really consider as tests of character? To such we say, fight this inclination with a persistent strength which will take no denial, if you ever wish to be or to accomplish anything in this world; for rest assured it is the little fox at the root of the vine which will nibble away till every bud and blossom of the future shall be severed with mildew and blight."

"What constitutes wealth or riches? It may be defined as an abundance beyond what our employment or necessities, and the necessities of those dependent upon us, require in the community where our lot is cast. Such an abundance is a superfluity, which is another word for riches."

Explanation of Acts I. 25.

In choosing his disciples, the Savior made choice of one, Judas, who was not thoroughly converted, to be an instrument in the hands of the Jews to effect his capture, and he not being wholly purified, was not properly a child of God, but belonged to the adversary of our souls; and when the proper time had come, satan took full possession of his heart, after which he (Judas) went and held consultation with the chief priests and captains how he might betray him unto them; by which transgression he fell from the apostleship, that he (Judas) might go to his own place, for being subject to satan, he was out of his natural element so long as he remained with the apostles.

Examine also the grammatical construction of the sentence in question. "That he might go to his own place." Did the pronoun he have reference to Matthias, it would read thus: "That he may go to his own place;" making use of the present auxiliary "may" in connection with the verb "go;" but as Judas had fallen we use the past auxiliary "might," as the event took place in time wholly past. Therefore we conclude that the pronoun "he" is used to personate Judas and not Matthias.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.—Do all the good you can. Whenever you hear of a poor widow, an orphan child, or an aged man who is in affliction, pay that individual a visit. Do not hoard up all you earn; give a certain portion to the poor. Never get angry. If you are slandered or imposed upon, better suffer a little than retaliate and use harsh language. Be not proud or selfish. Think no more highly of yourself and your talents than you do of the capacities of others. Pay all you owe. Keep out of debt. Get not entangled in the meshes of the law—avoid it as the sure gate to ruin. Shun vicious pursuits and unprincipled associates. Honor the Sabbath, and serve God, and be devoted to truth and religion. Finally, take some useful paper, pay for it in advance, read it attentively, and you will be happy.—Peace and contentment will smile in your path, joy dance on your countenance, and every hour of life before you will be fragrant with blessings, rich and abundant.

Brief Expositions.

A Letter to Brother Christian Brubaker, of Lancaster county, Penna.

Grace be with you. Grace we need at every moment, not only to resist the fiery darts of satan, and the seducements and derisions of the world, but also to bear the follies, and infirmities, and inconsistencies of the church. Christ not only suffered from his enemies, but from his friends. While satan bruised his heel, his chosen bruised his heart. During his ministry, he had to bear with their quarrels and rivalries, and their misconceptions of his doctrines and kingdom. When he wanted a few faithful friends to watch with him only one hour in Gethsemane, they fell asleep within a stone's cast of his fearful encounter with the Prince of Darkness. While he was lying with his face on the earth, agonizing in the sense of sin's penal woes, saturating the sod with his blood-mingled sweat, his three chosen disciples were indulging a nap. When he was apprehended and led captive to the waiting Sanhedrim, "they all forsook him and fled." While he was standing before his accusers, meekly and silently bearing their affronts, Peter was warming himself at a comfortable fire in the ante-chamber, denying his master with cursing and swearing. And on his way to the cross, not one of his disciples offered to alleviate his burden. Even after his resurrection, he had occasion to rebuke them for their unbelief and hardness of heart. Oh, how many and deep were the wounds that Jesus received from "his own!" Having been made like unto his brethren, he can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and sympathize with all whose hearts are burdened with sorrow by reason of the prejudices, or self-will, or frowardness, or conceit, or injustice of any that belong to the church. He bore everything patiently, even praying for his murderers with his dying breath. Here is an example of self-denial and forgiveness that we must by all means learn to imitate. Whoever fails here, fails of Heaven.

This is the third letter I am writing to you since your labors in our midst. Twice before I took up my pen with the determination to prepare a plain, simply-worded letter, but after I had fairly launched into the depths of my subject, I entirely forgot my purpose of simplicity in style, so that till I was done I had clothed my thoughts in language which I feared would baffle you even to distraction. I will try and not drive you often to the dictionary in reading this letter, although it is probable that you will find a word here and there that requires definition. And not only this; my other two letters are very long. They are attempts at methodical explanation, and will appear in print some time this year, if the Lord will. I will give you a synopsis of both, in the hope that you will find them serviceable in your ministry. The first is based on Mark 3: 1—5, and is treated as follows.

1. The withered hand, representing our dead, dried up, helpless condition under sin. Christ often selects a special feature or property in an object to shadow forth states and conditions of universal application. The hand is the symbol of power, and when this is withered, all else goes with it. Where power is lacking to attain the end of being, it is of no consequence, as to any favorable destiny for man, how much power remains. Man is withered at the root, is a ruined power, and works only destructively, like the jarring and grinding and crashing of a disordered machine. Every mortal bears witness to the fact of his paralyzed hand. Impairment of power is manifest in every individual history not only, but in every circumstance of that history. In a variety of ways, even while concentrating all their energies to compass gigantic undertakings, men proclaim their moral paralysis. Proud and haughty and insolent as man is, especially in high position and great authority, his utmost capacity and achievement, in the proper direction of his being, is truthfully embodied in the words, "there was a man there which had a withered hand."

2. The two commandments which preceded the cure. "Stand forth." The first step was to get the man out of the crowd. Jesus proceeds on the same principle in the case of every sinner. The first effective call is one of separation from the world. Repentance and faith constitute a severing, sifting process. In it we turn from sin to the sin-bearer. But this was only a preliminary means. The man obeyed, and "stood forth," and yet was not cured. Repentance and faith are included in the first injunction, and sever the sinner from the mass of corruption that environs him; but these inner states want something in which to externalize themselves. Then came the second behest—"stretch forth thine hand." He did so, and was restored. After repentance and the exercise of faith, comes the imperative injunction, "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Had that man consented to "stand forth," and then refused to "stretch forth his hand," he would have carried his withered member to the grave. When persons have given ear to the summons to come out from the world, claim to have repented and to believe in Christ, and then refuse compliance with the further arrangements of God for their reconciliation, they "reject the counsel of God," and "die in their sins." The cure of that man's hand lay in neither of his acts, but in the power of Him who issued the commandments to stand forth, and stretch out the hand. So salvation does not depend, fundamentally, on repentance, or faith, or baptism, but on that "same Jesus," to whose wisdom and grace and righteousness all commandments and institutions owe their origin. "Standing forth" will avail nothing, unless "stretching out" be added, because both are commanded by the same person for the same end. Repentance and faith are known to be genuine only when they complement themselves in baptism. So God has ordained, and that is the reason why salvation is connected with an external ordinance.

3. The anger of God against all who find fault with his method of curing the withered hand. "He looked round about on them with anger." That look was a fore-gleam of the great consummation of God Almighty. It was a premonition of the dire retributions of the final Judgment. In that look lay concealed the fire that will flash out of the Law-side of Deity into every soul whose destiny will be in outer darkness. It was a faint fore-token of that dreadful effusion of wrath that shall kindle a quenchless hell in every sinners bosom. God has his own way of doing things, and he will allow no one to alter his arrangements. He saves only in his own order, and those who claim to have "stood forth" from the ungodly multitude, and then "halt between two opinions," and instead of going down into the water and be "baptized for the remission of sins," take some other course that is more agreeable to the flesh, will have to bear the terrors, not only of an angry look, but of the unmixed, ever-consuming fires of his righteous indignation.

The second letter was elaborated out of Rev. 22: 17. A familiar text, yet as fathomless as the ocean of eternity. 1. Man's thrist smitten condition. In one sense wholly dead, and in the other, dying. Like Hagar, he is wondering in a desert, in quest of water. Sin has dried up every fountain that can satisfy, and so blinded the perishing seeker that he sees not the gushing spring opened by grace. Man is parched and burned up with sin-fever. He is raving in his delirium for something to cool his scorched, blistered soul, and empties cup after cup from earth's broken, polluted cisterns, only to be more thirsty than before.

2. In Christ alone is a "fountain opened for sin and uncleanness." In him is "the water of life." One draught out of his fulness brings more refreshment, and allays our thirst more effectually than a lifetime of incessant bibbing with sin's intoxicating beverage. One drop from his vessel is like an invigorating potation to a dying traveller on the burning sands of Sahara. It opens the eyes, and brings knowledge. It quickens the whole being, and imparts strength. It filtrates into the dryest, most stony, barren recesses in our nature, and turns the will on the side of righteousness. It flows out from our eyes and mouth, hands and feet, along life's pathway, and marks its course by verdure and beauty, freshness, flowers, fruit, and fragrance.

3. It is offered to all. No thirsty soul is ever fenced away by God's decrees. "Let him that is athirst come," and who is not? All feel a void which Christ offers to fill. The call to come, and the invitations to drink are unlimited. God has created no fuel to keep hell's furnace ablaze. No one sinks to perdition save on his own responsibility. Christ died not to ransom only a chosen number, consigning the rest to the torments of his arbitrary ire. The water of life is not held out to some lips, while others, equally needy and eager to drink, are left to perish with thirst. This be far from a righteous God. However limited in its application, the Gospel is a universal provision.

4. It is a free gift. No one has any claims on offended Deity. When a being of Infinite Perfection shuts the door, it is righteously closed, and grace alone can turn back the bolt. He opened his eternally-throbbing love-heart voluntarily, and sent the living stream over the banks of Heaven's river, to flood the whole world with the knowledge of his mercy. No one can buy this life-giving drink. One drop outweighs the stupendous aggregate of all that is derivitive, rational and irrational. No one can dip it with his own vessel, nor use it claudestinely. It was unsealed amid the strained gaze of heaven and hell and earth, and no one can appropriate it secretly. Christ must be confessed before men. No one can turn it into his own cistern, or store it in his own pitcher, to be used or distributed independent of God's own method. The water, the vessel, the power to approach the fountain, and the disposition and ability to drink, are all the effects of grace, and therefore free gifts. When the flood gates of eternity were opened, the living water came streaming into this desert of sin, rolling its "glad tidings" from Calvary to the ends of the earth. In this tide of grace came also the means by which thirsty sinners can be brought to the fountain, and be satisfied with its provisions. Every one is honored with an invitation; furnished with a vessel to be filled; shown the path that leads thither, and the manner of drinking. Every one may take of the water of life freely.

5. The fact that the fountain is open, and the living waters flow, and a general invitation is extended, does not actually save any one. After all that God has done, our personal salvation is dependent on our own will. The text says, "whosoever will." To be willing to be saved is a greater matter than is generally supposed. The majority think it is no more than consent, independent of any expression of will, correspondent to a Divine formula. But God says not so. "Whosoever will," must will as God wills. The sinner is not only invited, but is commanded to drink in God's own way. Millions crowd around that fountain, and yet go down into the flames that shall never be quenched. They imagine they are drinking out of "the well of salvation," and are all the time sucking the poison of asps. They are rejoicing in hope of Heaven, and are full of talk about their experience, without even perhaps suspecting that their drink is home-made and death-breeding.—Their passports are of clerical manufacture, bearing no trace of Christ's blood in the signature, and yet they go on their way rejoicing, mingling the songs of Zion with outbursts of glee that savors more of bacchanalia than piety. They are half-drunk and dead-drunk with the waters of the Dead Sea. "Whosoever will." No salvation without this. And no one will who tries to creep round a single commandment of God. He that has heard the call, and turned his feet toward the fountain, and is not willing to be submerged in the natural water as a condition of salvation, will yet but little taste of the living water on earth, and in the world to come not a drop to cool his tongue.

In conclusion, there are two appeals in the text—one to the church, and the other to the world. "The Bride says, come." Every member is charged with a mission of grace to the unconverted. No brother or sister is exempt from the obligation to proclaim Christ and his salvation. The living water is not to stagnate in us, but flow out, not as a rivulet but as a river. We are to say, come, in every act of life, in every word we utter. The Bride is to unite with the Spirit in calling sinners to Jesus. Oh, what a solemn, far-reaching ministry is ours! Who is awake to its magnitude? Who is in full sympathy with the Spirit?

The other appeal is to the world. That little word "come," embraces all. It sounds out of Eternity, and has in it the voice of God, the dying groans of Jesus, the pleadings of the Holy Ghost, and the earnest, united invitations of the church. It sums all the toils and tears and martyrdoms of the saints, and all the woes and outcries of ruined souls. Oh, sinner "come," to-day, this hour, now. Come to Christ, and find in him life, heaven, eternal bliss; or take the dread alternative of death, eternal death, a living death, the curse of God, the woes of hell, and the goading of a guilty conscience forever and ever.

"Give Attendance to Reading." Tim. 4: 13.

Unto Timothy these words were written by Paul; who claims him as his own son in the faith; that he should give attendance to reading. This is what we wish to drop a few thoughts upon; knowing that it is too much neglected. We wish to impress upon our minds the necessity of reading, and of thinking over what we read.

There are two ways to read. 1st. we may read simply by calling the words over, and when we are done we can scarcely recollect any part of the chain of thought communicated, and but very few words. After we are through reading in this way what have we? We have no more knowledge than we had before we read it, and have lost our time. We can boast that we have read this book, and that book through, but we cannot boast that we have thought this book and that book through. 2nd. We may read by calling words, reasoning, and weighing matters one with another, and by these means arrive at the thought intended to be conveyed by the writer; which is the proper way to read. When we read matter intertwined with profound logic or reason, and conclude that we are not competent to comprehend it, by reading it but once, we should read it the second time, and even oftener if not perfectly understood.

Let it be remembered that knowledge consists not in the abundance of word-calling, but, in the abundance of thinking, and understanding; and by these means we will become competent to solve almost any logical puzzle. There are scores of examples in the Holy Scriptures which can only be understood by having the utmost attention confined to the subject and its attributes; and in many cases, the most learned cannot arrive at its full meaning at once reading. The faculty of thinking is just like any other faculty: the more it is exercised the more it becomes developed; and in order to exercise it, as a general thing, the best rule is, when we come across any thing which seems to look dark before us, never to lay it aside until it is thoroughly understood; unless it is one of the secret things which God has reserved to himself. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us." Deut. 29: 29. The revealed things, therefore, we have a right to know, and indeed must know if we would be "wise unto salvation;" and the only medium through which we can acquire a knowledge of them, is to read with diligence and meditate; for the day of inspiration is past. Let us therefore read, dig deep, seek with diligence to know the mystery of Godliness. And when we are together at home or at our neighbor's house, we can engage in nothing to greater profit, than to give one another Scriptural questions, and queries; not for the sake of controversy, but for the sake of growing in the knowledge of the truth. But there are some who it appears become almost insulted when a subject of this kind is approached. They have no spirit of inquiry, take no interest, manifest no disposition to continue the mental exercise. What their reasons are for so doing I know not; unless it is their shallow knowledge of Scriptural facts. A poor excuse! Or for the purpose of introducing a subject of their own taste, one which they are amply qualified to talk about, such as their farms, their cattle and swine, the price of this, and the price of that; such we think do not read much of that which stands firmer than heaven and earth. In order that we employ every spare moment, it is very necessary that we have free access to our library; so that we cannot conclude that it will take as long to get the book we want, as we have time to read; among the books that we should read, are the Old and New Testaments; by which all other books, theologies, and treatises must be tested; and let them be read according to the Bible, and not the Bible according to them.

A few words concerning our accountability to God. We become accountable beings to God just as soon as we can discern good and evil; then we are subject to regeneration; at which time it is required of us to read the will of God concerning our state; and if we justly apprehend them we will find something for us to do; we will observe that there are means prescribed, to bring us under subjection to his will; and whether we comply with them or not we are accountable to him for it.

Then as we are accountable to God for what we are and know, is it not just as reasonable to conclude that we are also accountable to just as great an extent for that which we might be, or know? We certainly are so far as we have the facilities to make us such. If we were not, a man might refuse to qualify himself, thinking thereby to escape other accountabilities, and save much trouble, and greatly cheapen his salvation, and in the world to come be just as good as those who have spent much time and hard labor and have almost sacrificed themselves in attempting to know the whole law.

Let us therefore embrace every moment, and avail ourselves of every opportunity, and read the eternal word of him who has done all we could not do, and left undone all we can do; which are all things "whatsoever he has "commanded" us; and now it is said, we must work out our own salvation by observing these "all things." And let us accept the admonition of Paul to the Romans, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God which is our reasonable service.

The One Thing Needful.

Luke 10: 41, 42.

Dear sisters in the Lord; how are we spending our time? Have we chosen that good part which Mary chose, which shall not be taken from her. She sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word. We also have the privilege to sit at the feet of Jesus and hear his word. Are we like Martha, cumbered and troubled about many things, and much serving? It is written: "first seek the kingdom of heaven and all the rest shall be added unto you." What a blessing is promised. We may be troubled about many things, in decorating and ornamenting our houses, and in setting our table with the superfluities and vanities of this world. We also can spend much time dressing our little children with the fashions of this world, which is vanity and sinful in the eyes of the Lord. If we take care of the time others spend in vanities and foolishness of this world, we will have more time to read the Word of God, more time to go to meeting, more time to visit the sick; more alms to give to the poor. Let us work more for our soul's salvation, and not so much for this dying body, and we will receive the sweet fruits in heaven, where all is love, peace, and joy forever. M. ANGLEMYER.

Paul's Sliding Scale.

A tool which the reader may not have heard of, but it is thus described;

Being a mechanic, that eminent man was familiar with divers kinds of mechanical instruments. And as an eminent, spiritual mechanic, he well knew and skillfully used spiritual instruments. And he had a sliding scale, with special reference to the emotions of men's hearts and lives.

The scale he used had this distinguishing peculiarity—it was always in the rising direction. It was downward once in his own case, as pride and self-righteousness were sinking him as lead into the mighty waters, but upward ever from the time of his conversion. And what he himself became he would have others be, only more so; and he urged the upward scale with all his power.

Had a man knowledge of God? but he must be "increasing in the knowledge of God." Had he a loving acquaintance with Christ? but he must "be able, with all saints, to comprehend him" in an ever-widening sphere of knowledge. Had he holy love? but it must "grow exceedingly." Was he liberal with his money? but he must "abound therein more and more. Was he strong in the Lord? but he must be "strengthened with all might." Did he know something of prayer? but he must "pray without ceasing."

So, to every Christian virtue, must be applied the rising scale. With his ardent and loving heart it was all upward and heavenward, soaring and ascending. Every wing must be plumed that way. Spiritual gravitation was the reverse of natural—being not earthward, but heavenward.

Not a few of the disciples, we are sorry to say, fail of harmony with the apostle in this matter, having a different sliding scale. They slide, but in the wrong direction. Faith there had been, but it grew weaker. And the fire of love burned less fervently. And zeal that ran walked at last, and soon limped and then stopped. And he who had given fifty sat down exhausted, and wrote twenty-five, and diminished upon that till the bottom of all responsibility in that direction dropped out.

Has any Christian a right to any other sliding scale than Paul's? Has the Master any other? Is there not shame and peril in having any other?

Home and its Pleasures.

What joy and pleasures are derived from that simple word home; and yet how few realizes the true meaning of it. When we review the scenes of our childhood's happy days, it seems as if it were but yesterday: so fresh does it remain upon the mind. We would give worlds, had we it to give, to return once more to our happy school days; to greet the pleasing countenances of our loved schoolmates. But, Alas! we trace back the few years that we have been away from the parental roof, and behold what a change! Some have been borne on angel's wings to their heavenly home, while a few of us yet remain near the scenes of our youthful days. Those undoubtedly were our happiest days when we knew of no troubles or trials, but what were easily overcome. What joy it would be to return once more to the parental roof, and see the same kind faces, that once were ours to enjoy. A father's kind advice, a mother's love, and a brother and sister's affection are true emblems of a happy home. It matters not how plain the dwelling be, if the hearts within beat in unison, there is home.

Our home is what we make it. We have it in our power to make home happy, and should it prove otherwise the fault lies within ourselves. There is always some cause for unhappiness. And if we are unhappy here in our earthly homes, how can we, who are pilgrims on our way to Zion, expect to enter that heavenly home which our father has prepared for them that love him. O Christian pilgrim if we would be happy in our father's home above, we must first begin on earth, and on earth is the time and place that we are to lay up treasures in heaven. On earth is the place to prepare to meet our loved ones that have gone before. A little while yet and we too will go to our home alone. There we will be forever at home if we live the life of a true Christian, while on earth. In the future let us avoid all that is evil and tends to make us miserable, that when this life has run its course, and the sun of existence is sinking to rise no more, we may never regret our past life, that when our Lord comes we may hear him say: "welcome thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

Mirthfulness.

Many young people of to-day have no other object in view than to spend life in gayety. Modern Christians who are inclined to be mirthful have become so habituated to the giddy and gay, that they can seldom assume a look of tranquility, even in the hour of grief and sorrow.

I do not like to see any one have a dull or sour appearance. Nor do I want any one to understand me to be opposed to a laugh when an occasion really requires it. But no one who claims to have renounced the sinful pleasures of this world should be the author of what is only calculated to tickle the ears of the frivolous and gay. That the Christian can direct his conversation as it becometh the gospel of Christ and engage in all manner of light-mindedness is a mystery that I never was able to solve. The Apostle admonishes us to be holy in all manner of conversation. Hence a conversation that only becomes the frivolous and gay cannot be holy. If the Christian wants to live a life of holiness he must not bend to the inclinations of his own will, but he must submit to the will of God. But as Paul, when we would do good evil is present with us. But this is no reason that we should despair of doing our duty. David has said of those that would not consent to the councils of sinners: "His delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate both day and night." Here is good instruction for those who would abandon the society of the light-minded and gay. Let those who would have the desire of a good heart seek instruction from the word of God and meditate both day and night upon his precious word, and as David has said, "ye shall have the desire of your heart."

Many young, virtuous Christians have so much trouble in watching their actions and gestures that they have often been ashamed of their conduct while in their social circle. To such I would say, do not despair of doing your duty. You can be "sober minded." You can, by the assistance of God, overcome the temptations of the adversary. Your heart's desire is to do right. Then abandon every sin that doth so easily beset you and run with patience the race that is set before you, and in the end you shall receive a crown of life.

"Let us Rather Strive to be One."

We are commanded to be of one mind and that mind is to be none other than the mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." The words that head my article are not originally mine, but I use them, being they have some bearing to some ideas that I desire to present to the readers of the Companion.

To strive to be one, is to labor hard, or to endeavor with earnestness for a unity. Kentucky no doubt, as well as many of us, has experienced the truth of the beautiful words inscribed on its standard of arms, namely, "United we stand, divided we fall." Bind a number of sticks together in a bundle, and they are not easily broken, but separate them, and take one by one, and but little power is necessary to break them all; so also the Christians, "united they stand, divided they fall." No wonder Christ prayed to his Father, as we find it recorded in Jno. 17: 11. "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are." Paul sharply reproved divisions as recorded in 1st Cor. 3: 3, "for ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" Read the connection Again, as in 1st Cor 11: 17, 18, 19. "Now in this that I declare unto you, I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse. For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear that there be divisions among you; and I partly believe it. For there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." The propriety, nay the necessity, of a perfect union, will be seen in the following passages of Scripture. Mark 3: 25 "If a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand." 1st Jno 4: 20, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

From the article from which we clipped the words heading this article we read, "let us use no party names, lest we create a party spirit, and divide the church into parties, which has proved such a curse to some other denominations," referring to the terms "Old Brethren" and "Young Brethren." Whether those are "party names," or not, I will not say, but one thing I do know, the terms "Elder" and "Younger" are not, for they are Bible terms, and I am bound to use them, whether I preach, or write. Not long ago I wrote a few lines on those terms, to which a brother found some objections, and as I desired to reply to the same, I will do it here I have not the Nos. of the Companion with me now, but as near as I can remember I remarked that "I was taught to respect old age in the world, and that I was also taught to do so in the church of Christ." The brother intimated that I said that "I was taught to obey my parents," and he, then reminded us that it read "in the Lord" at the close, and so that passage does, but I was speaking about old age, that I was taught to respect it, and never spoke of, or referred to the passage above named. There is no danger of divisions if we use the terms "Elder" and "Younger" if both those characters then do as the Bible teaches, just as in a family there never was a division because some were fathers and others children, or because some were called "the old folks," and others "the young folks," but because the young would not submit to the old, as many parents could testify. But there are also some divisions in families because fathers "provoke their children to wrath." Paul calls Timothy his son, so Paul must be the elder and Timothy the younger of the two. Every one who is disposed to submit can learn who the apostle means when he says "ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder". The elders serve us younger.

The Judgment.

O, how dreadful to think that we must stand before the tribunal bar of God, there to answer for all our deeds and words. Let us, therefore be on our guard and watch, lest the day come upon us as a thief. The time is not far distant when some of us must make that solemn change. O sinner, will you not make preparations for your soul, before death may overtake you? O come, before it is eternally too late. Death is certain, and life is uncertain. O how terrible must the approach of death be to those who have not made that necessary preparation for his coming. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God, even when we are prepared, and our peace made with God. O how awful when this is not the case. The time may come that you may wish that you had been as careful to work out your salvation, as to engage in the trifling entertainments of this world. The door of mercy yet stands open for you. But soon it may be closed forever upon you. And then you must go into everlasting punishment; and the righteous into life eternal. Here you can see the great contrast betwixt the obedient and the disobedient.—When the Lord will come to judge us he will separate us as a shepherd divideth his sheep. He will place the sheep on his right, and the goats on his left. Then he will say to those on his right, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom of heaven, prepared for you from the foundation of the world And to those on the left he will say, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. O sinner, think of this! No admittance where Christ the Son of God forever reigns. But be cast into outer darkness where there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Christ still calls you and you refuse. If you will not come whilst he gives you the opportunity, you will see the time when you will call upon the Lord, and he will not hear your cries. Sinner think of the many warnings you have had, perhaps from a kind father or a dear mother who prayed for you, and talked to you, time and again, and all this you have rejected. O sinner, listen to your kind Savior. He calls you and says "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Not only for this life but life eternal. He further says, take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest for your soul. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light. How much should we be engaged in this important matter of seeking a rest in heaven. We are all so much engaged in making ourselves comfortable and happy in this world, and how much harder should we try for a rest in Heaven, for there is a rest for the people of God. Happy are the dead that die in Jesus, for they shall rest from their labors and their works do follow them.

Women in Revivals.

During a series of religious meetings held at Neffsville some time ago, it was observed that most of the persons who expressed a desire for salvation were women. This provoked the stale comment—so often heard from men whose brains are so addled and stupid with rum and tobacco, as to be almost proof against moral and religious influences—"that only weak-minded persons could be induced to seek the Lord, and that men of judgment were not so esily deluded." These remarks became known to some of us. Now I would say. Well friends we had a very profitable meeting some time ago. I wish however to notice a little objection that I heard concerning our meetings. Some persons have said that this is not really the work of the Lord, because nearly all the seekers are females. They marvel, why there is so large a proportion of the weaker sex engaged in this work. Now sirs, I will not answer your question directly but see here. If you go to the Penitentiary and see the number of prisoners there, you will find one or two females to every hundred men. When you answer this, I will be prepared to speak to your question.

When a thousand men can be found as sober, as free from the besotting influences of alcohol, tobacco licentiousness, lying, cheating, gambling and party politics, as a thousand of their wives, mothers and sisters are, and who would be as willing to have their whole histories read before the world as they; and who have done as much to elevate, and as little to degrade the opposite sex, as their mothers, wives, and sisters have, then, if there are not as many men as women among them seeking and serving the Lord, the probable reason will be that in the sacred temple of a woman's heart, there is by nature more of the element of pure devotion, more of the emotion of gratitude and praise, less of self-dependence and independence, and more of that faith which leads the soul to rest and trust upon the everlasting arm of God, than there is in the natural constitution of the opposite sex.

Revelations 12.

In the first place it is said "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars."

The sun I suppose to be the brightness of the Gospel, the moon the rigidness of the law, the woman the holy spirit, the stars the twelve tribes of the children of Israel, first literal, but now spiritual. The man brought forth (for the word child in one place stands in italics) I suppose to be the power found in the church, or the church established.

The word dragon very generally I think is misapprehended, and it is here that we meet with the greatest inconvenience in attempting to explain the meaning of the passages of the Scripture in question. Many things under the sun are effected by opposite extremes, and these opposite extremes are the cause of consoant agitations and conflicts coming to the church, I suppose at certain times, at certain places, humility is the holy spirit, is the woman, the great wonder that appeared in heaven. Exaltation is the dragon.

There was more in heaven." But some suppose this cannot be, herein I think they greatly err. In one sense the church is heaven on earth, or at least ought to be, but from whence arise the greatest trials with which the church has to contend; probably, exaltation of spirit.

The 11th verse of the chapter appears to throw much light on the whole question.

"And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony and they loved not their lives unto the death.

White Features and Black Actions.

I wish to say a few words to the little boys and girls who are readers of the Companion. Do you know what a beautiful thing it is to be kind to your little associates? And not only to those, but also be kind to every one whom you chance to meet with.

Quite recently myself and companion were seated in a station-house, waiting for the cars. We noticed standing in one corner of the room a lad of about 10 years, resting himself by leaning against the wall. His sad countenance seemed to speak of deep sorrow. Why did he not occupy a seat, for there was plenty of room? Why it was because he was black. He appeared as though he thought himself not worthy to be seated.

I will now tell you how our attention was so particularly attracted. There were also about 8 white boys, near the same age, who reside in that village. They were standing around that little stranger, pointing and swearing at him, and pushing each other up against him, and laughing and making all kinds of silly remarks concerning him. They kept this up for about an hour, and the poor little prisoner did not make one reply, and did not move except when nearly pushed over by his little masters. He would occasionally raise his sad, downcast eyes and look at them, also cast his eyes around the room as if to see if any one was his friend. We were surely pained to see such wicked conduct, and of course my woman-like feelings were grieved to see a stranger traveling child thus treated and imposed on; but yet childish timidity would not allow him assistance, and the sport of those village boys still increased until the little prisoner was tripped down, and he yet said not a word; but now silently and swiftly the uncontrolable tears rolled down his sorrowful face. Instead of this softening the feelings of the little masters it only increased their laughter. By this time sympathy overcame timidity, and knowing that it was useless to try to resist the sport of so many wicked boys, I quickly arose, stepped to the office and entreated the agent to relieve this poor little stranger prisoner who was quite likely an orphan. And I am happy to say that we saw his eyes brighten, also saw him conducted to the agent's office for protection, and thus the little masters were banished from his presence.

Now the arrival of cars is announced and we were soon flying rapidly along, but could not forget those wicked little boys, who had been, not only acting impolite, but rudely and unkindly, and to a fellow being, who was behaving himself manfully. Although he was black in his features, his actions were entirely white and prudent, while those who were his tormenters possessed white features and black actions.

Now little readers, be careful lest you be white and your actions black. I know you would not like to possess black actions, so be kind and obliging to all, and in short always try to be good. Then you can be white indeed.

Tyrone City, Pa., April 19, 1870.

Sudden Death.

This morning, April 15th, an accident occured in our town, resulting in instantaneous death. Old Mr. Eyer, perhaps near seventy years of age, residing in the country, some four miles from Tyrone, came to town in his one-horse spring wagon, with marketing, as he has been doing for many years. He stopped in front of our office, and after disposing of some of his produce, drove up street, when his horse took fright and ran away; while at full speed the wagon struck a vehicle standing in the way, which threw the old man upon a wheel, and then upon the street, fracturing his skull at several places, and causing instant death. He was a very respectable citizen, and we feel pained at his sudden departure from our midst.

Home Missionary.

A resolution will be introduced at the next meeting of the Middle District of Pennsylvania, calling for a system of home mission, by which at least two brethren will be sent forth to preach at every place within said district, where an opportunity may open, and especially where calls are made. We simply make this announcement in advance that brethren may take council upon the matter before the delegates go forth upon their mission, as it is greatly desired that some conclusion may be attained to at the coming meeting.

Number Fifteen.

Our last week's paper is sadly confused in the paging. And as we were absent from home the mistake was not discovered until the entire issue had been worked off. We hope our readers were able to find the run of the matter, and those who wish to preserve the papers will mark the page figures as they should be.

We also remark here that number 15 has run short. Quite a number of new subscribers did not get a copy of that issue. They will begin with this number. Hereafter we will be prepared for any emergency. One dollar will pay for the balance of the year from any time in April to the end of the year.

Who is the Founder of the Church of the Brethren?

We think the above question has been sufficiently ventilated through our columns, although several replies are still on hand. Our history has been traced back to Jesus Christ, and any farther would hardly be any advantage.

The Pious Youth.

This favorite among the juveniles of our Brotherhood is becoming more popular every month. The April number has been sent out, and we believe it will make some new friends. The January and February numbers will be sent as specimen copies to all who desire to solicit subscribers. We are now collecting good thoughts for the May number. Who will think something on paper for it?

Brother Daniel Studebaker, Anderson Valley, California, says: "We are still trying to do the will of the Lord in our weakness. There are only three members in this valley. We sometimes feel very lonesome, being so far away from the Brethren. But still we are not alone, for the good Lord is everywhere, and he says in his word: "Where two or three are gathered together in his name there will he be in the midst of them." The harvest is truly great in this part of the country. I think good might be done here, if some good brother would come and labor among us."

Blood Cleanser and Panacea.

The column of advertisement of the above popular family medicine, by Saylor, Price & Co., goes out this week. If our readers wish to read it again, they will know where to find it. But perhaps they will have read enough and will take the wiser plan of trying the medicine for themselves, and thus get a practical knowledge—that is, if they are sick. But take our advice and never use any medicine unless you are sick.

The Call for 1000 Subscribers.

The work is going along finely. Although we close our columns a day earlier than usual we announce an addition of 35 names for this week. This will make us 200, and leave only 800 more to make up the thousand. Only a little more effort on the part of each friend, and we shall reach it. There are so many who have not yet filled their quota. Our list of moneys received is the place to find the names of those who are exempt.

Brother Holsinger; I have been taking your Companion for the last three months and am very much interested with it. As you wanted a few more subscribers I concluded I would try to do something to increase the number. I sent some of my Companions out among my neighbors. Then after sometime I went around to see whether they intended subscribing for it, and found five of them had concluded to do so. I did not like to give my paper, as they get soiled. I had some idea of having them bound but they are still not lost. If the subscribers after reading them would send their Companions among their neighbors instead of laying them in some corner, or giving them to their children to tear up, your subscribers would double their number in a short time. I will do all for you I can. You will find enclosed $5 00 for the five names, from the 1st of April to the close of the year. JOHN EVERETT.

Fannettsburg, Pa.

We do not like to see our friends give away their copies, as we would prefer to have them preserved and bound. For that reason we offer to send specimen copies to those who wish to solicit subscribers. If brother Everett (or any others who have given out their copies) will inform us what copies he lacks we will supply as far as we have them. Nos. 3, 9, and 15 are short, and several other numbers are very scarce.

Elder Isaac Price, Schuylkill, Pa., fills his quota, and has several over, to the Companion, and sends us a dozen subscribers to the Pious Youth. He has ordered specimen copies, which he distributes at every convenient occasion. Our papers only need to be seen. They speak for themselves. Then offer to serve those who desire to subscribe.

John H. Filmore, Mt Etna, Adams county, Iowa, has tried what he could do, and the result is at least half a dozen new subscribers on our books.

A sister who has often inspired us with new courage by her words of cheer, drops the following bit of pleasantry: "Will these two subscribers fill my quota? Please don't call for "three hundred thousand more." If you do I shall have to coerce, or throw up my agency." Her quota is full and she has a fair credit on the next draft. We shall not make another call at any rate until the present one has been filled. But suppose we should then ask for forty-five hundred more new subscribers, how easy a matter it would be to raise them, for each old one would only need to get ONE new name. We see no good reason why our paper should not have 10.000 subscribers. We see no limit this side of that number. Every new name added to our list adds a new worker to the family.

Elder Graybill Myers will preach at Birmingham, Pa., (God willing) on Sunday, May 1st, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Brother Elijah French, Burns Station, Dickson county, Tenn., wishes some brother or brethren to come to them and preach, and thinks brethren who wish a good country would do well to settle at that place. He promises to do all he can for any one who will come there. He may be addressed as above.

TOBACCO. Our correspondent—and we are very glad there is but one—will please take notice that we cannot allow him to defend the smoking and chewing of tobacco. We are pretty liberal, as our patrons well know, but when we have tried a thing ourself, and know it to be an evil, and nothing but a continual evil, we put our foot upon it and keep it there. Among such things are chewing and smoking tobacco, drinking intoxicating liquors, eating swines' flesh, dancing, wearing of jewelry, and a host of other superfluities that we could name For such we cannot allow one good word, for what can be said against one, can be said against all.

You say "every herb was given to man for meat, and that you believe tobacco was one of them." Then why do you not eat the "herb?" That would perhaps test your theory. God did give man every herb, but he gave him sense enough to know which to cultivate and which to destroy, which to eat and which to burn. But we nowhere learn that he made one particular bitter "weed," which, although too nauseous to be eaten, may be chewed and then spit out just to make us sick. Better take it calmly, and plead guilty, but ask for time to break off by degrees, from all your bad habits. Do not ask us to allow you to defend that against which we are resolved to use all our influence.

"PARIS BY SUNLIGHT AND GASLIGHT." A work descriptive of the Mysteries and Miseries, the Virtues, Vices, splendors, and Crimes of the City of Paris.—By James D. McCabe, Jr. National Publishing Co., Philadelphia.

All that has made Paris the most beautiful and attractive as well as the gayest and wickedest City in the world, unite to make this book interesting. The author, writing of what he has seen and experienced, has sought to make his volume not only the most powerful and fascinating sensational work of the day, but also a book which shall hold a place in every man's library as an authority upon the subjects whereof it treats. The book is magnificently illustrated with 150 fine engraving by the leading artists of France:—Dore, Therond, and whose names amply attest the character of the work. It is comprised in one large volume of over 800 pages, and sold only by subscription.

Friend John Planck, Smith City, Petis county, Mo., says: "My wife is a member of the church, and we like to read the Companion, as there is not much chance in this remote section of country to hear the true Gospel preached, as we understand it."

We have no doubt but that what our friend says, is true, nevertheless that is no good reason that he should feed upon the "barren mountains of sin." Why not feast upon the bread of life, which is the word of God? Hope the Lord will send some Philip by that way, who may help you upon the way in which you may go on rejoicing.

A brother sends us a subscriber who he says is not a member, but he hopes "the Companion may make him one." We heartily unite with him in that desire, and pray the Lord to bless it to that end. Brethren and sisters, let us make the conversion of sinners the sole object of our writing, preaching and praying. Do you not think we ought to imbibe a little more zeal for the salvation of our fellow creatures? We verily think so. Then let us be up and a doing. Every effort will have some influence. We have had repeated testimony of the good results of the reading of the Companion, to persons not members of the church. And we have no doubt but that a little more honey on the pens of its writers, would yet more increase its influence for good. Let us make our paper a living minister of the word of truth, breathing forth words of persuasion that cannot be resisted. And then let us send forth that minister into the "highways and hedges," where his influence may be most needed. He will not be afraid to enter the palaces of nobility nor ashamed to visit the abodes of poverty.

See how boldly sectarians and politicians sally forth with their pernicious documents of delusion and sin. Hardly a week elapses that we are not waited upon to solicit our influence to aid in some way, to advance their interests. Verily their zeal is worthy of imitation by a people who are engaged in a better cause.

Writing Music.

Mr. Editor; Your system of writing music with numerals has been handed me for inspection and opinion, but could not give full satisfaction, as your remarks on the subject were so short. It is not my intention to criticize the system, but would like to ask one question, if you please: to wit: How will you determine the difference between the Major and Minor modes? Or will the music be written exclusively in the Major mode? This you can answer through the Companion.

Yours with respect,

WM. N. MICHAEL.

Pontiac, Ill.

Our friend mistakes. We are not the author of the system, by any means. The fact is we know very little about it. Perhaps some of the friends of the Numeral System can explain. If they can do it briefly our columns are open to them.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication, as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

Dear Brother Henry; This evening while reading 1st. Cor. 3 : 11, the language of a certain man was brought to my remembrance; said he: "The Brethren preach a solid foundation; but they are so very poor in eloquence." I thought what wonderful puffs we get sometimes through the ignorance of some people. A foundation is that part of a building which is just laid, and upon which all the rest stands. If the foundation of a building is bad, or gives way, the whole edifice is in danger. It is therefore of great importance that it be solid and durable. Now the Scriptures often compare spiritual things with natural things. The church of God is here compared to a house or temple, a habitation of God through the spirit, or as it is expressed, verse. 9. Ye are God's building. Of this building, Jesus Christ is the foundation. The whole church of God, in all ages, and in all places, rests entirely upon him. He is to every true member of it, what a foundation is to a building; he bears the whole weight of it. The occasion of these words was this, there had been divisions among the Christians at Corinth. They admired one preacher, and despised another. One party was for Paul, another for Apollos. Paul reproves them for it, and shows them that all their ministers were but like workmen employed in the same building. Paul was teaching the Corinthians, not to give the honor to man, but to God, who is the Fountain and source of all good.

I feel to say my dear brethren and sisters, never to look to the eloquence of man, but ever look to the great Master builder, for we can never think a good thought, or perform a good action, without his aid and assistance.

Yours Fraternally.

WM. H. QUINN.

"Is it I?"

On page 218 of the Companion are found a few questions, and a partial answer by the Editor, concerning the duties of the ministry, which have perhaps caused as many repetitions of the caption of this article as any thing ever did in the same time, and I have no doubt many a heavy heart, already burdened by the care of a large family of small children, and perhaps involved in debt, either through misfortune or the care of the church, was made to sigh deeply: "Is it I?"

The Apostle Paul who had perhaps the advantage of a very large majority of those under the yoke of the ministry on one occasion said: "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." This declaration of the apostle rings, or should ring very clearly in the ear of every minister of the Gospel, and not only there, but also in those of every man who has the helpless depending on him We often hear complaints against the ministry. I happen to know of one who is blamed because he does not consider it his duty to travel from fifteen to fifty miles every week to attend meeting. Now this brother has a family depending on him for support. He through misfortune has become involved in debt, and he is desirous of providing things honest in the sight of all men, in other words to pay his debts, and how can he do it and spend as much time in the ministry as above indicated?

I do not know whether the above case called forth the query referred to, but I am inclined to think that if the querist puts himself to the trouble of examining his case he will find it an analogous one.

If any minister neglects the ministry of the word for the sake of hoarding up the perishing riches of this world, I hope he will seriously reflect and reform and go about his "father's business." But again, I hope that no one will neglect his by neglecting those for whom he should provide. I trust that none of the laity whose minds are called to the subject, will neglect to attend meeting.

Again, if any one has been called to the ministry, and the church has made provision for him to the extent that he could in reason agree to devote all his time to the office, I hope he will not leave the word of God and serve tables.

I would yet recommend all to read carefully the fourth Chapter of the first Epistle to the Thessalonians.

Covering Heads.

A question: "What will we do with sister Hannah Knauff?"

The above question was asked a short time ago, after hearing a sermon on the propriety of sisters having their heads covered in time of prayer, in token of their subjection to man and God, as taught by Paul. 1. Cor. 11.

Ans. I have nothing to do with sister Hannah. It is my duty to preach the Word.

Question. But sister Hannah wrote sometime ago in the Companion, "that if the brethren require us to have our heads covered when about our work, they should not have their's covered."

Ans. I do not require sister Hannah nor any one else to cover her head. It is God, who is head of all, who requires women to have their heads covered in time of worship: or when praying or prophesying. If sister Hannah finds fault with what is required, she must settle the difficulty with the one that requires it.

Remark. But I think a sister of influence ought not to write as she did.

I also think so. No one should write, or do anything whereby a brother or a sister stumbleth or is made weak. I understand, made weak in obedience to God. Destroy not those for whom Christ died.

We should all give our influence in favor of the truth. Paul says: I can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth."

I suppose sister Hannah did not intentionally weaken any one; but I will just say here that her article had that effect. Some took it, or understood her to mean, that women need not cover their heads in time of worship. Paul certainly teaches otherwise. He says 1 Cor. 11: 5. "But every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven." The 6th verse first part reads in German, "Will ſie ſich nicht bedecken, ſo ſchneite Mann ihr die Haar ab." Some say the hair is the only covering required. Paul certainly conveys the idea that the woman must cover her own head Nature covers the head with hair. The woman must cover her head herself.

Yours in love

John Wise

Explanation of Luke 16: 9.

"I say unto you, make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

That the unrighteous mammon is this world seems clear. And all that have of it are only stewards. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof. The rich man is our heavenly Father. When he entrusts to his stewards, his earthly bounties he commands that there be good use made of them. Though the earth was cursed, the people of God are not to lay up treasure on earth, by a right use of those means there can be good done. It seems the steward had wasted his goods; he was resolved what to do. So he called his lords debtors to him, and lessened their bills. And the lord commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely. That which commended the steward was, he lessened the wants of the needy, by showing mercy as far as lay in his power. Or such means as he had at his command. Daniel when he told the king's dream, told the king to break off sinning by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor. Dan. 4: 27. Jesus told the young man: "If thou will be perfect, go sell all that thou has and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven." Matth. 19: 21. By these Scriptures and others that can be referred to, will be understood how to make yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness. The children of God are to use this world, but not abuse it. Christ told his Apostles "the poor you have always with you. By supplying the poor the rich are applying the riches to those that are promised the kingdom of heaven. Therefore by applying these earthly goods which are entrusted to us, to those objects of real want, this world will be a blessing in our hands. though secondary matter with us. We cannot trust any farther in them, then our natural wants demand. By properly applying we do justice to God and man, and thus make friends thereby, that when ye fail they may receive you into everlasting habitation. "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him." James 2: 5. I will conclude with the 11th verse: "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous riches, who will commit to your trust the true riches?"

To Parents.

We think we have just lived long enough in this sinful world to know something about the customs and vices prevalent in our day. We often hear heads of families complaining of having so much trouble in their families. This we will admit in part, for "man born of woman is of few days and full of trouble." (Job.) But the writer is convinced from personal observation that some parents heap to themselves trouble, by the example and influence they show their children. Any parent who will help to twist the rope to hang themselves with, is not deserving of much sympathy. When parents encourage their children in pride, and criticize with all the biting sarcasm that can be vented upon their neighbors, and in some cases their brethren and sisters. When even death will not deter them from worshipping at the shrine of the god of fashion—in all probability more than misfortune will befall such families. They will tell you in their conversation that they are the most intelligent persons in the neighborhood. Now if parents will persist in thus cultivating the faculty of self-esteem in themselves and their children, they need not lament when they witness the ripe fruits of their labor.

An Imposter.

Brother Henry; Please give notice, of a certain man by the name of Dr. E. Graw, traveling through this county, recommending himself as a great Doctor, deceiving the people, and gathering in money. He came to my house having learned that my daughter had been very sick, and had a large bealing at her neck, which had been lanced a few days previous by our family physician. After gathering all the information he could he left my place and circulated that I had sent for him to Philadelphia, and he lanced my daughter's neck, for which I paid him $100, which was all untrue.

He travels on a buggy, is a German man, speaks very broken English, tells me he can read different languages; boasts of curing Fits, Piles, Rheumatism, Consumption, Sprains, &c. He handed me his card with his address, which is Dr. E. Graw, No. 704 North Second St., Philadelphia. Will some of the brethren of Philadelphia please let us know whether there is a man by that name there, as a Dr. in the Hospital, as he seems to travel mostly among the Brethren.

HENRY HERSHBERGER.

Bloody Run, Pa.

We think by this time our brethren ought to have learned enough to be upon their guard against all traveling doctors. If not, perhaps a little practical illustration, by way of application may have a tendency to make more lasting impressions.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Read and Consider!

There are many good medicines in the world, we hope, for the sake of humanity, but a medicine that is really perfect, because it is aperient, tonic, laxative, stimulant, sudorific and alterative at the same time, is

DR. FAHRNEY'S

Celebrated

Blood Cleanser or Panacea.

With this rare medicine in your house you can do without purging, by means of Pills or Powders. You can do without Salts, Castor Oil, Citrate of Magnesia, Senna or Manna, and so on. You want none of these; THE BLOOD CLEANSER is a substitute for the whole of them. And what is better, it may be taken with Safety and Comfort by the most delicate woman as well as the robust man. It is very palatable, and therefore easily administered to children. It is the only vegetable preparation existing which will answer in the place of Calomel. Regulating the action of the Liver, without making you a life-long victim to the use of Mercury or Blue Pills. It will open the Bowels in a proper and wholesome manner—being composed of suitable medicaments.

"It is one of the best Medicines of the Age, and when taken, will keep all the secretions in a healthy condition, compel all the organs to do their duty with regularity; purify the blood, and secure that inestimable blessing, sound health.

There is nothing like Fahrney's Blood Cleanser, for the cure of all disorders of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Bladder. For Nervous Diseases, Headache, Costiveness, Indigestion, Billious Fever, and all derangements of the internal viscera. You have in this medicine a PANACEA for some of the most painful and dangerous of all diseases.

As a Female Regulator it has no equals in the world. Married ladies, who never have had children, seldom know the cause of their unhappy condition, which is very often depending upon a faulty state of the Uterine Organs, which can only be removed by the use of suitable remedies.

LIVER COMPLAINTS.—The state and quality of the bile must first be attended to, in order to preserve health. The bile in a vitiated state, or when not duly secreted, is oftener obstructed in the liver and gall bladder, and becomes a source of dyspepsia, constipation, and nervous complaints, jaundice, etc. The Panacea being strictly vegetable, and containing great anti-billious properties, and great alterative properties also, will act like a most magical medicine in this complaint. Thousands have found relief, and thousands will yet turn to this medicine, after exhausting their purses and patience in search of health.

Giddiness of the head, dullness of the mind, fœtid breath, coated tongue, loss of appetite, pains and weakness in the stomach, enlargement of the liver, yellowness of the skin, constant fever and thirst, with a total disrelish for business, pleasure, or any kind of employment. FAHRNEY'S PANACEA, if taken and persevered in for a few days, will remove this whole class of symptoms. The fluids of the body become pure, the mind clear, the stomach strengthened, the tongue clean, the appetite improved, and the whole system so benefited that disease, during bad weather, is less liable to afflict you.

"An Ounce of Prevention is worth more than a Pound of Cure." The PANACEA will not only cure old standing and malignant complaints, but is one of the best preventatives of such disorders, ever offered to the world.

You can avoid severe attacks of acute diseases, such as Cholera, Small Pox, Typhoid, Billious, Spotted and Intermittent Fevers, by keeping your blood purified. The different degrees of all such diseases depend altogether upon the condition of the blood, for if this vital fluid is deranged, you will take a disease much more readily than otherwise, and the suffering will be in proportion to the amount of foreign matter in the blood. This is so reasonable that we need not here make any illustrations.

This Medicine is highly recommended for all manner of chronic or old standing complaints, such as Scrofula, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, &c.

BY H. R. HOLSINGER. "Whosoever loveth me keepeth my commandments"—Jesus. At $1.50 Per Annum

VOLUME VI. TYRONE, PA. TUESDAY, APRIL 26. 1870. NUMBER 17.

Selected by B. CLEMMER.

Life's Journey.

What sorrows have pierced me since I was a child,
And mother so often caressed me and smiled;
O solemn I feel when I think of the days
That I sat and indulged in my innocent plays.

No cares to molest me, no troubles to bear,
And all that I looked at was pleasant and fair.
No spot so endearing on all this vast earth,
As the home of my childhood the place of my birth.

And while in that peaceable period at home,
I knew not the future was shaded with gloom
But the vileness of sin on me hath entailed
The cares and the sorrows I often have wailed.

Within its dark limits I wretchedly fell,
But found that good pathway that rescues from hell;
Yet still by earth's sorrows I often am riven,
But trust in the prospects that wait me in heaven.

And while in this region of sorrows and care
I bear the same troubles my brethren must bear;
We all must traverse the same pilgrimage road,
If ever we enter that joyful abode.

I'm in the same conflict my fathers were in,
I have the same power to triumph o'er sin;
I tread the same path that my fathers have trod
To the realms of glory the home of my God.

More glorious by far than my birthplace at home
To view my dear Lord on his Majesty's throne,
And dwell in his presence with those gone before
To share heaven's glory and sever no more.

For the Companion.

Christian Encouragement.

"In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

These words were spoken by Christ to his disciples, just before he was nailed to the cross. He was telling them of the trouble and sorrow that was awaiting them. It must have filled their hearts with sorrow indeed, when he told them that he was shortly to be taken away from them; that he must suffer and die, to make their redemption complete. But he did not leave his disciples comfortless. He told them "he would send the comforter, even the spirit of truth, which would guide them into all truth." While he was speaking to them, it seems they became sorrowful, because he told them that in the world they would suffer persecution, and all the scoffs that could be heaped upon them by sinners.—While they were thus troubled in heart, he says to them: "But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." O! do we not suppose that these words filled their hearts with gladness.—"I have overcome the world." I will be with you in all of your sorrows; whether in perils of the great deep, or in perils among the wicked one; or in offering up your lives for my sake: yes, "be of good cheer." Paul rejoiced that he was accounted worthy to suffer shame, and many stripes for the name of Christ. He did not fear man; but he did revere God's name. He often suffered for his name. His hope was in Christ Jesus. He told his brethren that he must depart and leave them; for he says: "And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the Kingdom of God shall see my face no more. And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck and kissed him, sorrowing most of all for the words that he spake, that they should see his face no more." How they loved him; they knew that if they never met again in this world, they could meet in heaven where trouble, sorrow, pain or death are known no more.

"But be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." O, brethren and sisters, let us cast our minds back to the time when Christ was with his disciples. He often met with them and comforted them. While he spake words to them that caused them to become sorrowful, he would speak words to them that would again cheer them, and they often rejoiced in his name. Will we not listen to his word and obey him? Christ told them that in the world they should have tribulation. "We must, through much tribulation, enter the kingdom of heaven." Let us look back to the time when many Christians had to offer up their lives for the words of Jesus. They were tied to the stake, there to suffer one of the most horrible deaths. O, what a time it was! Fathers taken away from their children, and Mothers torn from their little ones to offer up their lives at the stake for the name of Christ. Do we not suppose they often thought of the word, "be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." O brethren, should such a thing be staring us in the face, let us not be terrified, but hold the closer to the word of God. Do we suppose that we would be as steadfast as these Christians that offered up their lives at the burning stake; but we have one that will help us in all time of need. When Peter saw his Master coming to him, walking on the water, he went to meet him, but when he saw the waves, and that the wind was boisterous, his faith failed him and he began to sink, crying, "Lord save me!" Christ took him by the hand and raised him up. Then let us, when trouble and storms of grief stare us in the face, and when persecutions shall arise, stretch forth our hands and cry, Lord save me! Christ's hand is ever near the Christian, ready to lift him up. O brethren and sisters, let us pray for one another, and love one another, as Christ gave command, that we may be partakers of the blessings that are in store for the faithful. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

"Let Your Light Shine."

In the 5, 6 and 7 chapters of Matthew can be found recorded the sermon which Christ preached to his disciples. In that sermon Christ said: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." We wish to talk in a plain and simple way about this light, which Christ would have us to let shine.

Light comes from heaven, but darkness proceeds from a different source. Christ is light, for he says: "I am the light of the world." Christ is the true light; "the same that John came to bear witness of." John says: "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Light originates with God, and beams forth into the hearts of the pure and upright, through Christ, who himself is light. Darkness proceeds from the devil, who himself is darkness and the author of it.

As the text was delivered for the disciples and believers, through succeeding generations, it follows that our remarks should be directed to the Brethren and those who profess Christ. Let us then bear in our minds the text. We have already seen that Christ is light, and that the devil is darkness. "Let your light shine." What for? That those around you may see your good works; so they may see and know assuredly that there is reality in the religion of Christ, and so by your upright walk and chaste conversation, they may be induced to renounce their wicked ways and "glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Brethren, how is it? Do we let our light shine, or do we frequently forget ourselves? How brightly does our light shine? Is it not at times very dim with some of us? With sorrow have we sometimes seen the dim light and dark examples of brethren, and those who would be Christians, and we wish not to exclude ourself. Now, brethren, let us always be careful when we come in contact with the people of the world. They are always watching us, and if our lights are dark, they will see it. Let us always remember: darkness comes not from God. Boasting, light-minded conversation, rough and hard words, loud laughing, joking, jesting, &c., are not becoming a follower of Christ. They are no ornament to the Christian; but to the reverse. They may be better designated as a part of satan's school. The sons of God must be above that. What folly to conform to the sinful customs of the world, sharing the pleasures with ungodly men, when we cannot obtain the least hope or solid comfort from any of them on a bed of affliction. The nearer we live to Christ, the brighter our light will shine.—Brethren, let us think of these things. Let us try to cultivate a Christian spirit, and a charitable disposition. When we hear any unfavorable reports about our brethren and sisters, let us not think evil so soon. Never believe a bad report until we know it to be so. Otherwise we are not charitable. When a thing is bad let us try and not make it worse than it is. Kind brethren and friends, think not that I consider myself so pure and perfect; no: I sometimes think I am the very poorest among you all; but what can I do? I know nothing better than to try again, and by the assistance of a merciful God struggle to the end. May the good Father bless us all, and abundantly favor us, and may we become stronger and stronger in the power of his might, so that when it pleases him to call us away, we may be ready to go, and forever enjoy ourselves in that land where sorrows can never end, and the weary are at rest, remote from the regions of sin.

The Bible the Best of Classics.

There is a classic, the best the world has ever seen; the noblest that has ever honored and dignified the language of mortals. If we look into its antiquity we discover a title to our veneration, unrivaled in the history of literature. If we have respect to its evidences they are found in the testimony of miracle and prophecy in the ministry of man, of nature, and angels. Yea, even of God manifest in the flesh—of God blessed forever. If we consider its authenticity no other pages have survived the lapse of time, that can be compared with it. If we examine its authority—for it speaks as never man spake—we discover that it came from heaven in vision and prophecy under the sanction of him who is Creator of all things, and the giver of every good and perfect gift. If we reflect on its truths they are lovely and spotless, sublime and holy as God himself, unchangeable as his nature, durable as his righteous dominion and versatile as the moral condition of mankind. If we regard the value of its treasures, we must estimate them not like the relics of classic antiquity by the perishable glory and beauty, virtue and happiness, of this world, but by the enduring perfection and supreme felicity of an Eternal Kingdom. If we inquire who are the men that have recorded its truths, vindicated its rights, and illustrated the excellence of its scheme, from the depth of ages and from the living world, from populous continent and the isles of the sea comes forth the answer; the patriarch and the prophet, the evangelist and the martyr. If we look abroad through the world of men, the victims of folly or vice, the prey of cruelty, of injustice, and inquire what are its benefits even in this temporal state, the great and the humble, the rich and the poor, the powerful and the weak, the learned and the ignorant reply as with one voice that humility and resignation, purity, order and peace, faith, hope, and charity are its blessings upon earth. And if raising our eyes from time to eternity, from the world of mortals to the world of just men made perfect; from the visible creation, marvelous, beautiful, and glorious as it is, to the invisible creation; of angels and seraphs from the footstool of God, to the throne of God himself, we ask what are the blessings that flow from this single volume! Let the question be answered by the pen of the evangelist, the harp of the prophet and the records of the book of life. Such is the best of classics the world has ever admired; such the noblest that man has ever adopted as a guide.

We have classics in this our day that are perverted with spurious doctrine. But the Bible is pure, holy and undefiled. And has been written by inspired Apostles, who have it from him who came down from heaven and spake as never man spake before or after.

God's Word.—Seeing a man reject the inspiration of the Scriptures, while he maintained his belief in Jesus Christ and his redemption, I compared him to some one who has a costly perfume in a glass vessel; he breaks the vessel, thinking he can at the same time preserve the perfume, but he loses all. Set aside the inspiration of the Scriptures, and all Christian doctrine will disappear, This is not a theory; I have seen it to be a fact; therefore the question is one of the greatest importance. I am not ignorant of the difficulties that are raised, but the plentitude of the divinity to be found in the Scriptures is too great to be in the least prejudiced by them.

To the Reader.

We fear these words are not always considered, and taken to ourselves, when we read an article headed "to the reader." Perhaps we see some things in it that points out our wrongs in some way. We should examine each sentences, each word, and see whether there is not a meaning for us, either an instruction, an encouragement, or a warning. We see a great deal written in the Companion to parents, about instructing their children in bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, which we think is right and good, and which is indeed a great responsibility resting upon them. We fear this is too much neglected. Instead of parents warning their children from the poisons and foolish fashions of this world, they help them to it, and sorry to say there are brethren and sisters that will do it also. The root is this: they will put it on their infants, and children yet under their government, and control. Dear brethren and sisters we claim to be a plain and separate people and would not follow the frivolous and foolish fashions of this world. Then let us all take heed and not be the leader of this great evil in our families, for we are taught in the teaching of Christ, that we are to bring up our children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." And we are to instruct them in the way they should go, that when they become old they may not depart therefrom. Now, dear brethren, you who love the Lord, and would not grieve his spirit, consider for a moment the following sentence: "Instruct them in the way they should go." We cannot believe that Christ meant, that we should instruct those tender lambs in the fashions of the world, for he says we are to be a separate people, and if we encourage them in the ways of the wicked and thoughtless while in their youth, they also will not depart from that when old. 2 Peter 3: 17. "Ye therefore, beloved, seeing ye know these things before, beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." Yours in the bonds of christian love.

The Resurrection of the Dead.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.—On such the second death hath no power; but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 6.

We often meet with neighbors and friends that seem to know but little about the subject that is now before us. Some will tell us that the rising from the dead means only to rise from a sinful state to a righteous one. Others will say that the dead will all rise at one time, and again some will say that when the spirit leaves the body and takes its flight in the other world, it will immediately be judged and forever dwell at God's right hand, or be banished from him forever. I must say that such do err, not knowing the Scriptures, for the Scriptures teach us that there is a resurrection of the body. One will ask, what kind of a body will rise? Paul tells us. "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15: 42, 43, 44.—And we find that the resurrection of the body is divided into two classes; the just and the unjust, the first and second resurrection.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." Rev. 20: 5. And Paul says: 1 Thess. 4: 16. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." So we find that if there is a first resurrection there must be a second. And we learn that the period of time between the first and second resurrection, is a thousand years, which time satan will be bound not to tempt the human family, until the thousand years are past.

Well may the saints be said to be blessed and holy, that have part in the first resurrection, for they shall not die anymore. They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign on the earth; they shall be rulers of many things, and over many cities, and they shall be worthy guests at the marriage supper of the Lamb, that shall take place in the evening of this world.—But we must have on the wedding garment; we must wash our robes and make them white in the blood of the Lamb.

We find at one time the Sadducees (who deny that there is any resurrection) came to our Savior and consulted him on this subject; and he taught them that God is not the God of the dead but of the living, for all shall live unto him. So I understand that the righteous will not enjoy those blessings that are spoken of in the Revelations and in many other places, while men are dead, but after the resurrection from the dead, for Christ expressly says: that all "shall live unto him;" but Christ shall first come to collect his jewels home, from the four winds of the earth. Where Lord? We find where the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together. And Christ will reign until he has put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.

Then will come to pass the saying that is written; "death is swallowed up in victory, O death where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law." O, sinner, is it possible that sin will sting in death. I tell you that "sin killeth beyond the grave." This is the second death of the unrighteous. "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men."—Therefore turn unto the Lord, who "will have mercy, and to our God who will abundantly pardon," and seek to have part in the first resurrection, for on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

A Fragment.

To a deeply suffering saint.

Your letter, written in untold physical agony, is like an echo, or continuation, of the Benedicite of the three Hebrews in Nebuchadnezzar's furnace. We need not go to learned Doctors of Divinity for arguments in favor of the evidences of Christianity. In the sick chamber throughout the Church of God, we find monographs of holiness and meekness which are almost too brilliant for angels' eyes to decipher. In many a dusky, dreary, lonely, sickroom may be read epistles of Divine love and wonder, before which the most erudite professor of theology would stand as mute as a babe. No disquisition was ever given to the world of such cogency as that which is "manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ—written with the Spirit of the living God." Your bleak, barren Patmos, swept by storms of suffering, and encompassed by floods of tears has been transformed into a bright, lovely Isle of Grace by the glorious revelations of eternal love.

You have indeed become a child "of sorrow, & acquainted with grief," but have, in the same degree, been crystalized into the beauty of the Divine character. Your fearful throes of mental and bodily anguish have furnished occasions for wonderful displays of Christ's power and readiness to support and bless and strengthen. The assimilation to the Divine likeness thus gained, is of more worth than a thousand years of uninterrupted health. Saying nothing of the immense wealth your sufferings are to the church and the community. You are learning more and more the depth and beauty of the words, "every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." The joy that was set before Christ, was enough to sustain him under the shame and sufferings of the cross; and eventually to see him as he is, be like him, be made "partakers of his holiness," "sit with him in his throne," be forever associated in his dignity and glory and Kinghood —is not this sufficient to make every furnace of affliction resonant with Paul's triumphal love-song in Rom. 8: 35—39.

From the world you have nothing to expect. Its joys and pomps and promises are only bubbles and shadows. You have nothing to hope from any remedial efficacy save his who has "all power in heaven and in earth." You are cut off from all sources of pleasure save that which is opened in the wounds of Jesus. Two things you need—present comfort, and the hope of endless bliss. You want grapes from Eschol to keep your mind and heart full of the promised inheritance; and you want a bow in every cloud to keep you from sinking in despair under your trials. With a few reflections on what Christ has promised you here, I will close this letter. While you gaze at the love-painted bow that spans your sky, you may also regale your soul with clusters from the heavenly Canaan. When God speaks his mind, it is for our comfort. Every promise relating to the present life, is one of the colors in his rainbow. There are some passages in which all the colors concentrate. In Isa. 48: 10, he tells you how he is related to your sufferings. Listen to his wondrous declaration: "I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction." God has chosen thee. For what? For himself, for his glory, for his heaven, for his everlasting companionship. As the espoused of the Lord, will you not gladly suffer some discomfort and inconvenience before moving time, knowing that the eternal fellowship of the Beloved will more than compensate for every trial and sacrifice? God has chosen you, wedded you, and is now dressing and adorning you with the jewels of his love, so that he may delight in you forever. Not only has he chosen you, but his love and wisdom could select no better place than the "furnace of affliction." This figure makes the soul shrink and tremble. We have an instinctive dread of fire, and to be turned into a heated furnace could never be the work of love, were it not the work of God. To have a "burning fiery furnace" as God's choosing place, meeting place, loving place, is truly wonderful. "It passeth knowledge." But Eternal Love will have it so, and we should be glad to get back into the presence and fullness of the Godhead on any terms. In a furnace of fire we are prepared for the "excellent glory," and in a chariot of fire we mount to the heights of the heavenly Zion. Whether it makes our flesh and soul quiver, or whether it be like the dew, the zephyr, or the sweet aroma, it is the fire of love. Christ came to kindle a fire on earth, and rejoiced to see it burn; and when he ascended on high, he promised to baptize his followers with "the holy Ghost and with fire." Thus God deals with all his true disciples. Why he has made your furnace so hot, and keeps you in the flame so long, is known only to himself. Could you lift the vail, and see as he sees, with what blissful repose of soul, would you exclaim, "even so, Father." When you are done with earth, and will be conducted into the inner shrine of Divine life and love, where the "seven lamps of fire burn before the throne," you will see how wise and loving your Savior-God has been in all his painful dealings with you in the wilderness. Now you are astonished at the severity of his discipline, but then you will be amazed at the depth and tenderness and foresight of his love. Whatever comes from his hand, whether scourge, or wormwood, or fire, bears tokens of his love. "For our profit," to effect our transfiguration into "his holiness"—this is his own interpretation of his furnace-teaching. He sits by the crucible, regulating the flame, tempering the heat, separating the dross from the gold, at last pouring you into the mould of perfect beauty, "purified seven times." A living Savior in the midst of the furnace, smiling the sufferer into hope and peace and patience, will bring out a saint that will shine a quenchless star in the firmament of glory forever and ever. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some etrange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings: that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

High Sounding Titles.

In these days of excitement and extravagance it is quite common to meet with books—both religious and otherwise—the names of which have quite a high and showy sound. Not only is this aim at popularity found among those who figure in the higher circles, but also in those professing to have left that grade, and to have condescended "to men of low estate:" professing to be the simple followers of the meek and lowly Lamb of God, and to be observing all things that he has commanded.

We are therefore liable to be led astray, if we have not the organ of caution fully developed—if we do not closely heed the Apostles advice: "Prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good."

Being in the Companion Office for several days, and glancing over the catalogue of books in the Editor's library, the thought under consideration suggested itself to my mind.—I acknowledge myself, always to have been somewhat scrupulous on this head: and whenever a work fell into my hands with such a high sounding title, my mind felt somewhat prejudiced against it; from the fact, there are so many schemes now afloat, by which to make money. But notwithstanding my prejudices, I am free to own to the truthfulness of an old saying: "The abuse of a thing is no argument against it."—Although I have met with works, the title of which I did openly pronounce too bold or assuming; yet have I found others, the title of which sounded equally high: but upon proving them, they have removed my prejudice, and endeared themselves to my memory. As an instance, among others, I will allude to a work, entitled: "The Handwriting of God:" written by D. A. Randal of Columbus Ohio. The agent, Mr. Jos. H. Akers, of Martinsburg, Pa., an old acquaintance and friend of mine, came along with the book and described its merits as a book of travels: but being acquainted with my circumstances, and peculiarities, he did not press the matter very hard. But being persuaded that the character of the book would sustain the import of the title it bears, he kindly offered to let me read it through, and if I did not wish to keep it then, he would take it back again. Now I ask, who, that has any taste for book learning, or histories of travels, could or would have refused so kind an offer? I could not? But with the suspicion as above confessed, I commenced the perusal.

A familiarity soon sprang up between myself and the author. I had not turned very many leaves until he had led the mind into the land of Bible history; and by his observations of manners and customs, still prevailing; as well as of the fulfillment of ancient prophecy confirmed, elucidated and illustrated many things that heretofore had been somewhat mysterious. The author is so plain and unassuming in his style, that all who understand the language can comprehend what he says. By the time his observation and journey (not his fancy and imagination) had led my mind out into the wilderness, and which he does as if he took one by the hand, I at times almost imagined myself as standing beside him, gazing upon those spots, sacred in the memory of every true reader and believer of the Bible.

The first complete emotions of sublime feelings, that his eloquent description of scenes before him, kindled within me, was at Mounts Horeb and Sinai. There he leads the reader up, up, up! the rugged mountain cliffs, regardless of the bounds which Moses set; he breaks through, nor does he stop at the foot but gains the summit of one peak, and as near as possible of the other. There he takes his Bible and reads the wonderful scenes connected with the place, the awful manner in which the God of Israel manifested himself when Sinai was all on smoke as of fire—the sound of the trumpet exceeding loud; and the flashes of lightning playing around its summit; and the peals of thunder shaking its very base. There he also reads of the time when the prophet Elijah fled from the face of the persecuting queen Jezebel; when there in a cave, a wind, a fire, and an earthquake passed by. &c. Also of the Israelites encampment before the mount: and in a sublime manner portrays to the reader's mind the beauty and grandeur of the scenery in colors that I never had comprehended before. He then withdraws from his company; kneels upon the unpolished flinty rock and prays for his flock, or church, whom he had left in this far western country. Many other scenes described in said work are fresh in my mind; but fearing I might weary the patience of the readers, or be impeached with exaggeration I will pass them by.

In justice to both the author, and agents of the book I must say, that to me it is an interesting work to read; so much so, that when I was through with reading it the first time, I felt as though I were taking the parting hand of an excellent traveling companion; very much as I did feel in September A. D. 1866, at Washington city, when taking leave of brethren H. D. Davy and Joseph Henricks, after spending about three weeks with them, in the most pleasant and sociable manner among the brethren in Va., Tenn., and N. C.

In conclusion I would say to my courteous friend Akers: "Now I believe, not because of thy sayings," only. See John 4: 42. All scepticism of its title being inappropriate has been removed from my mind.

Praying and doing. You every day ask God to make you good, kind, true, and obedient children. At least so I hope. But are you also trying to do these things? God cannot make you good unless you are willing to be good. So you also have some things to do in this matter. Not only pray, but also to try to do God's will.

My Angel Mother.

There is a land beyond the river,
Where the skies are ever fair,
And we have an Angel mother,
Who is waiting for us there.
She went o'er the silent waters
At the rising of the sun,
And I know that she is happy,
For the Christian's crown is won.

Chorus:

Come, O boatman! row me over
To a fairer shore than this,
For my heart grows weary waiting,
For my Angel-mother's kiss.

In that land where she is waiting
For the ones she loved on earth
Sin and sorrow never enter,
But eternal joys have birth.
There the loved ones gone before us
Wait and watch beside the tide
For the friends they left behind them
On the river's earthly side.

When the solemn summons calls us
To the mansions of the blest,
We shall loose our earthly sorrows
In a sense of blissful rest.
There eternal peace and quiet
Fills the heart forever more,
And no pain can ever enter
On the river's farther shore.

Why Should a Man Swear?

I can conceive of no reason why he should, but often reasons why he should not:

1. It is mean. A man of high moral standing would almost as soon steal a sheep as swear.

2. It is vulgar. Altogether too mean for a decent man.

3. It is cowardly. Implying a fear of not being believed or obeyed.

4. It is ungentlemanly. A gentleman, according to Webster, is a genteel man, well bred—refined. Such a one will no more swear than go into the street and throw mud with a clodhopper.

5. It is indecent. Offensive to delicacy, and extremely unfit for human ears.

6. It is foolish. "Want of decency is want of sense."—Pope.

7. It is abusive. To the mind that conceives the oath, to the tongue which utters it, and to the person at whom it is aimed.

8. It is venomous; showing a man's heart to be a nest of vipers, and every time he swears one of them sticks out its head.

9. It is contemptible; forfeiting the respect of the wise and good.

10. It is wicked; violating the divine law, and provoking the displeasure of him who will not hold him guiltless who takes his name in vain.

Long Hair.

"Doth not even nature itself teach you that if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?"

What do we understand by long hair? How did Paul wear his hair? No doubt after the requirement of the law and the similitude of Christ. Christ did not come to destroy, but to fulfill the law. Paul saith he was blameless. Phil. 3: 6. Nor would he make void the law by Faith, any farther than where Christ revised it. Rom. 3: 31. Christ did not give us a new command concerning the hair. History tells us he had his hair parted on the middle of his head, hanging down to his shoulders, after the mode of the Nazarenes. This I doubt not being just about what the law required. Neither shall they shear their heads nor suffer their locks to grow long, they shall only poll their heads. Ezekiel 44: 20, Leviticus 19: 27, and 21: 5. This is after the German translation. There is no such thing as shaving or razor named in the German.

Now would Paul say it was a shame to do as Christ and the old fathers did, and some of our old brethren still wish to pattern after? No. Paul did not mean so. All he means is that our locks should not have their free course to grow as long as womans. "Whosoever is ashamed of me and of my words, of him will I also be ashamed." What is there in Jesus to be ashamed of? Is it because of the sign in Bethlehem? Luke 2: 12, 34. Or because he was a Nazarene, or because his visage was so marred that he hath no form nor comeliness nor beauty, that we should desire him? Isaiah 52: 14; 53: 28.

But Paul was not ashamed of all this. No. Even when he was accused before the great as a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarene, he did not deny, but confessed that he so worshiped the God of his Fathers, believing all things that are written in the law and in the prophets. Acts 24: 5, 14.

Again, we read that at a certain time he had a vow, and he had his head shorn. Acts 18: 18; 21; 24. This might be understood he had his head shorn to make that vow; but I understand he had his hair growing as long as that vow was on him, and afterwards had his locks shorn off. This we can easily discover if we look at the order in which the Israelites or Nazarites were to keep their vows. See Numbers 6: 5, Judges 13: 5, and 1st Samuel 1: 11. Now my dear brethren, I beg you to peruse these scriptures, and see why it should be wrong, and not more agreeable to the pattern of Christ, and his ancient followers, to wear the hair a little more differently from the world than some of our brethren do. It does not seem to be so much trouble any more for our brethren to wear their beards since it has got so fashionable among the world, but I fear we might still have the sign of the beast on our foreheads, or at least be a little too much ashamed of Jesus of Nazareth. Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Come and see out of love, for consideration.

JOHN S. NEWCOMER.

Social Meetings.

"Then they that feared the Lord, spake often one to another." Mal. 3: 16.

We are glad to know that God's ancient people did assemble, and experience has taught us the more frequently we meet and talk of our hopes and fears, the stronger will be our Christian ties. The apostle Paul says, "teaching and admonishing one another." Brethren, when we meet for a social religious meeting, speak together of Jesus your Savior, of your trials and troubles, your victories. Whenever you meet a fellow Christian, do not fail to speak of the things of Jesus; you can thus help each other in the right way. You will have less disposition to find fault, and have fewer difficulties. You will then become a loving band of praying brethren. Christians are Christ's only representatives upon earth. Oh, then, live together in love, strive to become like your Divine Master.

Brotherly Love.

I read an article in the Companion, vol. 6: No. 7, headed "Brotherly Love," written by brother I. N. Crosswait. While perusing the same my mind was drawn closely to the subject of Brotherly Love. What a strong command, given by the Savior, that his followers should love one another with the love that was in our dear Savior while here in the flesh. Oh, to see the coldness that is exhibited sometimes by one brother towards the other, or one sister towards the other. I think sometimes, is it possible that we who have covenanted with the dear Savior when we joined the church, that we would forsake all worldly lusts, and our old sinful ways, and live and lead a reformed life; a promise we made before Almighty God, and the Holy Angels, and a multitude of human witnesses, that we would live soberly, righteously henceforth, and then come so far short as we do sometimes, in exhibiting that love towards each other by our actions. 1st John 2: 4. He that saith, "I know him and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 5th verse. "But whoso keepeth his word in him verily is the love of God perfected. Hereby know we that we are in him." 10 verse. "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him." 11th verse. "But he that hateth his brother is in darkness and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." Dear brethren and sisters, we may say that we love our brother or sister, and by our actions we shamefully deny it before God and man, for actions speak louder than words, in many cases. And oh, why is it that we see so much of this coldness, the spirit of envy, jealousy, and partiality exhibiting itself as it does. We certainly have come into those "last and perilous times, when we will be lovers of ourselves more than lovers of the dear Savior and his commands. Are we letting our lights shine as we are commanded? I fear not. And why? Because we seek not, nor ask for that true light. We want to go along with one foot in the church and the other in the world, living a kind of moral life, careless and prayerless, half ashamed of the Savior to confess him publicly; ashamed to be caught on our knees praying in our families, night and morning, around the family altar. We have no relish or desire to do so, the enemy telling us it is not necessary if we pray in secret once and awhile, as we are going about our daily business. It is all sufficient. But, dear brother and sister, we must come out as bold soldiers of the cross, and the only way to accomplish it is to come humbly before God on our knees, and ask him for the knowledge of the truth, and that Divine love that we must have dwelling in us, to become true followers of the meek Lamb of God. Oh, that we would be more careful, and prayerful, from day to day, and so spend our short time in this world, that it may be acceptable to our heavenly Father. Then we would exhibit that true love one towards the other. Oh, what a glorious, happy time we could then have here together, and cheer each other on our way to that heavenly Canaan.

The Missing Disciple.

It was a dark and gloomy evening when the doors of an obscure house in Jerusalem were closed upon a little number of plain men, who, with a few women connected with them, had assembled for prayer, and as they prayed they wept at the prostration of all their earthly hopes. They were discouraged and disheartened, for their Lord was taken from them, and he whom they trusted to have redeemed Israel was by wicked hands crucified and slain. They were weakened also by dejection. Their number had always been small and feeble. The great and learned, and the rich were never with them. Judas had apostatized. Peter, though reclaimed, had once denied his Master, and they dared not rely upon him. And now, as they looked around the room upon each familiar face, they became more disheartened, for they missed another of their little number. Thomas, one of the twelve, called Dydymus, was not with them. How discouraging. Could it be that Thomas had apostatized, like Judas, or denied his Lord like Peter? If not, what could have happened? What had prevented him from coming to the prayer-meeting? Thomas had been a forward man, and if not as much so as Peter, yet more so than some others, for once when Jesus informed the disciples of the death of Lazarus, Thomas was the first to speak, and proposed to his fellows that they should go and die with him. Yet in this day of gloom, in this hour of severe trial, when men should have been prompt if ever, Thomas was missing. But where was he? Oh! where was he? Could Thomas have been sick? The sacred historian is silent on that point. Good men are as liable to sickness as others. And when really sick, men are excusable for absence from any religious meeting whatever. But are there not some whose seats are vacant in the house of God on the Sabbath, on the plea of ill health, who are at their business early on Monday morning, and continue it through the week? Oh, this Sunday sickness, how it sometimes thins the house of God! The prayer-meeting, too, is affected by it.

We repeat the question, where was Thomas? Had some important worldly business detained him from meeting with his brethren on that occasion? Business is sometimes pleaded in excuse for absence from religious meetings during the week, and we can readily imagine cases where the excuse is valid, but it is not always, and probably not often. The great end of life is to serve God, and prepare for heaven. For this we were brought into the world, and for this we have been sustained hitherto, and we should take good heed that we suffer not worldly things to hinder, much less to exclude this great work of life. Thomas had a soul to be saved; he had been a member of Christ's family for three years. As he travelled about the land and was at this time a stranger in Jerusalem, we have no reason to believe that business prevented him from meeting with his brethren to pray; but whatever may have been his excuse, Thomas was the greatest loser by absenting himself from the prayer-meeting, for some of the most heavenly consolations were imparted to those who were present when the disciples went in and shut the door. They were in deep sorrow. The crucifixion and all the awful scenes of Calvary were before them, and as they prayed they lamented and wept; but in the midst of their gloom, a heavenly form stands among them. It is their Savior; they know his welcome face, they hear his well known voice. As he says, "Peace be unto you," what a change came over their feelings! Their mourning was turned into joy. "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." But Thomas lost all this; he was not there. And while his brethren were filled with joy, he, as before, was filled with sorrow.

The absence of Thomas from the prayer-meeting led him to the crying sin of unbelief. When the disciples told him that they had seen the Lord, he would not believe it. He had evidently become hardened in unbelief. His fellow disciples were sincere men, and he must have known they would not tell him an untruth, and still he would not believe them. His language was most unbelieving. "But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the prints of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." Had Thomas been at the prayer-meeting when the Lord came into the midst of his disciples, he would not have talked in this unbecoming manner; but he was away, and the consequence was his heart was hardened in unbelief.

Added to all the rest, the conduct of Thomas was an injury to the cause of religion. It was said of the disciples in another case, that the Jewish magistrates took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. They remembered that these were the men whom they had found uniform in their attachment to their master and his cause, for the enemies of Christ always watch the conduct of professed Christians. What must have been their impressions to see Thomas absenting himself while his brethren were assembled for prayer. Perhaps they did thus observe him and were hardened in sin on his account. "Ah," they would exclaim, "here is one of these reformers occupying himself with the business or pleasure of the world, while his brethren are praying. This is a specimen of the new religion. It will soon die away." Thus is religion injured by those professed Christians, who neglect the meeting for prayer.

And perhaps religion is injured in another way. Some inquiring, yet trembling soul may be hindered. Such persons always look to professed disciples for examples, and if these are remiss and careless, the result may be the loss of a soul. Reader, are you a professor of the name of Christ? Have you enrolled yourself with his people, and did you not covenant to avoid all sinful stumbling-blocks, and to walk with your brethren in unity and love, seeking the prosperity and enlargement of the church of which you are a member? And did you not do this voluntarily? How then can you justify yourself in the neglect of any of those means which God has always blessed to the comfort and edification of his people. The prayer-meeting stands prominent among the means which preserve the life and power of religion in the church. It is the spiritual thermometer, indicating the warmth or coldness of religion among a people. Let it no longer be neglected, especially by those who professed to love Christ; and when he comes into the midst of his people, as he ever does when they assemble in his name, let none, like Thomas, be missing from the place, lest they fail of the blessing.

LYDIA LAUVER.

Shainesville, Ohio.

WEARY OF LIFE.—Yes, it comes to the Christian sometimes in his conflicts with self and sin, and all the devices of satan to grow weary of the ceaseless warfare and say, "I am weary of life. Would that I might die." He should remember, however, that 'the race is not to the strong,' and the promise is to "him that endureth to the end." Oh, how much is included in the word "endureth!"—how much of stern toil, of care, of bitter sorrow. He who gave this promise knew full well all that his children would be called to endure. He himself trod life's darkest, roughest, paths. He was tempted like as we are tempted, drank to its dregs the bitter cup of sorrow and affliction, was acquainted with the most poignant grief, but never, never from his lips went up the murmur, "I am weary of life. Would that I might die and escape all its evils." The road of life is hard at the best, and our feet bleed and "scourging winds scathe us" as we grope on. But from out the darkness shines the cheering promise breathed by the "man of sorrows," "I will be with you to cheer and support you even unto the end." Let us meet bravely and bear patiently all the ills of life, and learn to "suffer and be strong," knowing that the promise is sure to all such as endure unto the end. How much more like Christ would we be if, under all circumstances, we could lift to heaven an unclouded brow and in all sincerity say, "Not my will, O God, but thine be done."

"Christ says, 'If ye love me'—what? Enthusiize—show it in rapture and be filled with joy? No. 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.' He accepts these things in lieu of emotions."

Guard against reading too much or too rapidly. Read rather with attention; lay the book often down; impress upon your mind what you have read, and reflect upon it.

The Call for 1000.

"I have often felt like doing something for you, but could think of no one that would likely want to take the Companion. But at last I made an effort and succeeded in getting two subscribers, and I know if they will read the paper carefully they will find it both edifying and instructive." So says sister HANNAH WERTZ, of Johnstown, Pa., and her experience gives another testimony to the assertion that something may be done when an effort is made.

Joseph Zahn, Pyrmont, Indiana, sends us seven subscribers.

A number of others have filled their quotas. For a list of them, see our "monies received." We have added forty names during the past week. This leaves us seven hundred and sixty to make up. A few more efforts and we shall reach the point. Now kind friends will you come to the work? We mean you who have not yet sent us a subscriber under this call. Remember we claim that you owe us an effort to get one subscriber, besides the $1.50 which you have paid. You pay the $1.50 for the paper, and we claim an effort to get one subscriber, for sending you a first-class paper at a low price. The more you appreciate our labors the stronger will be the efforts.

"Don't Talk of Commission.

I want nothing for what I do in behalf of the C. F. C. and P. Y. until you have 10.000 subscribers for each. After that I will take the usual commission of ten per cent."

So says one of our friends. Very well, brother, if you can stand it, we see no reason why we should object. We can then extend our liberality a little farther toward those who are in less favorable circumstances. Your favors are highly appreciated.

Traveling Agent.

We have appointed brother Samuel A. Moore, of New Enterprise, Bedford county, Pa., a traveling agent for this office. Any orders for books, or subscriptions through him will be promptly attended to.

Answers to Correspondents

MARGARET DEARDORFF. Yes; it is marked paid.

JOHN ARNOLD. Occupy with them, and see if they will not bring a sub. or two.

JACOB FISHER. The money came all right, and the paper is being sent.

JONATHAN MYERS. The order has come to hand, but the "Advice Sheet" from your Post Master to ours, is missing.

G. W. STUDEBAKER. The order has not yet come to hand. Are you holding it as your receipt?

JESSE ROOP. Think it will be all right now. Cannot tell why the paper does not go to Elias Fisher.

"THE DYING BROTHER." We will insert the above song, also known as the "California Brothers" in the May No. of the Pious Youth, where we think it is more appropriate than in the Companion. The price of the Youth is 10cts a nnmber or 1.00 per Annum. Back numbers furnished from beginning.

J. B. GIBBLE. You will see by referring to No. 13 that arrangements have been made with the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad for excursion to Annual Meeting. Also in this week's paper brother John P. Ebersole gives notice that he has made the same arrangements. Farther information will be given in our next.

"OWE NO MAN ANYTHING." Our view upon this passage is that it implies that we ought to pay for what we get

HENRY SMELTZER. We will freely change your address, if you will inform us where from, that is where you are now getting your paper. This is absolutely necessary.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be writt en upon one side of the sheet only.

The brethren, especially the ministering brethren, that will attend the District Meeting, in Adams county, are informed that the brethren in Codorous congregation, will have a Lovefeast on the 19th and 20th of May, God willing, and that we wish them to stop with us over the feast. It will be on the railroad, 5 miles below York, on the Northern Central road. Please inform your father, Daniel M. and Isaac Myers, in particular, because we wish them to be with us if they can. By order of the church. THOMAS GRAY.

Proposed Visit.

On the evening of the 4th of May, at Belsana, at Br. Brallier's. On the evening of the 5th at brother Samuel Brallier's, at the Pike. And on the evening of the 6th at Scalp-level, and remain over Lord's day. This will we do if the Lord will.

MARK MINSOR.

Dear Brother Holsinger: I am but a new reader of the Companion having only received and read 13 Nos. of the present volume, yet I can say that I like its character well, and could wish its introduction into every family in the Brotherhood.—Because to my mind a paper of its nature, system of conducting, and with such able contributors, cannot help to effect and bring its candid readers to such a unity of mind, and oneness of understanding of the Scriptures and its essential practice, as decrees and commandments through any other channel can accomplish. Some say, too much controversy, too much contentions among brethren. It will not do.—It will pull down, instead of building up. Now I do not think that brethren and sisters write their articles with any such intention, and if they do happen to differ somewhat, I take replies as only candid and sincere reasonings, and try to profit by them. I cannot even see any wrong, in a friendly and well meaning controversy, for such are the leading steps to reformation. Suppress reasonable controversy, and reformation will cease, and since it is evident that different opinions will continue, controversy, and a contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, is a necessity.

The two leading subjects of inquiry, as I see, and understand seem to be as to what the Savior alluded to, in the parable of the elder and younger sons, and also what is understood, or should be understood, by Paradise. I do not feel myself fully able, to describe the various ideas I have heard advanced on these subjects, nor feel qualified to give the understanding I have gathered from the reading. Yet I would, if permitted, say, that I cannot fully give my approbation to the explanation, although I fully appreciate the efforts made to give light on the very important subjects. And do candidly wish I had the ability to convey my simple understanding to others. But since I cannot undertake this, I desire that some brother might try and give the fruits of his investigation to the readers of the C. F. C., on this following suggestion. In the first place to take Divine nature, as it is exemplified by the teaching of the word of God, as the elder son, of that certain man. And human nature, as being in the same household with the elder son and the father, until this human nature, or the younger son demanded all that belonged to him, (that was earthly) or till human nature became degenerated.

On the subject of Paradise I would suggest, respectfully and in love, that the term, state, or condition be used instead of place, or locality. Then it may perhaps agree better with all.

Beloved brethren and sisters in Christ our Lord; let us be intent to become one in mind, one in thought, and one in action, then only will we be that one Body, that one Church, which Christ Jesus the only begotten Son of God the Father, has purchased with his own precious blood. Do not get weary in doing good.—You who have the ability to write, let us hear what the Spirit says to the Churches, or to the members which compose them, which is all the same. Yours, with christian affection.

CHRISTIAN SHANK.

Lawrence, Kansas.

Brother Holsinger; Having been called by brethren near Pierceton, Ind., to assist doing some church business, I returned from there to this place, called Webster, to visit the brethren here, where some twenty years ago, I and other brethren from Turkey Creek, held forth Christ and him crucified, to the first settlers of this place. There were then but a few families who had moved from Tuscarawas, Ohio, by the names of Mack and Shock. After some years, the number had multiplied, and they were organized with Philip Rothenberger (Swiss brother) and Conrad Brumbaugh for their leaders, and though the adversary hath severely tried them they have steadily increased in number, and that they may be encouraged in their divine life, and become more dead unto this world, I shall drop these few lines and say: Dear brethren and sisters; as you are surrounded with many and various temptations, and even satan is not idle in your midst, to divert you from the object in view, namely, peace and holiness, be watchful, be vigilant, be prayerful, and prudent. The greater distance you keep from the world, and the closer to one another and the church, the safer you are, and the easier it will be to lead a divine life and assimilate, or become like the pattern—Jesus Christ. You have, perhaps, failed in being immerged in the body of this world, which is divided and in opposition to the body of Christ, the church. How can it be possible to be a member of two bodies that are so adverse to each other as the body politic, and the body of Christ. Paul questions: "Can you eat of the Lord's table, and that of the devils? You may be offended at me for this expression, and call me to account; but I only answer where there is division and hatred there is the work of the devil, and that he may not get a hold of any of us, Jesus said: "If thy brother trespass against thee, tell him his fault," to gain thy brother, that is, to gain union.

Now, whatever causes hard feelings leads to disunion, and if there is not union maintained in the body of Jesus Christ, there can be no prosperity. I know quite well satan can no longer defame our doctrine successfully, but he can defame our character individually, and collectively, namely as a body, and that is his watchword, now, everywhere. None of my dear readers will think me out of my place when I see the enemy approaching and call the alarm; though I am not regularly an alarmist, yet since there are so many of my brethren of such an easy disposition that they are inclined to play at ease with the vain bubbles of this world, that I am under concern for them to rouse them from their dreaming security.

When I look on the bright side of the subject my heart bounds for joy and pleasing anticipations for the future—for in spite of all the devices of the enemy, the borders of Emmanuel are still enlarged, and though many a young man, as well as old ones, turn away sorrowful when they are called upon to part with their worldly possessions, for the benefit of the poor, to give them the Gospel, there are still more and more who glorify the Lord, that they are counted worthy to suffer poverty and even reproach in giving the bread of life to the famishing poor. The blissful sensation they experience when they have cast their bread upon the waters, and it returns again with accumulated bounty, makes them strong and valiant, and if they could whisper into the ears of the wealthy and say, Just try it to communicate of the abundance the Lord hath blest you with, they would do it; but they dare not speak loud for fear it would look as if they wanted it themselves. My sheet is full. I close abruptly. Yours in love.

F. P. LOHR.

Dear Brother and Sister in the Lord: After you left this morning I learned of brother L. of your unpleasant situation as members in the church in which you reside. I can, therefore, not forbear addressing a few lines of consolation and encouragement, knowing from my own experience, as well as from observation, how difficult it is for us when yet very young and unexperienced in the church, to bear up under reproaches and harsh treatment, as I learn you have met with; but remember, when children were brought unto Jesus, and the disciples rebuking them that brought them, the kind Savior said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of God." That dear Savior is as kind to-day as he was then, and if you are truly humble and meek as little children you are to-day as well beloved by him as those were, eighteen hundred years ago.

It is true, dear brother and sister, we that are set as watchmen over the work of Jesus, have a continual combat with the devices of satan, and his insinuations that he whispers into the ears of the young and inexperienced, that it is not so material about what you wear and what company you are in, nevertheless "Evil communications corrupt good manners," and if we wear the garment of sin we shall be polluted, and we would rather that all of our dear young brethren and sisters as well as older ones, could see the propriety of abstaining from every thing that is offensive and grievous, and that may have the least appearance of pride; yet we are called upon to reprove, exhort and admonish with all long suffering and forbearance. Indeed I often feel sorry to see my dear brethren act so hastily with young members, under the impression of duty; when my own experience hath taught me that loving kindness produces better effects than strenuous exactness doth. In your case I would say in all kindness; try to lay off everything that may be gay and after the style of the fashionable world, and show a meek disposition as becometh a child of God; ask the brethren to bear with you a little longer. Don't be surly and obstinate. Remember you will not find better pasture than among the flock of Jesus. If even here and there his shepherds are not of the most approved kind, you know that one of old would have had fire fall from heaven because people did not answer his wishes. I indeed fear that spirit is cultivated a little too much in many places, and if I could reach the understanding of every ministering brother I would say, be kind, be gentle with the little ones, visit them privately often, show them that you love them, and that you have a real concern for their soul's welfare, you cannot fail but gain them, for love begets love. Yours in the bonds of the gospel.

Dear Brother Editor; Inasmuch as I have learned that some of our brethren in the east expect to stop with us on their way to the Annual Meeting, if they knew where and how, I wish you to give the desired information, which is as follows: Stop off at the Quarry Station, on the North Western railroad. This Quarry Station is 276 miles west of Chicago, and 206 miles east of Council Bluffs, and 1½ miles south of my place, and our meeting house 1½ miles North of my place, where we expect brethren from a distance to preach to us on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, being the 3rd, 4th, and 5th of June next. We give a hearty invitation to all who desire to be with us on that occasion, and if they inform me when they will be at the Quarry Station, they shall find a conveyance to my house. On Monday, the 6th of June, they can go by public or private conveyance from here to the place of the Annual Council, which is to commence on the 7th of June. My address is Quarry P. O., Marshall county, Iowa.

ELDER JOHN MURRAY.

Brother Henry; As I have not much to do this morning, I thought I would say something for the Companion. We know that God never made one man above another, for all are born of a woman, and with the same spirit, but we know, when we come to know right from wrong, then come two spirits, one of God and one of the Devil. One of those two spirits we must serve. We can serve either of them, but we read there is but one spirit for man to worship, and that is the spirit of Christ Jesus. We must deny the spirit of the devil, if we ever expect to enter into the kingdom of Glory, where God is, and all the holy angels. He said, "my yoke is easy and my burden is light." It seems to me that there is no man born that cannot wear an easy yoke, and a light burden. If we serve the devil, we cannot have an easy yoke. Envy, hatred, malice, strife, and swearing, lying, tattling, makes a a heavy yoke. Who would not take up the easy yoke of Jesus and learn of him? B. V. ISENBERG.

Information Wanted.

There is a man living near Whitesville, Missouri, by the name of Solomon Naugle, who claims to have been a member of the church of the Brethren, and wishes to be received as such by the brethren here, but cannot, under the present circumstances, from the fact that he has no certificate of his having been a member, and the brethren here are unacquainted with the matter. He says he was baptized in Seneca County, Ohio, about twenty years ago. The names of the ministers of that congregation were John P. Ebersole, Isaac Hardsauck, Haynes, and Alldifer. He was baptized by Haynes.

He left Senica county and moved to Henry county, and there joined the United Brethren, and it is supposed associated with them until he moved to this country. He also states that he received a letter of recommendation from the Brethren in Senica county Ohio, but by moving it got misplaced. If any of the brethren inform the brethren here about the subject of our notice, it would be well to write immediately, through the Companion or privately, for his silvery locks tell us that his race is almost run.

Rail Road Notice.

I have made arrangements with the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne and Chicago R. R., for excursion from Pittsburg to Chicago. Those wishing to pass over that road at excursion rates, must obtain an order, and by presenting said order to the ticket agent at any of the following stations, they will sell you a ticket from the first to the sixth of June, good to return until the 16th of June, viz: Pittsburg, Columbiana, Salem, Alliance, Canton, Wooster, Loudonville, Mansfield, Crestline, Bucyrus, Upper Sandusky, Forest, Dunkirk, Lima, Delphi, VanWert, Ft. Wayne, Columbia, Pierceton, Warsaw, Bourbon, Plymouth, Valparaiso. I want the housekeepers of every congregation, or some one authorized by the congregation, to let me know by letter immediately, how many orders they will want and I will send them as soon as they notify me. Give name and post office in full. My address is: Fostoria, Seneca county, Ohio.

JOHN P. EBERSOLE.

Brother Henry; Permit me to express my mind through your columns on the inconsistency for Brethren to engage in political contests, by aiding and putting men into power, either by casting their ballot or otherwise, and afterwards, in case of trouble, when their help is needed, refuse to sustain or aid them, either in time of war or otherwise. They then claim the non-resistance protection from the government. I am aware that a good many brethren do not side with me in this, but I hope they will bear with my remarks, and at least not become offended, using charity enough to give it a candid perusal before they pass judgment.

I once was a pretty active politician and could see no harm in it, but for the last two or three years I have made it a subject of inquiry, whether we can consistently engage in politics. We are to be a separate people from the world, and I have come to the conclusion, that if ever power is invested in the man of the world, it is the law making power, and those that have the same to enforce. Now as we that profess to be the followers of Christ, must be a separate people from that body, how can we consistently use our means and power to put men in that position, and, as I remarked before, refuse to sustain them when difficulties arise. But says one: The constitution gives that position. So it does, but the government changes sometimes, and I would not think or feel so ready to ask the protection from the party in power whom I had refused to sustain. If I would I must come to the conclusion that if he granted me protection as a non-resistant he was doing more for me—who had treated him as an enemy—than I was willing to do for him, and yet claim to be a child of God. My dear brethren, it appears to me that there is evidently a want of faith on our part. I have no doubt but that if we will exercise true faith in the protective Providence of God that he will take care of us, and if we even forsake all for Christ's sake we shall be abundantly comforted in the present world, and in the world to come have life eternal. Now, brethren, if this is the reward that we are to receive, why can we not forsake the pleasures of this world a little more, and increase by degrees in the knowledge of the Lord.

We should be true to our country, and discharge our duties to our country, where such duty does not conflict with our duty to God. Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. But says one, "we are commanded to be subject to higher powers." So I say, when these powers do not conflict with duties we owe to God. We are commanded to obey that power, but it must be a God fearing power, to make it obligatory; for the apostle Peter said to that power we shou'd obey God rather than man. But says one, "we are not compelled; we can use our own pleasure in this subject. This only makes it worse on our side, if we willingly violate this privilege. But we hear again that it is no violation of the laws of God. Let this be as it may, we are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil, and this appears to be an evil in my estimation. Brethren, let us try to become more united. Think a little of the deluge of war and bloodshed, we have just passed through. If we look around almost every church has been shaken to the very foundation, north and south, scattering each other as brothers in the same church, just because the love of God was scarcely luke-warm.

Just look at the different Christian sects. When the war broke out, all at once, we could see the clergy and their whole congregation repair to the field of battle and justify themselves that they had a Divine right to slay their brethren for no other reason than that they did not just think as they did. Now my brethren, if we do not wish to drift, inch by inch, into the same channel, let us lay aside our privileges that we can so safely do without, and engage more in the service of the Lord, and have been taught by his disciples. It is almost an every day occurrence, that some one of our members is cast up for bad behavior and it is too true, and we are just stumbling blocks in the way of others that would perhaps come in if we would be more particular in our walks and conversation. I will come to a close, my article has grown much larger than I expected it should. but I ask my brethren to bear with me in love, and what I have tried to write is out of love to the cause of Christ. Let us cultivate charity, and bear with each other, and still become more attached to the word of God and to each other in love, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

ISAAC BARTOW.

Millerstown, Pa.

Brother Henry; I wish to write a few lines to you in order to let the Brethren who are traveling know where we live. It matters not whether they are on a preaching tour, or searching for a location, we are always glad when brethren come to see us. And especially to the ministering brethren we would say: make this one of your passing ways, and come over and help us, so that we may all be built up in the most holy faith, that we may be strengthened in our faith and go on our way rejoicing and contend more earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, that we also may be able to bring many souls to Christ.

We number about sixty-five members in this arm of the church. Officers: Two speakers and four deacons. We in our weakness and by the help of God, are still trying to keep the ark of the Lord moving along slowly, and to encourage one another in our pilgrimage here below.

Now, then, as the A. M. will be in this State this spring, if God is willing, no doubt there will be a good many brethren from the Eastern States to the A. M., and probably some will want to look at the country as they pass along. To such we would say, give us a call. We are living in a good and healthy country, and plenty of stone coal, timber and rock. Mills plenty, land rates from seven to fifty dollars per acre. We are in the south east part of Keokuk county. Our meeting-house is six miles north-west of Richland, and eighteen miles north of Fairfield, our nearest railroad station, at this time. Ministering brethren or others coming by Railroad, and expecting to stop with us a few days should be at Fairfield by the 28th of May. We will meet brethren at Fairfield if notified in time of their arrival.

Addres C. Wonderlich, or myself, at Richland, Keokuk county, Iowa.

JOHN FRITZ.

PLATTSBURG, Mo., }
April 10th, 1870. }

Brother Henry; I must intrude a little more upon the columns of the Companion. Since I last wrote I have received good encouragement from parts of the brotherhood, chiefly all from sisters, in relation to our meeting-house. I received a letter from a sister in Lancaster county, Pa., which was encouraging to us. She requested me to withhold her name and amount. I will grant her request, but would say; your money has been applied to the paying of our house. We hope and pray that the Lord may reward you at the resurrection of the just. I have received $2.00 from brother Henricks, of Ohio. I have receipted to one sister, of Maryland, who contributed liberally to our wants, by private letter, by her request. Still hope that many brethren will respond to our call, as the cause is God's and must prevail. So far as heard from the sisters are far ahead. Will you allow this brethren? All that I have received, and all I shall receive hereafter, I shall receipt through the Companion, or by private letter, when requested.

DANIEL D. SELL.

Lovefeast in the Middle Creek congregation, Mahaska county, Iowa, on the first and second days of June. The meeting will be with brother P. Pfoutz's, seventy-five miles south of the place of Annual Meeting.

By order of the church.

S. P. MILLER.

Brother Henry; Please notice that we, the Brethren composing the Panther Creek branch, Dallas county, Iowa, expect to hold a Lovefeast, the Lord willing, on the 11th and 12th of June, at the house of brother Robert Badgers, 6½ miles North of Adel. This will be the first lovefeast ever held in Dallas county. We extend a hearty invitation to the brethren and sisters generally, especially the ministering brethren. By order of the church.

C. LONG.

What course is to be pursued when ministers fail to enforce church discipline? For instance, when a man who has been a preacher in the church is expelled, and certain members continue to fellowship him as a brother, going to hear him preach when the brethren have meeting in the vicinity at the same time, and persuading other members to accompany them, thus causing a division and dissatisfaction throughout the church. When our officials fail to bring such to an account is it not exceedingly demoralizing and a great injury to the cause? Would it not be well for the Annual Council to set any such church in order by enforcing strict discipline? We think it is certainly lowering the standard of Christian dignity when this state of affairs is allowed to exist. What is to be done?

J. S. THOMAS.

Philadelphia.

The Brethren of Rock River congregation, Lee county, Ill., expect to hold a Lovefeast on the 26th and 27th of May, 10 A. M. We give a hearty invitation to the Brethren coming from the east to the Annual Meeting, to call with us. Come to Franklin Grove; there you will be taken to the meeting house, where the Annual Meeting was in 1865. There are five lovefeasts in rotation in Northern Ill., after our lovefeast, before the brethren have to cross the Mississippi to Annual Meeting.

ANDREW M. DEARDORFF.

Brother Henry; Please announce through the C. F. C., that the Brethren in Upper Canawago congregation, Adams county, expect to hold a Communion Meeting on Saturday, May 14th, at the Brethren's meeting-house, within about 4 miles of the stopping off place, New Oxford. We heartily invite the delegates, (especially ministering brethren.) The delegates who (N. B.) intend coming by railroad to New Oxford, from Hanover Junction, should come by the noon train to New Oxford, Saturday, May 14. Yes, all intending coming by railroad to New Oxford, should arrive there at noon. We intend holding meeting on Sunday, May 15th, at as many places as possible. Brethren will be met at Oxford, noon train, to convey them to place of meeting. If two or four of the ministering Brethren coming by way of Cumberland Valley railroad from Carlisle to Mount Holly, would please write in time, and address Jacob P. Lerew, York Sulphur Springs, Adams county. The brethren should be at Mount Holly depot, Saturday, May 14th. And they there would be met, and conveyed to brother J. P. Lerew's house, distance about 6 miles. They would hold meeting at Latimore meeting-house, near York S. Springs.

A. BROWN.

In addition to the above we are requested to say that those who come to Harrisburg by Saturday noon, and will take the one o'clock train on the Cumberland Valley railroad, to Carlisle, and thence by branch road to Mt. Holly, will be meet there, entertained over Sunday, and then conveyed to place of District Meeting. We are informed that by taking this route it will cost less than half the fare from Harrisburg, required to go by way of York and Hanover, &c. Those who expect to take this route should address brother Lerew, as above.

Announcements.

The next Annual Meeting will be held in the Brethren's meeting-house, 4 miles south of the city of Waterloo, Black Hawk County, Iowa, and will begin on Tuesday after Pentecost, June 7th, next.

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

In Osceola, St. Clair county, Mo., November 10th, 1869, brother JACOB F. CRIPE, oldest son of brother Christian and sister Catharine Cripe; aged 24 years, 2 months, and 14 days. He leaves a wife and one child, and many relatives. He was unprepared for death when he took sick. He called on the Brethren to pray for him, and during his sickness they carried him into the water and baptized him. He lived about fifteen days after, and died with bright prospects for the life to come. Funeral services by Jacob Ulrey, and John Ulrey.

SUSANNAH MUSSELMAN.

In Marrion, Indiana county Pa., in Montgomery branch, March the 24th JONATHAN W. CARROLL, son of friend J. F. and sister Barbara Carroll; aged three years, and fifteen days. Funeral services at the house, from John 11 : 25 : 26. by Mark Minser.

P. BEER.

In Waterloo, Iowa, March 28th, sister ANNA EBY, wife of Dr. Samuel Eby; aged 43 years, 8 months, 17 days. Disease Consumption. Sister Anna had a good hope, looking forward for the crown after death. The dear sister felt concerned for her dear sisters in the Lord. She expressed herself in this wise, that some of the sisters will dress very plainly, but have "fancy fixings" in their houses, which is wrong. They might just as well put it on themselves, for if their heart is proud it is no difference where it manifests itself. This conversation took place four days previous to her death. O could we all feel so deeply concerned to serve the Lord, as the dying sister did.

On the 28th of March, of Heart Disease and Dropsy, KATHARINE, wife of Wm. LOEHR, after suffering nearly two years with Inflammatory Rheumatism. She leaves four children and a sorrowing husband. May this second bereavement bring him near to Him who can heal all wounds. Her age is not known to me. F. P. LOEHR.

In the Clover Creek congregation, Blair Co., Pa., April 14th, HARRY, son of friend Martin B. and Sarah MILLER; aged 1 year and 27 days. Funeral services by our friend A. Bowers and the writer, from 1 Peter 1 : 24.

S. A. MOORE.

In the White Oak branch, Lancaster county, Pa., Nov. 12, 1869, SYBILLA, daughter of brother Benjamin and sister Sybilla EBY; aged 4 years, and 5 days. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Acts 17 : 30, 31.

In the Chiques Creek branch, Lancaster county, Pa., Dec. 5, 1869, friend WM KOBB, aged 71 years, 3 months, and 13 days. Funeral services by friend Harple.

In the same branch, Dec. 28, 1869, ELIZABETH, widow of Abraham WIMER, who died about 9 years ago, aged 84 years, and 4 days. She was a member of the River Brethren church for many years. Funeral services by brother Jacob Reider, and Henry Engle, River Brethren, from Isaiah 38 : 1.

In the same branch, Feb. 8, sister BARBARA MASTERSON; aged 86 years, 7 months, and 6 days. She was a consistent member of the church for many years. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Revelation 7 : 5 last verses.

In the same branch, March 11th, MARY ANN, only daughter of friend Peter and Rebecca GINDER; aged 4 years, 11 months, and 7 days. Funeral services by the River Brethren.

E. G. ZUG.

In the Cherry Grove branch, Carroll Co., Ills., April 8th, at the residence of brother Isaac Rowland, sister SARAH STITZLER; aged 63 years, 3 months, and 25 days. Our sister became a member of the church long since, and lived until the time of her death, faithful in the service of the Lord, having a good hope of a resurrection to life eternal. Her remains were interred at Arnold's Grove, followed by a large concourse of sympathizing friends. Funeral services by brother Henry Martin, and others from Rev. 14 : 12 13.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

A Fragment

To a Poor Brother and Sister.

Providence has cast your lot among those who possess but little temporal property, but you may have all the more reason, on this account, to be thankful and contented. When the Dispenser of all good empties his Cornucopia into our lap, we find few, perhaps none who will say, stay Thy hand it is enough. But when the mandate comes, "go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor," there is a general disposition to demur. Poverty is no sin, per se, although the causes that lead to it are often criminal. Who can be poorer than Christ? And yet he was in the condition that secured the highest possible exaltation and glory. It is one of the blighting sins of the Church, that there is so much importance attached to wealth. If right views were cherished universally on this point, resulting in a true Christian consecration of our means, we would have Christ all but visibly walking in our midst. "Not far from every one of you," would become a thrilling realization. Pentecosts would take place at Jerusalem & the tide of Divine Life would again flow into the adjacent territories, Mammon wields his sceptre in too many hearts, to allow the strength and freshness and beauty that should characterize the Church of the living God. Paul says truly "the love of money is the root of all evil." To be rich is no more a sin than to be poor; but it is too often allowed to usurp the place of moral qualities, giving position and influence and authority, thus too often introducing partiality into the Church, which engendres "confusion and every evil work." To "lay up treasure on earth" is a direct violation of the behest of the Almighty; and yet how many, even in Zion, struggle and toil, and sacrifice health and comfort, for the accumulation of worldly property, as they never did for the promotion of Christianity. The faith and love of many are too dwarfed and feeble to believe what the Holy Ghost has recorded in Acts. 20: 35; and yet the principle there enjoined is the great, grand, glorious truth on which our salvation depends. 2 Cor. 8; 9. The love of Christ invariably constrains to sacrifice. It is the very essence of Christianity. True religion gives liberally; but wisely. It seeks wisdom from above in the distributing of its bounties. When the love of God impels, and the wisdom of God directs, we will hold all we have at the disposal of the great Proprietor. "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" "Why dost thou glory as if thou hadst not received it?" Whether spiritual or temporal gifts, to retain or use them without Divine permission, is to abuse them. How dear Christ is to us, is manifest from our love to his cause, and our efforts to fulfill the prayer, "Thy kingdom come." We are to be "diligent in business," as well as "fervent in spirit," and if we take heed to the latter, we prevent the former from being a curse. Whoever allows his money to outweigh his interest in the dissemination of the Gospel, and the rescue of souls from sin and damnation, is pitifully poor in the midst of his abundance. To love God supremely is the last insurance of life and property, as it puts both into his hands for disposition. Love has no deeper joy than to offer itself up for its object, and to employ its possessions in the consummation of love's great end. The soul that has found Jesus in all his grace and power and sweetness, does not ask, how much money may I amass, but how much can I spare for Jesus, and how shall I disburse it so as most to glorify him? "We are not our own, for we are bought with a price." The poor widow had "two mites," and had the privilege of reserving one; but no, "all her living" must go into the Lord's treasury. "Go and do likewise," is a needful injunction to thousands of our members, at the present juncture. If Christ gave himself, why should any repeat the old sin of laying only "a certain part" at the feet of Jesus? It all belongs to him. My dear young brother and sister do as Paul commands in 1st Cor. 10: 31, and you will be a light to the world, a blessing to the church, and ultimately jewels in the diadem of "the King of kings."

C. H. BALSBAUGH

For the Companion.

The Judgment.

This is a subject of great importance, and should be considered as such by all: "for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ," 2 Cor. 5: 10. When that great and notable day will come, when Christ will come to judge the world, it is an abiding consequence that each individual will stand at the "judgment seat of Christ" and receive according to the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad. We must labor diligently, that we may be accepted of him when he "shall come in his power, and all the holy angels with him." There is a certainty that we must stand before the Judge to have our causes tried; and according to our works he will judge us either for happiness or everlasting destruction. Then we should live according to his will, and make it our great object so to act, that he will then say to us: "well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." But on the other hand, if we are careless, and unconcerned about our soul's salvation, and do wickedly, then he will say unto us: "I never knew you," "depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels."—Matt. 25: 41. We should do the will of the Lord. Whatever sacrifices the doing of the will of God may require, it is wise, cheerfully and promptly to do it; for all the trouble it will require in this world, is nothing to the misery which the neglect of it will occasion in the world to come. Men must, by the holy spirit, through trials, the discipline of providence, and the word of truth be purified from sin in this world, or remain under its power, and suffer its consequences forever in the world to come. "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation," John 5: 28, 29. He passes to the great and most astonishing manifestation which he is to make of the truth that he has life in himself, namely, the final resurrection, by his word, of the just and of the unjust; and the decision of their destiny for eternity. Jesus Christ the Son of God, was appointed of the Father, to be the dispenser of life to men; not only to heal the sick, but to raise the dead, and judge the world. All men should honor the son even as they honor the Father. Those who love not the Son, the love of God is not in them; and they will lose the benefits of his redemption. "When, the son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on the right hand, come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31, 33. And to them on the left he will say: "depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire;" and they go away to meet him no more. This should lead each one without delay to prepare to obtain the one, and escape the other. Our nearness to eternity, and the shortness of the time before we shall be in heaven or hell, should lead us to be obedient to the commands of God, and be ready, so that at whatever time, or in whatever way we may be called to leave the earth, we may, when absent from the body, be present with the Lord; beholding his glory, and rejoicing in his love. We think it a solemn thing when we have to part with friends here on earth; but O, how more solemn it will be at the judgment day, when we have to part, never to meet again!

Spring Time.

Who does not welcome the approach of Spring? When the weary months of the winter season are about dispersing we naturally long for spring and welcome its approach. And when it has fully arrived, how happy all seem to be. We again witness the earth arrayed in her robes of green, and the forest waving under the load of beautiful foliage. We see flowers springing up all around us, opening their petals to the sun, that they may expand more perfectly. The little birds are singing their sweet songs—they, too, seem happy, from them we can glean a lesson of contentment and resignation. Every leaf and flower we behold, will teach us a very useful lesson: they will teach humility, if we would be taught by the common things of earth.

And, in a spiritual sense, after experiencing days of gloom and sorrow—the heart being heavy, carrying a load of guilt and sin, all seems dark and gloomy; but, finally, these clouds disperse, the burden is removed, the heart has been changed by the renovating influence of the gospel; all is light, joy, and peace.

Everything seems to have changed, and to wear a different aspect. We naturally think of others that are groping their way through this vale of tears, with not a hope on the other side of the grave. When this burden of sin has been removed, and we are admitted into the light of the Gospel, it is then springtime. We behold flowers in our pathway, that once were not esteemed more than briers and thistles. What once seemed a heavy task, now is a pleasure to engage in. The progress may seem slow; but if continued gradually, through time, it will be most fully developed. 'Tis true, we meet with temptations on the way, which are sometimes hard to resist; but our heavenly Father tells us, if we resist the evil one he will flee from us. His grace is sufficient to bear up even the weakest believer.

There are so many temptations and allurements thrown in the way, that are calculated to attract the attention of the youthful mind and entice them to sin! In these last days the times and the people are being so perverted, that they will tell us we can join with the world and participate in their sinful amusements, and, at the same time, live the life of Christians. But how can this be possible? The Scriptures say: "come out from among them and be ye separate." How can we, therefore, be separate from the world, when we are uniting with it in all the trifling and giddy pleasures of the day?

Those of us who are yet in our youthful days meet with temptations, that perhaps older persons do not experience. Hence the necessity of being watchful and prayerful, lest we should be led from the path of duty. Christian pilgrim to the celestial city, let us be faithful to our high calling, that when our troubles and trials are all over, we can meet our loved ones, and once more be reunited in those mansions of bliss, is the sincere desire of your unworthy young writer.

Deceit.

No one can tell how much this abominable vice is practiced in the world. The Scriptures say: "the heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." And we see the truth in the example's of every day. No difference where we chance to go, we meet with deceitfulness. We hear expressions of friendship fall from lips we think are true, that we imagine are pure from uttering anything they did not mean; yet could we only glance into that secret chamber—the heart—we could there see perfidy and inconstancy to the vows which they made. Deceit is often used as an artifice to lure the innocent and entrap them in a snare. A smooth face and deceitful tongue have done much evil, and if permitted, will do much more. We cannot be too vigilant in guarding against such mean pretenders, of which the world has many. And at the present day we scarcely know what to believe, or whom to trust. Those we think to be our friends are enemies, when our backs are turned, and would betray us at any moment. Sadie Kauffman.

The Sabbath.

A Sabbath stillness—how grateful to the eye, the ear, and the soul! Earth's feverish throb is hushed in the quietness. Nature seems to rest, and her fields and woodlands assume a brighter green. The sun shines with a mild light, and the breeze whispers more softly as it moves by. The clear toned bells break out upon the still atmosphere, and the waves of sound chase each other away in undulating melody. The hum of busy life has ceased for a moment, and weary men turn to their homes for rest. Welcome the Sabbath! It comes like a calm haven after a stormy passage on the sea of life, and with the sails of care all furled, the tossed spirit is moored at the hearth. The streams flow more stilly, and the lakes are like mirrors. As much as the Sabbath is trampled on and disgraced, it is a blessed day for the world.

Laying aside the Weights.

"Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." Hebrews 12 : 1.

It is no matter of great surprise that many who belong to the Christian Church and profess to be the disciples of Jesus, do not make that advancement in the divine life which it is both their duty and privilege, and hence remain spiritual dwarfs, to the great detriment of the Church. Many things contribute to induce such a sad state of affairs. The neglect to perform many duties, binding upon every Christian is one of the great hindrances to thousands of souls in their spiritual attainments.

But there is another class of obstacles, no less fatal to the soul's growth and which utterly excludes all possibility of Christian maturity.—They are represented in the Word of God as Weights to the soul, and those who are made concious of any such weights clinging to them, are commanded to lay them aside. Every one professing to be a child of God may readily know when he is clogged by any of these weights.—He may know it in two ways—first in that he is frequently conscious of the absence of the Holy Spirit; and, second, by comparing his outward life with the Sacred Oracles, given for his instruction. Those who are willing to lay aside every weight, as soon as they become aware of their existence, are by no means in that danger of spiritual shipwreck as is the case with those who make no effort to ascertain whether they have any weights clinging to them, much less endeavor to cast them aside when discovered by means of God's Word, or when revealed to them by the Holy Spirit. The command nevertheless is—lay aside the weights. But there are many who persistently refuse to do this, while others will not admit such things to be weights to their souls which the Bible enumerates, either directly or indirectly, and positively demands that they be laid aside. Jesus employs still stronger language than Paul, "cast them from thee!"

There are many good people in the Church who wish to do right, but yet affirm that their consciences do not condemn them for the indulgence in certain things, of which the Bible however, says, lay them aside. Their consciences possibly have become more or less seared, and need a more thorough purging, and a restoration to that tenderness and acuteness which characterized them when first they knew the Lord, and when they sang—

I want the witness, Lord,
That all I do is right,
According to thy will and word
Well pleasing in thy sight.

Some say they do not feel impressed by the Holy Spirit to discard what more conscientious or enlightened members suggest to them as contrary to the religion of Jesus Christ, and are ready to declare themselves unwilling to lay aside that which is pronounced hurtful, until they are specially impressed by the Holy Spirit to do so. Will such please suffer a word of exhortation? Jesus says: "If ye love me keep my commandments." And where, dear brother and sister, are we to learn his commandments, if not in his Holy Word? And if that Word says lay aside a certain questionable article, will you say, "No, I will not do so until impressed by the Spirit of God to lay it aside?" If we really love God we shall not wait for him to resort to any special means to make known his will to us. We shall be willing to accept the ordinary method of ascertaining God's will concerning us, which is by his Word. While we are waiting for his Spirit to reveal to us what his Word plainly teaches, we may lose a great deal. Delays are dangerous in spiritual matters as well as temporal or worldly things. We cannot be near as acceptable to God by obeying him only when goaded by his Spirit as when there is a cheerful acquiescence to his will. If we are the true followers of Jesus we shall not only be willing to know and do his will, but exceedingly anxious to obey every precept and command of his Word. There will be a holy ardor to ascertain and a most earnest desire to do his will in all the minutest things affecting both our physical and spiritual well-being, so that the language of the poet will find a constant echo in our hearts:

"Oh may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will."

If such be the case with the child of God, there will certainly not be that almost incessant cry of weakness and barrenness of soul, of which so many often complain. It is occasioned by disobedience in some way, and very frequently in matters where a simple laying aside of a certain weight would prevent such a degenerate condition of soul.

But there are numerous kinds of weights to be laid aside. Some are far more deleterious than others, and may cost a severer struggle to have them removed. Others, again, are of such a nature that they cannot be classed as simply among the common faults and weaknesses of professed Christians; they cannot escape with so mild a name, but must be regarded as sin, and which, if not at once abandoned and repented of, must speedily bring the soul into fearful darkness and positive condemnation; and from this state the steps may be but few until both body and soul are ruined. But the more ordinary weights, and with which many Church members are clogged and crippled, are the indulgence in vain and gaudy apparel, including many articles of costly adornment, while others may be cheap enough, but exceedingly ill-becoming those who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Peter 3: 3, 4.

Levity is another of the weights which draw heavily upon the graces of the soul, and frequently cause such a great leakage that little or nothing is left to indicate any spiritual life. The prayer of the Psalmist should be the petition of individuals having this weight about them: "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." The command, "Be ye holy in all manner of conversation" cannot be too frequently meditated upon by all Christians.

Wines, beers, liquors, &c., used as daily beverages, constitute weights that Christians cannot afford to have hanging about them. They invariably produce most unfavorable results, not only in themselves, but in their families; and what is first considered harmless gratification, may sooner or later prove the fatal weapon that not only lays low the body, but sinks the soul to a drunkard's hell. Beware of the wine-cup and the beer-glass! Spurn them as your enemies in disguise! Think of the adder! "Look not upon the wine when it is red," &c.

Tobacco has proved a heavy weight to many professors of religion, especially when indulged in simply for the gratification of the taste; and certainly the filthy habit of chewing it, must be regarded, when viewed with an enlightened and tender conscience, as ill-becoming one who professes to have offered his body, as well as his soul, a living sacrifice unto God. The body, scented and made impure by tobacco, cannot be otherwise than a filthy offering to God; and how can one expect God to be pleased with such an offering, or that he will accept it at all! Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, &c. If we wish our bodies to be temples of the Holy Ghost we certainly ought to endeavor to keep them as pure as possible.

Novels and light literature are weights of unsuspected heft. Shun them as you would shun poison. They may please the fancy, but they will also taint the soul. Let the blessed Bible and other useful volumes be perused and studied. Biographies of holy men and woman will prove intensely interesting, and highly instructive and edifying. "Search the Scriptures." "Of making many books there is no end." Beware of three-fourths of them!

Inordinate desire for, and hasty seeking of wealth is a weight that almost constantly clings to many professors of religion. Lay it aside if you would prosper spiritually. You can well afford to be poor in this world's goods in order that you may be "rich toward God." The spirit of speculation is the spirit of the world. Beware lest you find yourself swiftly borne along with the strong current that may carry you entirely out of the kingdom of grace, even though it may leave you a dead member in the church. Seek the "unsearchable riches of Christ." They are the only true riches. All others must pass away, and if our hearts are upon them we may perish with them. "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent."—Prov. 28, 20. "They that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." 1 Tim. 6, 9: 10.

Many other "weights" might be mentioned, but I forbear. Doubtless there are some of which the Word of God does not refer directly enough to enable all immediately clearly to see their duty in abandoning them. But a thorough and prayerful investigation will, without doubt, result in the necessary revelation as to what things are detrimental and what are innocent. But in those rare instances in which the Word may not meet your case, the Spirit certainly will see to it that his promptings and wooing are instantly obeyed, and all will be well. May God deliver us all from every "weight," light or heavy, so that nothing may impede us in our heavenward race.

A few Words of Warning

To the young who follow after the foolish and wicked fashions of the world.

My dearly beloved: My heart is often pained to see the pride in dress that exists at present among the young, and especially to see it among those who have vowed before the Lord to "renounce the sinful practices of this world," or those who are the children of pious parents. So I undertake to write a few lines to exhort and warn you.

Unconverted youths! Does pride keep you from the church of God? (Perhaps with many it is the chief thing.) Cannot each of you be willing to lay everything aside that may be offensive to God, and say, "Here, Lord, though I am unworthy of thy favor, since 'the heavens are not clean in thy sight," yet am I ready to do all that thou mayest require of me? Then will the Lord accept you and make you happy; (See Job 22: 29.) But if you refuse until the day of judgment, then will he cast you away into everlasting torment, (See Isa. 2: 11, 12.) and justly too, for he that will not accept the being invitation of the Lord now, must not expect grace hereafter.

A few words now to brethren's children, whom I often, with sorrow, see adopting the foolish and sinful fashions that the proud and sinful have invented, rather than the humbles style of their pious parents. Children, why is this? Are you ashamed of plain clothes? Fashionable ones are more to be ashamed of. O, please be guided by reason, not by feeling! Strive to be respected by the virtuous, rather than praised by the vain. Remember Christ said he will be ashamed of those who are ashamed of him, when he comes in his glory.

Finally, let me address my dear young brethren and sisters, whom I love, and hope to meet in heaven, but who are yet striving to serve two masters; who appear to expect to have the praise of the world here, and nevertheless, the approbation of God hereafter. Consider the pattern that our old brethren have set us; consider the humility of the apostles; and, above all, carefully consider and strive to imitate the humble character of Christ, who is our perfect example. Do you love Christ? If you really do, cannot you humble yourselves for his sake, when he has so greatly humbled himself for your sake? David, the holy psalmist, says, Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off." Psa. 138 :6. To which class would you belong! If you choose to be long to those whom the Lord knoweth afar off, it is evident that you can never dwell with him, but must, in the of the Judgment, be cast away with the wicked. Let me cite you also to what the beloved apostle Paul says. He tells Timothy that he will "that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array, but with good works." 1 Tim. 2; 9, 19. What beautiful adornment does the apostle here recommend! Would that every sister, young and old, would adopt it! But I deem it not so necessary to multiply passages from the word of God to prove that pride is an insult to God, as to exhort and warn you, lest, even knowing these things you drift along carelessly, and make shipwreck of your souls. Think seriously. Think what a shame it is to Christ, to profess his name and yet cling to Satan. Think of the solemn baptismal vow that you made before God and witnesses, namely, that you would "renounce Satan with all his pernicious ways, and sinful practices of this world." Will you go before the great Judge with this vow broken? I hope not.

That we all may keep in the valley of humility until the Lord comes and bids us "come up higher," is my desire.

"Jesus Wept." John 11: 35.

We are now thinking about what caused our dear Lord to weep. A certain man was sick, and his illness was brought about to show God's great power as manifest in his Son, Jesus Christ. It was Lazarus, whom Jesus loved, that was sick: "Therefore his sister sent unto him, saying, "Lord behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." Now, this sickness was not unto death, but, that God might show his power, and that men might believe. After our Savior heard that he was sick, he still abode two days in the same place;(Bethabara.) this he did, that he might manifest himself to be God in Christ Jesus. Then after two days, He said to his disciples, "let us go into Judea again." His disciples said that the jews in Judea sought to stone him. In answer to this, see 9th verse. Then, after answering, he speaks of Lazarus for the first time, saying: "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go, that I may awake him out of his sleep. The disciples say; "Lord if he sleep, he shall do well;" but Jesus spoke of his death, and said plainly: "Lazarus is dead.

Our Savior is now in Bethany, the town of Mary. Martha has heard that he is coming,and goes out to meet him, and said: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died? Now mark the faith Martha had in her Lord. She knew whatever her Savior would ask of God, he would do it for him. "But I know that even now whatsoever thou wilt ask God, God will give it thee." Mary has now come to our Savior, repeating the words of Martha, and weeping. Our Savior seeing her weeping, and those that come with her, "He groaned in the Spirit and was troubled." Where have ye laid him? were the words of our Savior to them.

They say: "Lord come and see." "Jesus wept." Oh! my dear reader, just think of it—our dear Lord weeping; and what for? Why, for poor frail man such as you, and I. Can we not then, weep for our own soul? Some of them that stood by, remarked: "Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died? Jesus, again, touched with the frailty of human nature, groaned in himself, and came to the grave and said: "Take ye away the stone." Martha remarked to Jesus—"Lord by this time he stinketh, for he hath been dead four days." To this, our Lord answered her as recorded in the 40th verse. They take away the stone. O what a solemn occasion! Our Savior lifts up his eyes to heaven, with increased confidence in his Father, and said: see 41 & 42 verses. It was for the sake of poor, frail humanity, that he asked so much of his Heavenly Father, that they might believe. After entreating his Father, he "cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth!" Oh! methinks I can see the solemnity that prevailed at that moment,—some waiting with confidence and faith for, Lazarus to come forth; others, to see whether Jesus had power to raise the dead. There is no more doubt, "he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes. Jesus said, "loose him and let him go." Dear reader, think of it,—dead four days—and even buried—now alive and walks! who did this? Why, our Savior, who is ever pleading for you and me at the right hand of the Father on high; who is ever willing to accept us through him who did this wonderful miracle; and to keep us in everlasting bliss, where we may see our Savior face to face. May God own and accept us all in heaven,—is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

Go Forth and Reap.

When thou hast sown the precious seed
Of truth and love by word and deed,
In patience then the Master heed
Go forth and reap!

When thou hast viewed the whitened field,
Burdened with its abundant yield,
Prepare the harvest blade to wield—
Go forth and reap!

Alas! alas! the precious grain
Is trodden by the hoof of gain,
O saint, let love of Christ constrain!
Go forth and reap!

When thou hast prayed, and waited long,
For truth hast suffered shame and wrong,
Take up the hopeful reaper's song—
Go forth and reap!

And garners up immortal sheaves;
Let him this promise who believes,
Go forth and reap!

Adorning.

Dear brethren and sisters, being somewhat impressed by this subject, I will try, by the help of God, to write a few lines for the Companion. I will refer you to 1 Pet. 3:3, which says, "whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel." See also, 1 Tim. 2:8, and Zech. 1:8. "And it shall come to pass in the day of the Lord's sacrifice, that I will punish the princes, and the king's children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel." It is a sad fact that we see many of our brethren and sisters clothed with strange apparel. Our Savior says we are to observe all things he has commanded us. This is a command as binding as any other. Why is it not kept, and the old order of the Brethren established? We see many of our members dressing themselves and their children with the world. We are to be soldiers of the cross together, therefore we should have more oneness amongst us. We profess to be a separate and distinct people from the world; so if we conform ourselves to the world, I claim we deny our profession. Some say, "if the heart is right, all is right." I say, amen. But if the heart is right these things are not on the body;—they are in the the heart, before they are on the body. Some would say "these little things don't matter." What does the Bible say? Catch "the little foxes that spoil the vines." (Cant. 2:15.) As this is the first time I have attempted to write for the press, I will close;—hoping some brother or sister will say more upon the subject. I have written out of love to my brethren and sisters, and love to Christ. Amen.

How to Find a Field.

Some ministers are uneasy because they have not a "field" large enough for their talents. They want wide scope. Let us tell you what we saw the other day. It was a man selling some rare sort of cement for broken glass and crockery. He took his station at the corner of a street, and began to talk in praise of of his wares. At first he had but one or two hearers, but he talked and talked just as earnestly and eloquently as if he had a crowd. His cement—why there was nothing like it! It came from a far country— from China—the famous Chinese cement—no family could do without it. Gradually one and another halted as they were passing, until at length he had a "field," and was all in his glory.

Imitate this vender of cement. Talk to your few hearers just as earnestly and thoroughly as if you had a house full. Put your whole soul into your work and keep at it. Preach, preach, preach; never you mind whether you have few or many to hear you. Cry aloud and spare not. You will have hearers enough by and by.—Exam.

The Mind of Christ.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who, being in the form of God, did not account it robbery to be equal with God: but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Phil. 2: 5–9.

Elsewhere, the apostle tells us, "If any man has not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. In our text, he tells us what the mind of Christ was; that notwithstanding he was in the form of God, possessed of equal power, honor, and majesty, that of all this he emptied himself, and instead thereof took upon him the form of a servant, and became obedient.

A servant is one that dedicates himself to the service of another, by the choice of his own will or inclination. Thus Jesus dedicated himself to the service of his Father.

In the above text, we have pointed out to us in a concise manner, what is required of us. The example of Jesus is presented, and we are commanded to imitate. He having emptied himself, or laid aside all that glory that he had with the Father, entered at once upon the great work that was given him to do. In tracing his life, we find him ever engaged in the great work for which he gave himself. "Lo, I came to do thy will" said he, and the records of his short, but eventful life, show how completely he did that will. How arduous were his labors. All day he would spend in teaching the people, while the night he would devote to communion with God. One object engrossed his whole attention. "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up," said he.

Upon one occasion, when his disciples brought him food to eat, and desired him to partake, he said, "I have food to eat that ye knew not of," and, as they did not understand him, he farther added, "My food is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."

Have we, who profess to be the servants of Jesus, given ourselves up as completely to do his will, as he gave himself up, to do his Father's will? We must have the same mind that was in Christ. Have we that mind? Of him it is written, "He pleased not himself." Can this be said of us? Do we not in any way please ourselves? Do we never gratify our fleshly desires? When we thus open our hearts, and the light of inspiration streams down upon them, then it is that our innate depravity is exposed. And O, how little do we then appear in our own eyes. When we are once brought to know Christ, and also ourselves, then it is, that we can see how poor and destitute we are. Then we begin to hunger and thirst after righteousness, and the blessed promise is, we shall be filled.

First, we must become poor in spirit, we must be emptied, emptied of all that nature hath implanted within. The word of God is represented to us as a light, and as a sword. Armed with this, we can penetrate every chamber of our hearts. While its light exposes to us the vicious inhabitants thereof, with the sword we can slay them. "For the weapons of our warfare are not fleshly, but mighty before God to the pulling down of strongholds," casting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalts itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. As each chamber becomes emptied of its former inhabitants, Christ will take possession. But the advancement that is made in this work depends upon ourselves. If we arm ourselves with all the weapons of our warfare, and resolutely determine that every thing shall be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, that we will spare no former inhabitant however eloquently nature may plead, then will the work advance rapidly, and citadel after citadel will yield. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" Rom. 6: 16. By the above rule we can rightly determine to whom we belong. Are we Christ's servants? Then we dedicate ourselves to him. We feel that we are no longer our own, for we have been bought with a price. Again we are told to love the Lord our God with all our hearts, and with all our soul, and with all our mind. "This," says Jesus, "is the first and great commandment. And the second is like to it: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." If the above command is obeyed, there will be no room left for self. God must be supremely loved. All the wealth of our affections must be placed upon him. He must be first in our hearts. Then we must love him with all our souls, with all the strength of our spiritual being. If we do, then can we in truth adopt the language of the pious David, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire besides thee." And our neighbor must be equal with ourselves. Let us here pause and reflect. Do we honor God with what he has given us possession of? Has he given us minds that are capable of grasping deep things? Do we devote the strength of that mind to him; or do we use it in the gratification of our own vanity, in procuring for ourselves the applause and flatteries of men? If we do, then were it better for us, if this great trust had not been committed to us. Are we so situated that we have much time at our command? We are in duty bound to spend every moment that is not employed in making the necessary provisions for our bodies, in His service. Do we spend every moment that we can possibly spare, in laboring in our Master's vineyard? Ah! there is much work to do: "The harvest indeed is great, but the laborers are few." Do we enquire what work we can do? There is work for all, for the weak, and for the strong. Should we be at a loss to know what work to engage in, let us inquire of the Master as did Paul, "Lord, what will thou have me do?" And most assuredly, if we are willing to work, he will give us plenty of work to do. Let us not, we who have espoused so noble a cause, we who can labor for so great a Master, and especially when his work is languishing for want of laborers. Oh! let us not spend our time in vanity. Would we rather spend our leisure hours in preparing something merely to please the taste or the eye, than to devote it to our dear Master? How much better would it be for us, should we at such times imitate Mary. Then would He also say of us, we have chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from us. Let us from henceforth leave all unnecessary and ornamental work to those, who if not thus employed, would be employed in something worse. But let us, who are invited to engage in such noble work, when we have done for our bodies that which they really demand, work for our Master. How much work could be done in this way, that is now neglected. There is work here for you to do, dear sister, that none else can do. Many a delicate plant needs your tender hand to cultivate and prune it, that cannot bear to be tended by a stronger hand. Would you not rather, dear sister, go into your Master's garden, water and cultivate those drooping plants that are destined to bloom on the shore of immortality, than to spend your time in cultivating those that will bloom but for a day?

Have we wealth at our disposal? This, too, belongs to him to whom we have given ourselves. In Luke 6: 20, 24, we read: "And he, lifting up his eyes on his disciples, said: 'Happy are ye that are poor; for yours is the kingdom of God. But woe to you that are rich; for ye have received your consolation. Woe to you that are full; for ye shall hunger." From the above scriptures we learn that if we would be the recipients of Christ's blessings, we must be poor. We must empty ourselves of our wealth. How must we do this? When the young man came to Jesus, after having rehearsed his many good qualities, the Savior said, "If thou desirest to be perfect, sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." He seemed to demand a hard thing of this young man, but he has done more for us. He was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. "If thou desirest to be perfect, go sell what thou hast." Do we desire perfection, then we must render perfect obedience. He emptied himself for us, now he requires that we empty ourselves for him. If we do this as completely as he did, then we will be perfect in our sphere, as he was perfect in his.

But we asked the question, how must we empty ourselves of our wealth. We will now try to answer. When we gave ourselves to Christ, if we made a perfect surrender, then all we had we laid upon the altar. As soon as we make this surrender, then, it no longer belongs to us. It will require many a hard struggle with self before we can resign all. But when the victory is once gained, a perfect peace will ensue. Having given up all that we possess to Christ, we cheerfully acquiesce in his disposal of it. Should it please him to remove it from us, we have no complaint to make, for it is not ours. But should he leave it with us, then surely he appoints us as his almoner, to distribute it as he gives command. We have not the privilege of using more of it than our actual wants demand. Should we spend it in unnecessary luxury while many around us are pining in want, will our Master say to us at his coming. "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?" Our Savior has told us, the poor would always be with us, so that we can ever have an opportunity of distributing our Master's good.

It is truly a blessed state to be wholly resigned into the hands of Jesus, to empty ourselves of all our former self, and become filled with him, to have him control the inner springs of our hearts; to work in us both to will and to perform, of his good pleasure, that we may have wisdom to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling.

Forgotten in Prayer.

We recommend the following to the careful attention of our readers, believing it to contain valuable suggestions. We hope our friends will often invoke the Master in our behalf for we feel that we are among those who specially need Divine aid.

"In public and social prayers there are frequent petitions for a blessing upon the clergy, upon missionaries, upon institutions of learning, upon rulers, in behalf of every class of persons exercising a wide influence—with one exception. We rarely hear a prayer offered for that class whose thoughts reach a wider circle than do the thoughts fo any other—the editors. Many more persons read the newspaper than attend church. The students in our colleges and sem; inaries are more largely influenced, though less directly, by public opinion than by the private opinions of their professors; our rulers are to a great extent made and unmade by the power of the press; and yet how seldom are these facts recognized in public devotion!

If there is any man on this earth who has need of a conscience, it is the editor of a popular journal; if any man needs divine guidance, it is he; if any human being oftener than another is called upon to do justly, and to show mercy, it is the man who must sift an overwhelming mass of materials, "gather the good into vessels and cast the bad away." If any man in responsible position is more strongly tempted to insincerity, prejudice, and the thousand other ills that finite minds are heir to, we should—not—like to hear of him.

Pastors who are hard at work attempting to mould religious opinion and conduct, laymen who long for the coming of the kingdom, do not read your paper as if it were only a luxury—it is a power. It is a mighty power, and the men who decide what voice shall reach your ears, who write editorials, who mould and color the thousand items which enter your households, either for good or for evil, need your hearty prayers. In this age the preacher has no more ignore the editor than he can gesture without hands. The work done in the pulpit will be undone in a half hour's reading unless the same spirit guide them into all truth.

An Acceptable Visit.

From which it need not be inferred that other visits are not acceptable. That is not intended to be said. We only desire to speak of this visit as especially pleasing. And this preference will be allowed us when it is known that this visit was by father and mother, and that it has been a long time since they were with us. To have father and mother come to one's house is a happy privilege; to have those in our own house under whose roof we drew our first breath, who saw our first step, and heard our first word; those to whom we first gave joy and first caused grief. What solicitude have these two fond hearts exercised for our welfare, morally, mentally, and physically. How many weary days have been spent in watching our steps,

"Lest I should fall and hurt a hair."

Nearly three score years of their lives have passed away. The silvered heads, and enfeebled steps give evidence of the approach of declining life. A few more short years and we may no more hope for their friendly visits, unless it should be our lot to go before to the Father's mansions.

Nearly forty years ago they set out together for life's rough journey. At different periods others were added unto them, until the family numbered ten in all. Then began the decrease, and now again they number but two. Such are the ways of life.

They now reside near Duncansville, Pa. They have lately had public sale, and have reduced their effects to their household goods. They expect to spend part of the Summer in visiting friends, and where opportunities offer, preaching the word. May their declining years be the happiest of their lives is both our hope and our prayer, and may God help us that our labors and actions may be conducive to that end.

Brethren desiring their visits—or wishing other correspondence with them—may address D. M. Holsinger, Duncansville, Blair county, Pa.

The High School Movement.

A movement has been inaugurated by brethren in Indiana, aiming at the establishing of a school of a higher order, to be owned and controlled by Brethren exclusively. Our prayer is they may not only succeed, and be prosperous and useful, but also that their example may be followed by other sections, until our children may have facilities for acquiring an education, equal to others less highly favored in many other respects. Would that we could all realize the importance and utility of such an enterprise, and could unite our influence, talent, and means in its speedy and permanent consummation. And may we not hope for this? Have we not good reasons to believe that experience has taught us all the necessity of such an institution? We look upon education more as a temporal convenience than as a moral necessity. We would give children an education as we would give them a trade. In fact no education is complete that does not afford instruction that may be applied by the possessor, in battling with the realities of life.

We would kindly suggest to such brethren as may not be able to see the importance of this work as we feel it, to ponder well before they oppose it, lest haply they should be found to fight against God. There are evils—plain, positive, flagrant evils—that need all our efforts to hold them in check. Let us be united against wrong and for the good. Consider whether the Scriptures do not say much more against the accumulation of wealth than against the acquirement of education. Compare the impediments of the former with the advantages of the latter, in the attainment of spiritual knowledge, and advancement in holiness.

CORRESPONDENCE

To the readers of, and especially the writers for the Companion. Will you please send your private letters, or rather individual letters of friendship, by mail to their destination, and not burden the columns of the Companion with them, and thereby crowd out other subject matter of more importance to all the readers. Letter correspondence to single individuals is out of place, published in a religious paper, though they may be interesting to the one for whom they are intended. The Editor, of course, does not like to reject their publication when sent him by subscribers; but brother subscribers, if you wish to write, write for the benefit of all. As ever, yours fraternally.

P. R. WRIGHTSMAN.

As I am alone this pleasant afternoon, I thought I would try and write a few lines for the Companion. I am always happy to hear from the brethren and sisters, from the different parts of the world. We live eight miles from the church; but we have meeting at a school house five miles from here, every four weeks. And between meetings the Companion is a great help and comfort to me, in encouraging me on my way to Zion. I always feel encouraged, and strengthened after reading the Companion. There are many trials, and temptations to endure in this world, and we need encouragement. I am young in years, and but a babe in Christ, yet I have undergone some severe trials; but I feel that I have been benefitted by them, and that it has been for my good. I am learning every day how dependent we are on God for our happiness, and if we only try to live close to him he will bring us out "more than conquerers." He has promised "that all things shall work together for good to them that love God." I feel that without him I can do nothing. I am surrounded by many temptations. There is but one family living in this neighborhood, besides our own, that belongs, to the church. My associates are mostly Methodists. My cross is heavy, but where there is no cross, there is no crown: so I feel willing to bear it, in order to gain the prize that is laid up for all those that hold out faithful to the end. Pray for me that I may be strengthened, and that I may lead a true Christian life; which is the desire of your unworthy sister.

The Brethren's High School.

Brother Holsinger: I am truly glad the school question is again being agitated among our brethren; for indeed there is no literary enterprise that should concern us more, at the present time, than the organization of a first class College,—may I not say a University? There are now hundreds of our brethren's children away from home, receiving an education in the high schools of other denominations, some of the teachers of which are Universalists, Infidels, and Deists; and to say the least, many do their utmost to explain away the plain, simple commandments of Christ's church. Now, shall we, (who profess to be the true followers of Christ,) lie still and suffer these sectarians thus to poison the youthful minds of our dear children? God forbid! Brethren, forbid it! But some tell us "it is just to make preachers, and then they will want a salary for preaching." This is a very slender objection. This is by no means the object of establishing a school. It is to keep the Brethren's children under the religious influence of our own church The time has come that the youth will have education; and if parents do not send them where they can have the advantages of the high-school or college, many of them will go themselves to other denominational schools, and there be taught the peculiar views of other sects. How much better to have such a school among the Brethren, and teach them the true Christian doctrine

I often think it strange that a single brother who has intelligent children, should object to such a movement—it being a great auxiliary to the church. I never have heard of an educated man opposing an education. They really are the judges, for they know the good of education; and many who have not this advantage, feel their need of it. Being properly educated does not make people proud; but if the proper principles are instilled while young and at school, they become more humble, and less conceited. When the student views the literary landscape, and knows how little of it he is able to understand, and the many great lessons God has spread out before him, in nature and Science, he then begins to learn how little he knows; and then he exclaims, "How marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty." "Teach me to so number my days, that I may apply my heart unto wisdom." Such a knowledge of God through his works leads the youth to adore nature's God; which will inevitably be the case, when an education is sanctified by grace, guarded by prayer, and strengthened by faith

We want a high-school instituted, built, taught, and governed by the Brethren exclusively; where obedience to all God's word is taught, and plainness observed, such as becometh men and women professing godliness. Recently the Bible has been ruled out of the schools of Cincinnati; and I also see in one of the public papers that the Legislature of Missouri has ruled the Bible out of the schools of that State. There is talk also in our city of ruling out the Bible. Are not these facts enough to fire every true brother's heart with new zeal to inaugurate a high-school among ourselves, as brethren. Shut out the Bible from our schools, and heathenism will steal upon us as imperceptibly as the midnight cloud. Where the Brethren do not accept Sunday schools, as recommended by the Annual Meeting, and the Bible is not read in school, it will be but little studied by the rising generation of this day and time; and if cut out of the course of study in schools, not studied in Sunday school, and but little at home, how shall they (the young) know the Lord, whom to know aright is life eternal? We do hope the objector will consider these facts. I do not wish to be understood that it is necessary to erect a college in order to have God's word taught, as a positive necessity to a right understanding of the Gospel; but a right knowledge of the scriptures taught, is an important section in the great chapter of education. Not long since I was requested to preach at a certain place, on the subject of feet-washing, because many in that neighborhood wished to know whether feet-washing was a command or not. O what moral darkness! Brethren come let us unite, and agree to use all the means possible to enlighten the understanding, convince the judgment, strengthen the will, and urge sinners to obey the commands of the world's Redeemer; and at last be received by him, where we shall have joy without grief, and pleasure without pain.

The Companion is a welcome guest. I love to read it. It is next to the Bible to me, as I do not get to meeting as often as I wish on account of ill health, with which I have been troubled for the last twelve months or more. But when I have the Companion, it affords me great pleasure to read and hear about my brethren and sisters. I love to read church news. May it prosper, and be the means of bringing many souls to Christ, is my prayer.

SUSANNAH C PETRY.

Brother Henry : In two numbers of the Companion, I see articles written by brethren who visited persons on their death beds, who had neglected to become reconciled to God in their healthful hours : then, after feeling death's icy hand taking hold, trying to compromise with God without doing what he requires of us, to have the promise on our side. Now dear brethren let us be careful how we handle God's word ; as it is "powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword," &c., and not say we are satisfied that "God will take the will for the deed." I fear, by so doing, we may not do God's word justice—nor ourselves, or our hearers or readers—in our calling as preachers. Brethren, I would be glad if the Lord would accept us all by our wills. But he wants "a doer of the word," and not a hearer : but whosoever is a doer of the will of my Father in heaven, is my brother, sister, mother &c.. As by one that often feels the weight of souls hanging heavily, this is written, and out of love, and not for controversy, as I feel my weakness and imperfection too sensibly to have anything else in view than the glory of God, and the saving of souls.

On last Sabbath night I was called upon to visit an old mother (74 years old,) on her death bed in her last agony she said she had no peace with her God, and "now I must die." Every effort was made to rescue her and to arrest the disease, but all in vain. We prayed with and for her. She said she had resolved all winter that this summer she would obey Christ and be baptized for the remission of her sins ; "but now," she said, "I waited too long, and now must die without a promise." I gave her all the comfort I could ; but where did I get it from ?—That upon disobedience she could be saved ? NO. On Friday I was called on to attend her funeral.

ADAM HOLLINGER.

A LETTER TO ELDER JOHN WISE.

Dear Brother : On reading your piece in the Companion, No. 16, page 253. I felt very sorry that any one should understand me to mean, that women need not cover their heads in time of worship ; for I believe a woman "praying or prophesying," or worshiping with an uncovered head, is an abomination in the sight of God : but I am still at a loss to know why it is expected of the woman to have her head covered, when not engaged in worship, while the man goes with head covered nearly all day ; and it is so uncomfortable in warm weather, sweating over the wash-tub, bake-oven, and cook-stove. Paul (1 Cor. 11 : says that Christ is the head of the man, and the man, the head of the woman. The man, by his violation, dishonors Christ, while the woman only dishonors man. I do not want to weaken any one, or darken God's council ; but, in my peculiar ideas, if I think it a little darkened, I want to help clear it up, for fear the cause of my Master might be retarded, and some be discouraged from joining in with us. That was the reason I wrote what I did to brother A. Molsbee. I thought he was too exacting, in naming things to the applicants not found in the Testament. If we must have by-laws, I think they should be let pass till we have persons in the church. And as the word "caps," does not occur in Paul's letter, 1 Cor. 11, I meant in the last part, of my piece, No. 48, 1869, that we have no right to say you must wear a "cap ;" but we have a right to say : you must wear a "covering" in time of worship. I also thought brother Molsbee was too fault-finding with others ; and saying he was frank to confess that he thought their order down south to be the order throughout the Brotherhood, I wanted him to know it was not, so he would have more charity hereafter.

And now brother Wise, I want you to enlarge your mantle of charity, so as to cover my multitude of sins ; and not say, you "have nothing to do with" me. I am a member of the same body you are. I consider you my keeper, and me, yours in a less degree. You are Christ's "embassadors," and Zion's watchman ; and you must require of us what God requires, to clear your own skirts.

I saw you once at Annual Meeting. I was very favorably impressed with your appearance. You brought the question, to the council. If deacons, could baptize the sick, in cases of emergency. I was convinced of your care for souls. My daughter heard you preach one night ; among other good things, she told me you related a man's dream when he was being weighed in the balance, and feared his good works would be too light ; when a poor woman came and laid a loaf of bread on the scale, that he had given her in this life, and which turned the scale in his favor. That impressed me so, that I have given a many a loaf to the poor since, which I don't think I would have thought of, if it had not been for that lesson. My heart was not so much in the work before. I read your—and your wife's letters, with great interest ; and I felt happy when I read of your visit to the C. F. C. office. I saw there, a token of that spirit so precious in the sight of God. So lay my errors to my weakness and my (perhaps) over anxiousness for the prosperity of our church ; for if we have the pure unmixed Gospel for our rule and practice, I believe we will triumph over every opposition.

And now I will say to my sisters ; cover your heads, in time of worship, with a plain modest covering ; don't take lace, or needle-worked stuff for your caps, or put ruffles to your bonnets, or anything useless ; for superfluities are forbidden in the Gospel. We are not to labor for that which is not bread. I believe God takes more notice to the covering of our heads, then any other clothing ; and even the angels take notice of it, 10th verse, 11 chapter, 1 Cor.

I don't think sisters ought to cut off their hair, only in case of sickness, or some other justifiable cause. Read the chapter referred to in this article ; particularly the 6th verse, the part brother Wise referred to in German. But it don't read exactly in the German like in English. In the German it reads, if she will not be covered, man may cut off her hair ; in the English it reads : "for if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn." I believe the "also" refers to the man; so I think the man's hair ought to be shorn; not only cut off; but the woman's, have its full growth; and as children are left out of the question they should be shorn —just for comfort, and convenience.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

Covington, Ohio.

Brother Holsinger: On the 16th of April we had a church meeting. Brethren assembled from Beaver Creek and Augusta county. Also one brother from the State of Maryland. The Brethren on their yearly church visit here, found all in union and peace one with another. But the eye of the Church saw many wild shoots from the parent vine, considered injurious to the prosperity of Zion. Notwithstanding, the admonitions given by the watchmen upon the wall, were consoling, and seemed to leave good impressions.

One more item. Is it prudent for a bishop to invite the laity to go with a preacher or deacon on the yearly Church visit? This is a question among us. J. G. FLORY.

Mill Creek, Va.

Brother Holsinger; I observe that you insert religious news in your paper, for the encouragement of the brotherhood; and I thought a few lines from our part of the Brotherhood would not be amiss. On Saturday evening previous to the first Sabbath of February. The brethren commenced a series of meetings at Hollowtown, brother Smith's congregation; and continued for ten days morning and evening, and in the evening a few days longer. The Lord was with his people and blessed them abundantly. The church was revived and sinners were awakened. Twenty-five were received into connection at that place; twenty-two by baptism, and three restored. The brethren held a Lovefeast during the meeting, which was truly a feast of love; God being present in the ministration of his ordinances. His children were much refreshed. May Grace and truth be with them. And may God, who confers all truth be praised forevermore.

Also, on the second of April, brother, Davis Younce, and brother Bartly Smith, commenced a series of meetings in Fall Creek church, Hixson's meeting house; which continued a few days. The Lord was with his church. Four were received by baptism, and one by letter. Much good has been done here. The church, previous to the meeting, was cold and almost lifeless; but it has been newly awakened; and impressions, we trust, have been made, that will not soon be forgotten We have much need of labor in this arm of the church; and hope that our brethren will visit us, and assist in building us up in our most holy faith. May God, who is able to keep us, guide us through life by his counsel and, at last, receive us to glory;— is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

A. J. HIXSON.

Highland, Ohio.

Do the Brethren keep all the commandments of God? I think not. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Mark 16: 15. "After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two," &c., Luke 10: 1.—not four, six, or more to one place. We think the brethren ought to scatter a little. Christ says: "To the poor the Gospel is preached;" but we often think the Gospel is only preached to those that are able to own a team with which they can go from eight to ten miles to hear the Gospel, and the poor must stay at home. We can read the word of God but oft times do not understand it. So come, Brethren, preach for us in McConnell's Grove, Stephenson Co., Ill.

LYDIA JORDAN.

Brother Holsinger; This, the Pakagon congregation, Michigan, although we have been in the wilderness, tempted of satan in times past, is now coming out The brethren Millers and Shively come here and labor with us occasionally. Six have been added by baptism since last December, and the prospect is good for more to come soon. WALTER CLARK.

Brother Henry: This will be the last communication you will receive from me from this locality for some time, as I expect to start for Iowa to-morrow. Enclosed find balance due you on subscriptions. My reason for removing to Iowa at the present time is on account of ill health. I shall continue to solicit subscriptions for the Companion. I should not do without it if it cost twice what it does. It is my opinion that every family in the Brotherhood should subscribe for the Companion and Pious Youth. I advise all Superintendents of Sabbath Schools to introduce the Pious Youth into their Schools, as the paper is twice as large as any other child's paper I have yet seen. Hence it is much cheeper than any other. I have been Superintendent of a Sabbath School for two years, and believe it to be the nursery of the Church.

My address will be Hudson, B'ackhawk county, Iowa.

Heaven a Beautiful Place.

I was much surprised to see it stated in Companion Vol. 4, No 48, page 543, that "Heaven is not a beautiful place." Unless I badly misunderstand the meaning of this sentence, I think it does great injustice to the abode of God and final resting-place of the righteous. Beautiful is defined as "pleasing to the eye, to the ear, or to the mind." Now, please read the description of the Holy City which came "down from God out of heaven," given in the 21st chapter of Revelations. See also Isa. 52: 1, where Jerusalem is commanded to put on her "beautiful garments." O! that our conduct may shine forth beautiful, daily, that we may be fitted for heaven. CYRUS WALLICK

Breedsville, Mich.

The following is the paragraph alluded to by the above, being a selected item:

"Heaven is not a beautiful place, but a holy place. Hence to enter it, there must be a state of soul in harmony with it, a preparatory meetness, or we cannot enjoy it In our hearts there must be the elements of heaven's purity now, or in the very nature of things we shall be incapacitated to enjoy the happiness of hea ven. Bear our spirits those peculiar signs, those celestial marks which indicate our fitness to share in future bliss? Are these found in them, and developing in them those buds of grace which will culminate in the flower of heaven's glory?"

We do not think that it was the desire of the author to detract from the enjoyment of heaven. The third definition of the word beautiful we would accept: "pleasant to the mind." The author wishes to impress the the idea that we do not go to heaven for the sake of its beauty, but by virtue of our fitness.

Brother Holsinger; I cannot begin to express the great pleasure which the Companion affords me I have a widowed mother, and two sisters, which compose our little family There are no ministering brethren near. One sermon, preached by brother A. Crumpacker, is the only one that has ever been preached in this neighborhood. That is a great privilege from which I am at present debarred; but the weekly visits of your excellent paper, greatly assist me in passing off lonely hours pleasantly and profitably. I hope the brethren and sisters will pray for me, that I may hold out faithful unto the end. May the God of grace ever be with you, and assist you in carrying on your good work rightly and acceptably, is the prayer of your sister in Christ.

SARAH A. SMITH.

Brother Holsinger; It would perhaps be interesting to the readers of the Companion, to give a brief statement of a shocking affair that occured in Salem, Ill., a short time ago. Some four or five days previous to the occurrence, three men entered the house of a family residing in the country three or four miles from town. It was in the evening, after dark. They tied the hands and feet of the inmates, and took away about five hundred dollars. A few days after the robbery, one of the robbers was arrested and committed to the County prison. The following night, about 2 o' clock, a mob came and demanded the prison keys; and while some guarded the jailor, others entered and took the prisoner. They then took him about a mile from the town, where a large number of persons had collected; who were making preparations to hang him. They hung him; but the sheriff came and cut him down before he was quite dead. The sheriff then went to call a physician; but while he was gone, some of the mob returned and shot the prisoner several times in the head. His body was brought back and laid in the court house until it could be buried. Many went to see the corpse. He had no relatives here, and there was no one to say anything good about him. The general expression was, "He recieved what he deserved." But the most melancholy consideration is the condition of his soul. Truly, "the way of the transgressor is hard." J. F. NEHER.

Salem, Ills.

"High-School Movement."

Will the brethren, favoring this movement call to mind that the Savior selected those persons, who should be eye-witnesses of his sufferings and death, from among the poor "unlearned fishermen," and that these same men preached the gospel with such power, after being "endued with power from on high" the world (17 different Languages) did not inquire as to their origin or literary attainments but contented themselves by asking—"Men and brethren what shall we do;" No more poor despised fishermen but "men and brethren." They were happy to learn from these same men that the terms were so easy as was abundantly proven by the number added to the church."

We are also told that the lawyers took the "key of knowledge"—No doubt by running after the "wisdom of the world," thereby losing sight of the true fountain of all knowledge. They would not go into the kingdom, and those that "were entering they hindered." It is true, we live in a different time from that which the apostles figured, but so much the greater the danger of running out of the proper channel to obtain that knowledge which is able to make us "wise unto salvation." The Savior pronounced a woe against the lawyers. Yours in love.

Queries and Answers.

How, or in what form was the kingdom of God within the Pharisees? Luke, 17 : 21. verse.

"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Query—'these'—who are "these?" Or, to whom does the word "these" refer? John 21 chapter, 15 verse.

An answer is requested through the Companion.

JNO. J. BLAUCH.

Berlin, Pa.

We read in the Scriptures that "the wicked know not God but the righteous know God." Now the question is, how do we who are righteous know that we do know him? we think its important to knok.

ANSWER: "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 1 John, 2: 3,4.

Does Paul, (1 Cor. 11,) include virgins, or does he only mean married women? Will some brother or sister answer through the Companion?

Brother Henry: Will you or some other brother or sister, give an explanation on the 27th verse of the 9th chapter of Luke.

S. B. DETWILER.

Lower Providence, Pa.

On Matt. 23: 15.

A proselyte was made in this way: They bound him by an oath to forsake their former religion forever; and by another oath never to forsake the Jewish as long as life lasted, and always to obey the pharisees and scribes. We can see plainly why a proselyte was "two-fold more a child of hell" than themselves. A proselyte was bound by two oaths to remain what he then was made, while they themselves had their liberty to do as they pleased,—to follow Christ or not.

Will some brother or sister give explanation of the seventh chapter of Hebrews. Who is this Melchisedec? I ask for information, because I do not understand it.

ELMIRA ARMSTRONG.

Correction.

In the article on "Revelations 12," page 249, third paragraph, ninth line, read constant, instead of "consonant."

Fourth paragraph, first line, read "there was war in heaven" instead of "more."

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

For the Companion.

Prepare to meet thy God.

Reader, I have an important message to you, whoever you may be. You have the deepest interest in it. It matters not whether you are young, or old, rich or poor, bond or free, learned or unlearned, male or female, you have more concern in it than you can imagine. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, has plainly and unequivocally declared, when such signs should be seen, the people might know that his second coming was nigh even at the doors. This is something of great importance. When we consider the awful event, oh! dear reader, are you aware how near you may be to the end of all things? For the signs of the times clearly prove it to be near. Therefore it is high time that you awake out of your slumbers, and commence in good earnest, that important work—the salvation of the soul, before death may overtake you. Now, dear reader, if you are not ready, oh! let it be your first work to prepare for this great event. Oh! then, do not waste the precious moments yet allotted to you; for, perhaps, in "a little while, he that shall come will come and will not tarry." "For the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Those who have made their robes "white in the blood of the Lamb" will alone "be able to stand," those who have followed the lamb of God "through evil as well as good report." But in order to become such, it is highly necessary to divest ourselves of all prejudice, and bigotry, and self will; that our hearts may be pure. Without the purity of the heart, we cannot see God; for he "shall come in a day that you look not for him, and in an hour that you are not aware of." Then "weep and howl for your miseries that are come upon you; your riches are corrupt and your garments are moth-eaten, your gold and your silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire;' — a witness that you have hid your Lord's talent instead of faithfully appropriating it, to arouse the perishing, and pull them out of the fire. The inspired writer cautions them "that are rich in this world." They may become oppressors, keeping "back by fraud the hire of the laborers that have reaped down their fields."—Remember, "the cries of them that have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabbaoth." Hence we remark, here, the object of Christ's mission into this world, we believe was "to seek and to save that which was lost;" and at last delivering them from all evil, and restoring them with joy to the Father.

Such is the testimony of the sacred scriptures. "Who gave himself for us" that he might deliver us from this present evil world, or redeem us from all iniquity, and "purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" Oh! then, dear reader, "prepare to meet thy God." We know that his first coming was to save sinners; but his second coming, in the clouds of heaven, will be to take "vengeance upon them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Oh! what a contrast between his first and second coming. "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Oh! ye who are sensible that you are not prepared for that burning day! why will you persist, and reject the callings of God? Confess your guilt and put away all your sins. Confess him as your Savior now, and he "will confess you before his Father" and the angels, when he appears. Oh! stay not in solum lest thou be consumed. Remember Lot's wife. Look not behind thee.—"Prepare to meet thy God."

Veneration to Religion.

The poet most beautifully and truthfully says "Religion is the chief concern, of mortals here below;" and my fervent prayer is, that we may all learn more of its great importance, and experience more of its sovereign power. Religion is a heaven-born principle: it comes forth all resplendent with light; and, as upon angelic wings, it bears to the soul the choicest blessings from the throne of the Eternal. It is the "one thing needful" which Mary chose, of which the Savior said: "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her."—Whatever else we may need in life, we all have need of Religion. From the man or woman whose head is silvered over with the frosts of age, down to the youth, who has just arrived at the age of accountability, there is none that can say in truth—I have no need of Religion. The old need it, as well as the young; the rich need it, as do the poor; kings, and all in authority need Religion, as much as do their subjects over whom they rule.

Religion is not only needful to all but it is necessary at all times. As the breath is necessary to animate and invigorate the body, so is Religion essential, to quicken, revive, and cheer the soul. As breath is essential to temporal life, so is Religion to life eternal; and as the body without breath will die, so the soul without Religion must perish.

Wherever we may be, and under whatever circumstances we may be placed, Religion is indispensable if we wish to be happy. Whether on the land, or on the ocean; on bleak and snow-capped mountains or in low and pleasant valleys; on barren deserts, or on fertile plains; whether sailing on a smooth sea under a propitious breeze, with a genial sun and smiling sky, or tossed on the surging billows of the mighty deep, driven by fierce winds under frowning heavens; Religion cannot be dispensed with, if we desire to be in favor with God.

If you are rich, Religion will teach you how to use your wealth so as to promote the glory of God, to advance the interests of his kingdom, to insure your own welfare, and to make your fellow men around you happy; and if you are poor, it will teach you to be diligent in your business, and to trust the Lord for your support: and thus to be an example of diligence and reliance, to your friends and neighbors, and a light to the world. If you are in society, Religion will make you a worthy member; and if you are alone, it will make you grateful and happy, while your conversation is in heaven. If you are in health, it will make you grateful to God, and enable you to go forward with a willing mind to perform every known duty; thus preparing you for the hour of adversity, and for a glorious immortality; and if you are afflicted, it will enable you to look beyond this world of sorrow, and to refresh yourself by draughts from the well of life, from which the irreligious cannot drink: it will give you energy to endure with patience whatever you may have to suffer; knowing that present suffering "are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed;" & that these light affections will work a "far more exceeding & eternal weight of glory" It will make you serene in the hour of death; and, without fear, to yield to the disarmed king whose iron grasp is so full of terror to the wicked; yea, it will enable you, with comfort and gladness, to pass over that mystic river, whose waters are so cold and fearful to the irreligious. Religion will make you humble, holy, cheerful, happy, and useful in life; and prepare you for unspeakable bliss, the enjoyment of heaven, the society of saints and angels, and for communion with God, in the world to come.

Religion, Oh! religion, how great, how lasting, are thy benefits, but how art thou despised and rejected by the needy sons and daughters of men! Sinners, who, as to real happiness, are destitute, "poor, and wretched, and miserable, and blind, and naked," will still wander on in their sinful career and unforgiven crimes, and reject against themselves all thy durable riches, thy happiness, thy joy, thy peace of soul, thy light, thy robes of righteousness, and thy eternal life!

Sinners, I call to you. Will you not stop and look about yourselves? Will you not consider the danger to which you are exposed, and the dreadful end to which you must come, if you do not turn from your evil way while yet you have time place and opportunity? "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Come, then, while you have the privilege. Come while the Father is ready to receive you; while the son is ready to apply his meritorious blood to cleanse you from your pollution; while the Holy Spirit is waiting to sanctify, to lead, guide, direct and comfort you.—Come while the Church of God calls to you, and is anxious to minister to your wants. Come, while angels are awaiting your return, ready to join in full chorus in the allelujahs of heaven. Oh! come. Why should the Father's love, mercy, and grace be undervalued? Why should the Son's loving call, and his atoning blood, be rejected? Why should the various operations and influences of the Holy Spirit be spurned from you? Why should the Church labor, and pray, and hope in vain? Why should angels be kept from their rejoicings? And why, Oh! why will you miss heaven, with all its joys, and go down to hell, to partake, with the devil and his angels, in its inconceivable torments?—I am constrained to think, if you could look beyond the shores of time, and behold the realities of eternity, you could not make so light of religion. If you could see the verities of heaven, you would have a strong desire to participate in its unspeakable transports; and if you could draw aside the curtain, and look down to hell, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched; if you could see the licking flames and curling smoke, and hear the wails of the damned, as they writhe in agony, gnaw their tongues and gnash their teeth in anguish, and cry in pain, and howl in their heavy woe, you would not so eagerly press toward that awful place, which is "prepared for the devil and his angels."

But to my brethren and sisters in Christ, to those who have been born again, "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God,' "born of water and of the Spirit,"—"Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever"—to you I will say: persevere in that self-denying and narrow way, that leadeth to life everlasting. Ever "watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation," "and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in perdition."—"And besides this, giving all diligence, add, to your faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge: and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you and abound they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ; but he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

JOS. W. BEER.

Humanity.

Is a word which you look for in vain in Plato or Aristotle; the idea of mankind as one family, as the children of one God, is an idea of Christian growth; and the science of mankind, and of the languages of mankind, is a science which, without Christianity, would never have sprung into life. When people had been taught to look upon all men as brethren, then, and then only, did the variety of human speech present itself, as a problem that called for a solution in the eyes of thoughtful observers; and I, therefore, date the real beginning of the science of language from the first day of Pentecost. After that day of cloven tongues a new light is spreading over the world, and objects rise into view which had been hidden from the eyes of the nations of antiquity. Old words assume a new meaning, old problems a new interest, old sciences a new purpose. The common origin of mankind, the differences of race and language, the susceptibility of all nations of the highest mental culture, these become, in the new world in which we live, problems of scientific, because of more than scientific interest. It is no valid objection that so many centuries should have elapsed before the spirit which Christianity infused into every branch of scientific inquiry produced visible results. We see in the oaken fleet which rides the ocean, the small acorn which was buried in the ground hundreds of years ago; and we recognize in the philosophy of Albertus Magnus, though nearly 1,200 years after the death of Christ, in the aspirations of Kepler, and in the researches of the greatest philosophers of our own age, the sound of the key-note of thought which had been struck for the first time by the Apostle of the Gentiles: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead."—Max Muller.

Prayer.

"Thus saith the High and lofty One, who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place; with him also that is of a contrite spirit, and humble to revive the spirit of the humble, and the heart of the contrite ones."

While we, therefore, brethren and sisters, contemplate the omnipotence of God in the immensity of creation, let us learn to cultivate humility and self-abasement; and this surely is done while engaging in prayer from the secrets of our hearts. Prayer is to the soul, as rain, to the drooping lily, when engaged in, in a humble and contrite spirit, remembering that "whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased, and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted." Humility is one of the lessons which the pious Psalmist deduced from his survey of the nocturnal heavens. When he beheld the moon walking in brightness, and the innumerable host of stars, he exclaimed: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him."—Did you ever meditate, dear reader, upon the glorious thought of each esteeming another better than himself? If you have not, please do so when you have finished reading this article.—This would have a glorious result if made a universal practice by the human family. I am of the opinion that there are in the universe intelligences of a superior order, in whose breasts pride never found a place; to whom this globe of ours and all its inhabitants appear as inconsiderable as a drop of water does to the proud lords of this earthly region. There is one being to whom this sentiment is applicable in its most extended sense. Before him, all "nations are as a drop of a bucket;" and "the inhabitants of the earth," as grasshoppers: yea, they are "as nothing; and thus are counted to him less than nothing and vanity." There is no disposition that appears so prominent among puny mortals as pride, ambition and vain glory. These tempers, do not become those "who dwell in tabernacles of clay, and whose foundation is in the dust."

It should be our sincere desire to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth" as we advance in days and years; and to do this, it is truly necessary that we approach a throne of mercy at every revolution of the wheel of time. I hereby beseech you, brethren and sisters, you that have not yet erected the family altar, do so at the earliest possible moment. It is one of the essential elements of the Christian character. I will say to you, "come, let us reason together." If you could wing your way with the swiftness of a seraph, to all the members of the brotherhood, with what class would you find those members who raise the family altar for the prosperity of Zion, and for the benefit of their own souls? Would you find them with those who are growing cold in the cause of true religion? I think not so. Please think of this brother or sister, you who do not pray and are reading this: I am speaking directly to you. There is a great responsibility resting upon parents, who are blessed with children. Raise "your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." I wish to state here that I am pleased with the Pious Youth, and I wish it success. It is surely a good principle to instill into the youthful mind, to "remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." With what humility would we approach the throne of mercy, were we to cherish habitually that profound veneration for God which his works are calculated to inspire. We would be ever ready to join with ardor in the sublime devotions of the inspired writers.—"Great and malvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints." Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? Man is not only a sinful, but a helpless, and therefore a dependent being. This offers new and powerful motives to pray, and shows the necessity of looking continually to a higher power, to a better strength than our own; whose guidance is not only perfect freedom, but perfect safety. Our greatest danger begins at the moment we imagine we are able to go alone, without the guidance and directions of his Holy Spirit. Prayer is an act both of the understanding, and of the heart. It draws all of the Christian graces into a focus. It draws charity, followed by her lovely train. It draws repentance with her holy sorrows, her pious resolutions and self-distrust. It attracts faith, with a humble spirit. Prayer, continued from the secrets of our hearts, will, in time, enable us to conscientiously say that true religion has given a tone to my conduct, a law to my actions, a rule to my thoughts, a bridle to my tongue, a restraint to all my besetting sins; and we can say, let others do as they may, I will continue forever to "sing praises unto thee, O thou most high! I will continue to tell of thy loving kindness early in the morning, and of thy truth in the night season."

"O thou, by whom we come to God,
The life, the truth, the way,
The path of prayer thyself hast trod,
Lord teach me how to pray.

Happiness.

The word, "Happiness," has suggested itself to me as of very great importance. The human family are all striving to be happy here, or hereafter. When we look around us, we see many devices whereby man is trying to arive at some point of happiness; some trying in one way, and some another, to heap to themselves enjoyments. Many are the disappointments, because they soon find that the things of this world are vain; that fashions, riches, and the many ways in which the worldly are trying to enjoy themselves, are of no account; as the happiness is always expected, but never attained. It is folly to strive after happiness in any other way than that laid down in the law of God. It is the only source from which true happiness springs. We find it promised in the word of God, on the condition of true obedience; and on no other, to those that have come to the years of maturity. Happiness is promised in coming like the Prodigal, and being truly obedient to God's word.—And right here, my friends, I would advise great caution, that we get God's ways, and not God and man's commingled, and thus miss the object we seek. It requires caution, as there are a great many ways laid down which are not God's ways; and are intended by satan to mislead the human family, in seeking after happiness. I shall now come to the word of God and seek there, to know whether there is not happiness promised. In John's Gospel 13: 17, read: "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Some might say, what things? I say all things that our Savior has laid down; if we "know them," we must "do them." Just as a child, than knows its parent's will, can't be happy without it does it, we being God's children, so long as we obey not his word, we cannot be truly happy; for without true obedience we cannot have his spirit, and we are assured that without his spirit, we are none of his. But if we are truly obedient, we have the promise of peace; "peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." When we arive at this point we feel a happiness within us which we would not exchange for any of the gayeties of this world.—Seek ye first the kingdom of Heaven, and all things shall be added unto you.

"One by One we Cross the River."

The words of this beautiful song are very often brought to mind, when we hear of those who have crossed that mystic river of death at the beckoning of the angel boatman. One by one do loved friends and associates pass away from mortal sight, but only to watch and wait for us on the spirlt shore. Ah! yes; one by one the summons come, and such calls always warn us to be more than ever imbued with an earnest and fervent spirit to perform all our duties here in our probationary state, that when our life work is done, and the angel boatman is waiting to convey us over the dark and shadowy tide we may gladly obey the summons, and in peace and joy meet our Savior in his Father's glorious kingdom.

Then let us labor and rejoice; though there may be times of sorrow, and scenes of conflict, there are inner joys, in our mission here, which must live forever. There are beginnings of glory now, which must increase, and intensify through all the life that is to come.

"One by one we come to Jesus,
As we heed his gentle voice;
One by one his vineyard enter,
There to labor and rejoice;
One by one with sins forgiven,
May we stand upon the shore,
Waiting till the angel boatman
Takes the helm and guides us o'er;
And the white-robed angel boatman
Lands us on the shining shore."

Fame or Disobedience.

"He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2 : 4.

What do we understand by the language above quoted? Is it to obey all the requirements of the Savior, or to fall in with the popular religionists of the day, and lay on our shoulders a flimsy garb called religion, and when we come to the commandments of our blessed Savior call them good works, and pass on without observing them? We see many who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Savior, and claim to be teaching his Gospel which he declared should be preached to every creature, and to be beacon lights to guide sinners to a haven of peace and happiness beyond the skies. But, let us look for a moment and see what constitutes a Christian. To be a Christian, is to be Christ-like; and to be Christ-like is to obey the will of the Father, as Christ delivered it unto his disciples in the commission: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." What do we understand by the "all things?" Why, we certainly understand it to mean all that the Savior had commanded his disciples to observe. We show to the world that we are his disciples, by being obedient to his law.

He taught us to love one another and to do good for evil. He did not teach us to go forth into war, to slay our fellow beings. But how were his teachings regarded a few short years ago, when war, with its desolations visited our land? It was then that men stood in the pulpit, claiming to be ministers of Christ, and to be teaching Peace on earth and good will to men. But how was it when the call to arms was made? These same men, heedless of the command of the Savior, ("Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword,") doffed the clerical gown; laid the Holy Bible upon the shelf to be forgotten for a time; then grasped the sword and went forth to kill. But this was not all, they used their time and talents to persuade men to go forth and join the rubble who were thirsting for blood. Where was then the union, and fellowship, and brotherly love, that those same professors of Christianity claimed to have before those troubles came upon us? And what conclusion do we come to now, when we hear men raise their voices to a throne of grace and pray to the Father to dry the widow's tears, and and to be a Father to the orphan, to feed the hungry, and to clothe the naked, when those same persons, a few short years ago, used their energy and influence to cause the widow's tears to flow, and the orphan to cry for bread. Go where you will, you can see the effects of those troublesome times. Is that Christ-like? We are compelled to say it is not. If we love Jesus we will keep his commandments; and none other have the promise of eternal life. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?" If, after we have become the followers of Christ, and observed all his requirements, we cannot any more than escape the wrath to come, how will it be with those professors of Christianity, who have not the love of Christ abiding in them? But why will those professed religionists of the popular creeds, when those times come upon us, leave off teaching part of the doctrine of Christ that they have been claiming to preach, and turn their attention to worldly affairs? It is simply because they love the praises of men in this life, more than they do the will of God. But where is the reward beyond this life? "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Men may grasp at worldly honor and fame; but it has no promise beyond this world.

Let us take for example, four of the greatest men that history points out to us, who had obtained the greatest worldly fame—Alexander, Hannibal, Ceasar, and Bonaparte, and how sad was the end of these men.

Alexander, after having climbed the dizzy heights of his ambition, with his temples dipped in the blood of millions, looked down upon a conquered world, and wept because there was not another world for him to conquer,—set a city on fire, and died in a scene of debauchery.

Hannibal, after having, to the astonishment and consternation of Rome, passed the Alps, and put to flight the armies of the "Mistress of the world," and made her foundations quake, and stripped three bushels of gold rings from the fingers of his slaughtered knights, fled from his country; being hated by those who once exultingly united his name to that of their God, and called him Hanni-baal, died at last by poison administered by his own hand,—unlamented and unwept, in a foreign land.

Ceasar, after having conquered eight hundred cities and dyeing his garment in the blood of one million of his foes, having pursued to death the only rival he had on earth, was miserably assassinated by those he considered his nearest friends; and in the very place the attainment of which had been his greatest ambition.

Bonaparte, whose mandates kings and popes obeyed, after having filled the earth with the terror of his name, after having deluged Europe with tears and blood, and clothed the world in sackcloth, closed his days in a lonely banishment, almost exiled from the world; yet, where he could sometimes see his country's banner waving, which did not—and could not—bring him any aid.

Thus four great men,—whom the world called great—have passed away; and, Oh! how sad is the end of all such worldly greatness.

And now, brethren let us not aim to secure a great worldly name, but rather to follow in the footprints of Jesus; and seek a home in heaven, "where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest."—There are but two roads to eternity; and we are following one of them. If we love Jesus, and are keeping his commandments, we are in the strait and narrow path; but if we love not Jesus, we are in the broad road that leads to final misery, and banishment "from the presence of God and from the glory of his power."

To a Lover of Nature.

So beautifully is nature portrayed, that you deem the works of God too noble to ever be destroyed. You look upon nature, as affording a source of enjoyment to those who love to investigate the laws of natural science—that there is much lasting enjoyment to be obtained by such research; but I think this one reason why you can so easily resist the demands of the Holy Spirit.—

Whenever you are brought to feel the importance of everything in nature, as needed to supply the wants of man, you will readily understand how lost your condition is without complying with the requirements of heaven.

The harmonial laws of nature, in the light you view them, do only teach you the divinity and reality of God. Hence, nature has yet an important lesson to teach you; viz. that unless you partake of the spiritual food that God has sent from heaven, your soul will be lost to all eternity. This is a solemn thought, but it cannot be other wise than true. The soul must be fed or it will perish. The cultivation of a certain portion of the Vegetable Kingdom has afforded you much pleasure.—You love to see God's young and tender plants flourish, as well as the great oak of the forest. So with your heavenly Father; he manifests an interest in the care of the body as well as that of the soul; and if man will not partake of the natural food that God has provided for him, he will suffer physically, through want of the natural food or aliment that is calculated to sustain his mortal body.

The study of natural theology has afforded you much pleasure: yet you cannot in your present condition appreciate the happiness revealed by nature's revelations. God's design is, and ever was, that man shall be happy; and notwithstanding all the vicissitudes that human life is exposed to, man can be happy. But, to be happy in this life, man must be at peace with his Maker. He must renounce sin with all its allurements, and accept the Savior and his teachings as a sure guide to eternal happiness. It is the prospect of a home forever in the realms of eternal bliss, that beatifies the sad heart of man while here in this troublesome world, and causes him to look forward, beyond the cold grave, for a never fading crown of glory.—But such a hope of heaven you have not, nor can have, until you are willing to accept salvation on such terms as Jesus Christ has offered it to you.

It is strange how a man of your intellect can live in rebellion against a merciful God. That God has, for his own good pleasure and the enjoyment of man, created all the beauties of nature in perfect harmony and order, is a fact that you deem cannot be denied. Why then live in opposition to God. You are well aware that since the fall, man is in open rebellion against his Maker and unless he becomes obedient to the commands of the New Testament, (which is the new law;) his hope of a future reward is utterly lost. Why then not avail yourself of the means of securing peace for your soul, that shall remain to all eternity. If you love to behold the beautiful works of the Creator, why not submit to his will, that you may after death enter into the joys of the Lord, and enjoy his presence, and the things that he hath prepared for "them that love him," through out the never ceasing ages of eternity. May we not justly say, knowing the sanity of your mind, that it is Satan that is keeping you from making peace with your God. He is not cunning enough to deprive you of any moral happiness; yet, by his carnal devices, he has deprived you of what is calculated to illuminate your very soul,—the light of the glorious gospel of Jesus Christ.

You are a lover of nature. But strange to say, you do not love the Bible. You find but little or no beauty in it. This accounts for your being so little concerned about the salvation of your soul. You have plenty of time for any and evey thing else but to read the bible. O that you could crave a knowledge of that inspired volume! You look upon those who doubt the reality of God as an ignorant, debased class of people; while angels look upon you with pity, because you will not obey him. Oh! if the persecutions of Christian friends, the never ceasing warnings of a guilty conscience, and the continual appellations of the Holy Spirit, cannot arouse you to a sense of the duty you owe to God, I fear your condition is deplorable. You know by what means your soul can be ushered into the mansions of eternal glory. Then begin at once to serve the Lord. "For the night cometh wherein no man can work."

OLD AGE WITHOUT RELIGION.—Alas! for him who grows old without growing wise, and to whom the future world does not set open her gates, when he is excluded by the present. The Lord deals so graciously with us in the decline of life that it is a shame to turn a deaf ear to the lessons which he gives. The eye becomes dim, the ear dull, the tongue falters, the feet totter, all the senses refuse to do their office, and from every side resounds the call, "Set thine house in order, for the termination of thy pilgrimage is at hand."

The playmates of youth, the fellow-laborers of manhood, die away, and take the road before us. Old age is like some quiet chamber, in which, disconnected from the visible world, we can prepare in silence for the world that is unseen.—Tholuck.

Going to Jesus.

Nearly three years ago a noble steamer was sinking with hundreds of persons on board. Only one boat load was saved. As a man was leaping into the tossing boat, a girl who could not be taken into the boat, and who knew that she would soon be swallowed up in the deep, deep sea, handed him a note, saying,

"Give this to my mother!"

The man was saved. The girl, with hundreds of other persons, was drowned. The mother had the note. What do you think the little girl had written in it? Here are the words:

"Dear mother you must not grieve for me- I am going to Jesus."

Dear girl! What faith and courage she must have had to write that note!

She was going to Jesus through the stormy waves of the angry sea, yet she was not afraid That is the kind of faith you need, my reader. Well, Jesus will give it to you if you ask him, for he says, "Come unto me."—"I will give you rest."

It makes dying easy to know that we are going to the bright home which Jesus has gone to make very beautiful. Let us all get ready for that bright home by loving Jesus.—Heavenly Tidings.

For the Companion.

"I Am the Way." John 16 : 1.

There are two ways represented in the Scriptures, the broad, and the narrow way: the latter we accept as being the "I am the way." Solomon said: "He preserveth the way of his Saints" Prov. 2: 8. The Prophet spake of "the way" in his day, saying: "This is the way, walk ye in it," Is. 30: 21. Again, "he shall prepare the way," Matt. 3: 1. The way is open unto all who know good from evil; and all who will can enter upon the way, narrow as it is represented in Matt. 7. It is still wide enough to contain all that will enter upon it. Jesus says, "Come:" the angels rejoice in heaven to see all coming: come now; (Matt: 28.)—"The Spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst come," Rev. 22: 17. "I am the way" to heaven,—a home for all that will enter and continue in "the way:"—it leads to joys on high, where there is no more parting or separation, weeping or mourning, neither pain nor death: all is joy, peace, rest forevermore at God's right hand in heaven.

"I am the way;"—which admits of nothing more or less than that which is set forth in the Schedule or agreement,—a full resignation of our will to God. I am the way to repentance, faith, and baptism the only weapons used to enter. I am the way. By the time we come this far on the way much has been surrendered, while much remains to be accomplished. All that was near and dear to us has been forsaken for Christ's sake; and our will now, is by the grace of God to accomplish the end of our creation. Honor and serve him, who said: "I am the way" Now the great warfare is just begining; and dangers must be passed; and the enemy subdued; and his fortifications destroyed.—Paul would say: "fight the good fight of faith: lay hold on eternal life," 1st Tim. 6: 12, remembering "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal; but mighty, though god to the pulling down of strongholds: casting down imagination, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." I am the way." (2 Cor. 10: 3.) We said dangers must be passed. Well, all can do something in removing the obstacles and surmounting the hills of satan. We all remember when at home by our own firesides, when feast time comes we all have our particular place. When one of the members of our family is absent, we see the vacancy at table. When we go to the feast of the Lord, (public worship) and see vacant seats, we are immediately made to inquire—where are brother und sister B. and C. Why, they are gone visiting, or slept too long this morning, or it was too distant, or there were some indications of rain or snow, or many other causes just as groundless for absence. We said all can do something. "I am the way." Brethren and sisters, when the officials fail to be present at the feast, they generally meet with but little mercy.—But could I tell you, or could you for a moment concieve, how much encouragement you would afford those whom you have called to the ministry, by your never being absent from meeting, when in reasonable distance, (say ten miles,) we think men would attend every meeting. Poor weak ministers of him who said, "I am the way," have oftimes to go twelve or fifteen miles in the morning, cross hills, mountains, rivers, regardless of rain or storm. Come brethren and sisters, go with us: share a part of the heavy task; and so "bear ye one anothers burdens." We admit, Satan the weakest saint will tempt, nor is the strongest free; but let us live to grow better. Make at last some progress on the way. Establish family alters. Take the word,—"Watch and pray." Every one watch himself; then we will find less fault with others, and soon we will love to go to meeting. And meet with oneanother at the family altar, and exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. By these resolutions, and the carrying of them into effect, I believe we are truly following him who said 'I am the way;" then we know to a demonstration that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren.

To the Young.

Dear young Readers of the Companion, I have seated myself, for the first time to try to converse with you through the silent medium of the pen. I do not expect to drop you many lines at present; feeling and knowing myself not capable of addressing you in a proper way, as I am young in years and also young in the good cause of our Lord and Master.

But we have all got a duty to perform, or, in other words, a talent to improve; and if we do not improve that talent, the fault will be ours. All of us who have arrived at years to know good from evil, have a work to do; a spiritual work, for the benefit of our souls. It is very necessary that it should be attended to before it is everlastingly too late. This is a thought that should make deep impressions upon our minds, and sink deep into our every hearts,—both saint and sinner, that we may secure our soul's salvation while living here upon earth. As we have no lease of our lines we dont know how long we may live here in this unfriendly world; but again, we know according to nature, at the longest it will not be long. But if we are only prepared to meet our God in an acceptable manner, it matters very little when we are called from this world of sin, and trouble, to a world of joy and happiness.

Therefore we should all try to make our peace, calling, and election sure, for while the lamp of life is still burning. As death calls us, so the judgment will find us. We will have no time to repent after death: Then why not come and partake of the waters of life freely? I would just ask you one question, namely this, How many of your comrades, friends, near and dear relations, have gone the way of all the earth, to try the realities of a world unknown to them: there to rece ve their rewards for the deeds done here in the body whether good or bad? Oh! if one of us should be so unlucky as to miss heaven and its happiness, we would be hurled into everlasting misery and woe! But, on the other hand, the angels would rejoice to see a straying soul come home to God' into the realms above where parting is known no more.

I know I for my part have brothers gone, I have a sister gone, and Oh! I do firmly believe they are all happy in eternity; for our Savior says, "suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of heaven." But you and I who have come to the years of acountability have a law to go by; and if we abide by that law, we may have a "right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates, into the city." These are lasting promises, which our Savior, who suffered, bled, and died, and rose again left on record for us, that we might live a peaceable, and a quiet life, in all Godliness and honesty, through a world without end.

Religion In Business.

One very important department of life where religion is to hold perpetual sway, is that of business. "As the golden sunlight tints the flower, and colors the rock; as it sparkles in the dew-drop, and shines in the broad, magnificent ocean," so should religion permeate every transaction with our fellow-men. It should go with its possessor into the counting-room, the store, the market, the factory: and its influence should be felt in all places. Some have asserted that a man can not be a good Christian and a successful merchant. But, happily, a cloud of living witnesses can attest the contrary of such an allegation. Although in this age of speculation and fierce competition, trade, in numerous instances, is an enameled falsehood, and business transactions a tissue of deceptions: yet, thanks be to God, and to the honor of religion be it proclaimed, there are still to be found successful Christian merchants, who hold on to their integrity; who will never descend to any transaction of an equivocal character, even though it be sanctioned by the laws of custom and the tricks of trade. The upright professional man, the honest trader, the pious and industrious artisan, yet live, and steadily pursue their noble course; being "not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." These men bear testimony before the world that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is," as well as "that which is to come." May God increase their number a thousand-fold.

But it must ever be kept in view by Christian men engrossed in business, especially in large cities, that more than ordinary watchfulness is necessary to retain their spirituality, and to maintain their Christian character unsullied, amid all the temptations, excitement, and anxiety incident to their callings. They must ever dare to be singular, and stem the current of popular opinion and custom. They must be resolved, in the might of Omnipotence, never to turn aside, to the right hand or the left. And in order to arm themselves for every day's temptations and trials, they must obtain power from above. The "man after God's own heart," was a father, a master, a ruler, a warrior, and had to attend to numerous duties connected with each of these callings; but he always found a parenthesis for prayer, and set times for secret devotion. And in this way only can the flame of religion be kept alive in the soul, and illumine all life's avocations.

How many are there whose powers are so exhausted by business as to have neither time, inclination, nor energy to seek after their own spiritual interests, much less those of their families. But who does not perceive that the life of such a man is the life of an idiot? There is, after all, something higher, and nobler, and better, than merely "to buy and sell, and get gain." "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"—Rev. John Berg.

Deep Preaching.

You sometimes find a man who is denominated a "deep preacher." We heard such an one last Sabbath. We confess we did not understand him, and yet it was not because of his great profundity of thought or immense learning, but because he was metaphysical, abstract, and wrapped up his thoughts in abstruse, high-sounding jargon. The audience inclined, gaped and started, and pronounced him "deep," and doubtless wondered "how one small head could carry all he knew;" but he reminded me of the sarcastic words of Swift in reference to such preachers in his day. "They are like dry wells; you think they are wondrous deep because they are wondrous dark; whereas, this darkness is because of their emptiness."

Didn't Whip Him.—St. Paul saved himself from being whipped, once, by a single dignified remark. Acts 22: 25. A few words well put saved uncle Jack, an aged negro preacher, from the same infliction. The laws of Virginia, until lately, prohibited religious as well as any other assemblies of slaves, unless at least two white persons were present. Such, however, was the universally acknowledged happy influence of Uncle Jack's meetings, that in his case it was not deemed necessary to enforce the laws. On one occasion some mischievous persons undertook to arrest and whip him, and several of his hearers. After the arrest, one of the members thus accosted uncle Jack: "Well, old fellow, you are the ringleader of all the meetings, and we have been anxious to catch you; now, what have you got to say for yourself?" "Nothing at all, master," was the reply. "What! nothing to say against being whipped! how is that!" "I have been wondering for a long time," said he, "how it was that so good a man as the Apostle Paul should have been whipped three times for preaching the Gospel, while such an unworthy man as I am should have been permitted to preach for twenty years without even getting a lick." It is hardly necessary to add that these young men immediately released him.

He learns much who studies other men; he also learns much who studies himself

Conversion.

The term conversion, in its general sense, denotes a change from one strate to another. In a religious sense it means, a change, from a carnal and irreligious, to a religious state and manner of life. This great change is usually expressed, in the Old Testament, by turning to, or seeking the Lord; but, to explain more fully the true nature of conversion, we must consider:

1. What conversion is not.

Conversion is not merely an external change, or that which lies only in an outward reformation of life and manners. Outward conversion may exist, when true internal conversion does not. Many, indeed, suppose themselves converted, because they have reformed from their evil habits; or, because they have been moral, and well behaved from youth up; or something of this kind. But this is evidently a false view of the matter; and if any have such an erroneous opinion of conversion, my prayer is, that the good Lord may have mercy on you, and undeceive you before it is too late.

Conversion is not a mere doctrinal change; that is, a change from a set of false doctrines, to the belief of sound doctrine. A man may change his faith, and yet, be unchanged in heart; he may change from one sect to another; he may change from heathenism to a profession of Christianity; and after all, be in the gall of bitterness, and the bound of iniquity; therefore, this is also a dangerous view of the subject. Yet many rest here, to their own distruction; and some ministers appear willing to have it so. They convert men to their favorite creeds; and not from satan to God.

Conversion, lies not merely in the observance of the outward forms of religion; such as baptism, feet washing, the Lord's supper, prayer, &c. Genuine conversion is antecedent to, and an assential prerepuisite of, a worthy observance of all the ordinances and forms of religion.

2. What true conversion is.

Conversion lies in the illumination and change of the mind. The mind, by nature, is in a state of spiritual darkness and ignorance; and must therefore, be enlightened, and brought to a belief of the truth; hence it is said: "the natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned."(1 Cor. 2 : 14.) Or as Christ said to Paul: "But rise, stand upon thy feet; for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness, both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, andfrom the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, To open their eyes ,and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of satan unto God." (Acts 26 : 16 — 18.) Thus we see Paul was sent to open the people's eyes, or to enlighten their minds. This he was to do by preaching the gospel; in order that they might turn, and be converted from darkness to the marvelous light and liberty of the Gospel. that is, to the belief and obedience of the truth. Hence we find that conversion is intended to enlighten the minds; and then, through the mind, the heart and life. By nature, head, heart, and life, are all wrong; By conversion all are made right; therefore true conversion lies in a thorough change of heart. The heart of man, by nature, "is fully set to do evil continually:" it is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Man's propensities and passions are averse to good things, and inclined to evil things. Now this natural aversion to that which is good, and this inclination of the mind to do evil, this temper and disposition of the heart, must be changed; and this change in the spirit and disposition of the heart, is the work of true conversion: —a*thorough* change an internal changean evangelical change not merely an outward change, as I have already stated.

Conversion in some respects seems to fall in with regeneration; yet in other respects it is distinguished from it. Regeneration is the act of God; and conversion is both the act of God and man. Conversion embraces a change of heart and newness of life. A thorough change of heart and mind, is followed by a change in life and conduct. Every man who loves the truth, will obey it, if he sincerely believes it. This is what true religion is designed to do: to bring sinful man to the love and obedience of God and his word, is the design of the Gospel. This great change of heart, mind, and life is beautifully set forth in the history of the Prodigal son. In his return from his wanderings to his father's house we have all the characteristics of conversion. We learn his wretched condition; also, the manner of his awakening, and the means which induced him to consider when and what he was—the thoughts which entered his mind, and caused his return —his repentance—his confession— his faith—and his prayer; and at last, his full acceptance by his father; who so kindly, and joyfully received him. All these are beautifully descriptive of the means and steps of the sinner's conversion.

How to be Happy.

I will give you two or three good rules which may help you to become happier than you would be without knowing them, but, as to being completely happy, that can never be till you get to Heaven.

The first is: "Try your best to make others happy." "I never was happy," said a certain king," till I began to take pleasure in the welfare of my people; but ever since then, in the darkest day, I have had sunshine in my heart."

My second rule: "Be content with little." There are many good reasons for this rule. We deserve but little—we require but little; and "better is little, with the fear of God, than great treasures and trouble therewith." Two men were determined to be rich, but they set about it in different ways; but the one strove to raise up his means to his desires, while the other did his best to bring down his desires to his means. The result was, the one who coveted much was always repining, while he who desired but little was always contented.

My third rule: "Look on the sunny side of things."

"Look up with hopeful eyes,
Though all things seem forlorn
The sun that sets to-night will rise
Again to-morrow morn."

The skipping lamb, the singing lark and the leaping fish tell us that happiness is not confined to one place; God, in his goodness, has spread it abroad on the earth, in the air, and in the waters. Two aged women lived in the same cottage; one was always fearing a storm, and the other was always looking for sunshine. Hardly need I say which it was wore a forbidding frown, or which it was whose face was lightened up with joy.

EXTRAVAGANT GESTURE.—Moderate and appropriate gesture is not only becoming to the minister, but is highly beneficial in elucidating and enforcing his meaning. Great violence of action, however, is not uniformly appropriate to the pulpit, nor is it generally attended with the best moral and spiritual results. Little children sometimes look at things in their truest light, and interpret them through conceptions not yet distorted by the prejudices and practices of older persons. Such seems to have been the case with little four year Carrie, who, on returning from church with her mother, said: "I have heard such a smart minister. He stamped and pounded, and made such a noise, and then he got so mad he shook his fists at the folks, and their wasan't anybody that dared go up and fight him."

"When God puts us on the earth, it is not to dream about heaven, but to prepare for it."

One that truly fears God is afraid of sin. He sees more evil in it than in all the evil in the world.

PRUDENCE, through the grounds of misery, cuts the river of patience, where the mind swims in boats of tranquility along the stream of life, until she arrives at the haven of death, where all streams meet.

The Call For 1000.

We have the pleasure of announcing the addition of 60 names to our list since our last notice. This makes 300 to be deducted from the 1000, and leaves us only 700 to fill the call. A little more effort and we shall be gratified. We do hope that we shall not be required to resort to a draft to raise these few names.

As an extra inducement we will raise the bounty. For seventy-five cents we will send the balance of this year, remaining at the time the subscription is received. But be it understood, that we do not agree to furnish any back numbers; only what remains at the time of subscribing. Therefore it will be to the advantage of subscribers to subscribe early. This will embrace the Report of the Proceedings of next Annual Meeting, and the Minutes, and is the most liberal offer we have ever made. Under this arrangement we think it will be any easy task for each friend to fill his quota, of getting one subscriber. Only 700 more.

Expected Visit.

On Thursday evening next, (12th) we expect to arrive at Gettysburgh Pa., on our way to middle Pennsylvania District. We will remain in the neighborhood of Gettysburgh until Sunday afternoon. We expect to accompany brother Grabill Myers and perhaps father.

Tyrone Meeting.

On Sunday, 15th inst, at 10 o'clock A. M. and every alternate Sunday thereafter, preaching may be expected in the Brethren's room, in the Public school-house, in Tyrone.

The Pious Youth.

For May is now ready and has been sent to its subscribers. It is made up in two half sheets. If our patrons approve we propose to change the form to that of thirty two pages, and make up in four quarter sheets, of eight pages each, for separate distribution. We want tracts for general circulation, and in this way we could publish them at the lowest possible rates. What say you brethren and sisters? Would it be right to circulate the truth a little farther?—Or is it intended only for us? These are weighty questions.

Now is the time to subscribe for the Youth. One dollar per annum; to Companion subscribers 75cts.—Sunday Schools supplied at reduced rates, where twenty or more copies are wanted.

Answers to Correspondents.

G. W. HOXIE. We have sent you such back numbers as we could find, and hope all will be right hereafter.

C. WENGER. According to our book, C. Hildebrand had not renewed his subscription. We have sent back numbers from No 10. Prior to that, A. Stover received two copies of each issue; one of which may be given to C. H. We will send the Companion to C. Hildebrand; and have charged you with $1.50. Hope it is all right.

H. J. SHELLENBERGER. We will appropriate the balance to poor persons who want the paper.

ANSWERS. Letters requiring, answers for the benefit or gratification of the writer ought to contain a stamp to prepay return letter.

J. C. LEHMAN. Your subscription is marked paid on the book; but the other name you mention is not.

SUSANNA HESS. "The Bible Prophet" is not deemed quite appropriate

JOHN R. NISWONGER. You have paid for the Companion for 1870.

DANIEL HAYS. Seventy-five cents will pay for the Companion for Polly Giser to the end of the year. Your proposition to Wm. Cassady and C E. Inman is all right.

THE ADVERTISERS GAZETTE, issued by G. P. Rowell & Co., No. 40 Park Row, New York, contains much information not to be obtained elsewhere. Every advertiser should read it. Sample copies by mail for 15 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript needs not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only Brother Holsinger ; Please pardon my seeming negligence, for coming in at the 11th hour. The reason of my waiting so long was to get one subscriber at least which I have gained. I have taken the Companion from its birth, and wish to take it as long as I can see to read. It is a great comfort to me, to have preaching at home, when I cannot get out to meeting often. I think I have my last paper that is paid for, and this will not reach you before your next issue: please dont drop me from your list of subscribers, and send me this week's paper also, as I do not wish to lose one number. I now enclose two dollars, one I think will pay mine to the end of Vol. 6, (Am I right ?)The balance is for the new subscriber.

CATHARINE C. FRANTZ.

North Hampton, Ohio.

We are glad to hear from our first friends and supporters. Hope our sister may be long spared to enjoy the consolation of reading the good tidings of the gospel of salvation. That is one of the objects of our publication, to afford encouragement to such of our brethren and sisters, who cannot be reached by other means.

For the Companion.

Pride Cometh before the Fall.

Dear Brethren ; I have been reading the Companion for some time, and see many good pieces in it ; but very little is said of pride, which is one of the greatest evils in the church. Pride was excluded from heaven ; and can never enter there. Oh ; brethren and sisters, let us keep in the valley of humility if we would be his followers. But we fear there is too much of the fashions and customs of this world getting in amongst the brethren and sisters. I can well remember, when I was added to the church, our brethren and sisters were easily distinguished from the world ; but it is not the case now ; many of them cannot be known by their dress, nor by their walk and conversation. Is it because they are ashamed ? If so we are not letting our light shine before men that they may glorify our Father in heaven. I verily believe if we would all come to the order of the Brethren, we would be a better light to the world ; and the world would think better of us for coming up to the standard of our profession and our Christian duties. Thus we might be the means of winning many souls to Christ. But oh ! brethren, I fear that many of our ministering brethren are too much engaged in the things that pertain to this world, instead of admonishing the brethren and sisters to abstain from these fashionable lusts. "That which is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God" Yours in love.

J. KINSEY.

Brother Henry ; With pleasure and satisfaction we peruse the Companion. It gives us great instruction and encouragement, as we travel through this world of woe. We often hear from our beloved brethren and sisters through it, as we hear preaching here only once a month, the Companion is a great satisfaction to us. Brother Flory preaches for us here. I wish we could hear the brethren preach oftener ; it cheers us up so much to meet together and hear the true word preached. But laboring brethren are scarce out here yet. We will have to be content with our lot. In trying to live a christian life, we have many trials and temptations to undergo ; but if we put our trust in the Lord, he will deliver us out of all troubles, we must endure persecutions. I often think of what Christ said when he preached on the mount, (Matt. 5 : 10. 5.) "Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." That is a great consolation to the Christian. Christ was persecuted before us, therefore we should bear the cross for his sake. When I hear of persecutions, it makes me feel strong in the faith. I think we have God's word on our side ; and while we have, we need not fear. There are some that say they would like to belong to the Church, but don't like to wear the cap, but I think when their hearts are right, they will soon become reconsiled to the cap ; I think it looks much better than ribbons or tassels on the head. I am young yet, but am not ashamed to wear the cap as a wearing for my head ; and we are commanded to dress ourselves in modest apparel. We should not follow after the pride of the world. We should not care for the treasures of earth too much. Let us "lay up treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and thieves do not break through nor steal." Christ says : "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Now, is the time to work in obedience to God's commandments, and then, rest in heaven.

"Thou immortal child of man,
God to thee a work hath given,—
Haste this life is but a span ;
Work on earth and rest in heaven.

Fight the faith of Cristian faith ;
Strive as all the good have striven ;
Faithful proving unto death,—
Work on earth and rest in heaven."

CHARLOTT J. MASTERS.

Brother Holsinger : I fear some obituary notices in the Companion and Gospel Visitor are calculated to lure people to a death-bed repentance —without baptism. Some have died without obeying that command, without which the Savior said a man "cannot see the kingdom of God ;" yet it is said their friends "do not sorrow as those who have no hope." Another says, "we feel satisfied that the will was taken for the act." Brethren keep yourselves "pure from the blood of all men." My desire is that the Lord will receive all that truly repent—without baptism ; but where is the promise ? We must leave them in the hands of the Lord. We should not refer to such as an example ; but rather as a warning. When application is made for baptism, there should be no delay, when it is possible to attend to it. The sick should not be told, "you are too weak" If they are only in their right mind, it can be accomplished. I have known sick to be baptized in bathing tubs, and stock-troughs brought to the bedside, when they could not be taken out, life being nearly gone. I have known men to wait for returning reason, and then hurry up the work. I have also known them to put it off for next day, and then it was too late. A composed mind, without complying with the commands of God, is not always an assurance of full pardon; but with God all things are possible. The thief on the cross, incapable of action, was pardoned. So it may be possible that the helpless ones—sick, or bound by the power of the law, as the soldiers and prisoners were in our late war—can be saved by true penitence, without baptism; but that is all God's work. Our work is to obey God in whatsoever he has commanded us; and to try to get others to do the same, as far as we have power.

HANNAH KNAUFF.

Brother Henry; I noticed your remark in Companion No. 15, concerning the Brethren's Tune and Hymn Book. You say you expect to use the Patent System. I am sorry to hear that; and more sorry to say that you will meet with no success in selling the book in our branch (Berlin,) as we are convinced that the Patent System is very imperfect. We hope you will change your mind before you publish it, as all music now a days, of any standing, is written in the Round System. Now as a general rule, when we sit under the sound of the Gospel, we look for something sound, and coming from the root. The same rule should be observed in writing music; and in order to come to the point and root we must take the Round System. You also say a large majority prefer the Patent System. I have no doubt in my mind that that majority have never had any knowledge of the Round System. No doubt they think this is a new feature, or new thing, and therefore they prefer the Patent System. But so it is, some persons don't want anything but what their grand-fathers had.

C. H. WALKER.

Berlin, Pa.

The above shows what an easy matter it is for one to be mistaken. Our brother should know that the Round Note system is the old method of writing music and the Patent Notes the new. The latter is the improved method. They bear a relation to each other about as the old way of plowing and reaping does with that of the present manner of performing those labors. Of course the man who learned to plow with the wooden mould-board, and to reap with the crooked sickle, knows what the "real thing" is, and just how much muscle it takes to do it, but the modern farmer drives by him and does his work quicker, better, and easier, without that knowledge. So with the improved system of writing, teaching, and learning music. More has been accomplished by the Patent Notes, in imparting a practical knowledge of music, in the last fifty years, than would have been accomplished in two centuries by the Round Notes. The Round Notes are for the few, and the Patent Notes for the many.

We could publish the Tune and Hymn Book at much less expense in the Round Notes than in any other system; but we could neither expect to sell it or have it used by the Brotherhood.

Brother Holsinger: "That something may be done when an effort is made" does not hold good in every case, or I should not now be constrained to approach the office of the Christian Family Companion, without hearing with me "words of good cheer" from some of our members here; who, by their co-operation in the matter might enable you to deduct a few numerals from the "one thousand."

The church of the Brethren at Walnut Bottom, is represented by seven families; whilst but one name out of the number appears in the subscription list. And wherefore? It is not because I have failed to remind them of their duty, or ceased to employ my humble efforts in behalf of the Companion and Pious Youth. Of the latter, I have not yet seen a copy. Hence I am not prepared from my own experience to confer an estimate upon its merits. But I have sufficient information from the repeated compliments that have appeared in the columns of the Companion, from those who have examined the numbers already published, to convince me that it is answering the purpose for which it is designed, and is justly deserving of the title it bears. Therefore I enclose one dollar as a remuneration for a complete volume. MIRANDA.

Brother Henry; Having noticed some of the articles and queries in reference to the thief on the cross, and the place of paradise, and the spirits in prison, and whether Christ after his crucifixion preached only to those who were disobedient while the ark was preparing, I will give a few Scriptural quotations touching some of those points. The apostle Paul, in speaking of the third heaven, 2 Cor. 12: 2 says: "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell: or whether out of the body, I cannot tell, God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven." Now in this verse he calls it heaven. The 4th verse reads: "How that he was caught up into paradise,"—not down, as some supposed, with the disobedient spirits. So I think Paul tells us where paradise is. We infer from the language of Peter, that Christ did not preach to the spirits until after his resurrection. Peter says: "Christ being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits." The body, we think was quickened; then he (Christ,) went and preached; which would be after Christ had taken the thief to paradise. I am not prepared to tell how many classes were preached to. Peter, only makes mention of those who were disobedient while the ark was a preparing, and from this we infer that it was to them exclusively.

J. HARSHBARGER

Brother Henry: I see by last No. of Companion, (No. 12,) that you have not yet got the number of subscribers you desired, and as I only got the number doubled at the Batavia P. O., I have got two more to agree to take the Companion the balance of the year. I will be happy to distribute a few odd numbers, and try to get others to take it for I really think every member ought to take it. Some are not able, but the majority is not willing. We have some brethren that are able to take two political papers, but not able (they say) to take the Companion. I have taken it since the [illegible]

No., and I would not take now what it cost me. I would like to have a little more editorial sometimes.

We are also readers of the Pious Youth. The children can hardly wait till the next number comes. I fondly hope it may be the means of doing a great deal of good.

With our best wishes for your success and the prosperity of the Companion and Youth, and the enlargement and the health of the church of Christ, I remain yours,

D. H. GARBER.

Brother Henry; I don't want to be classed among those of your indolent patrons who will not get you any new subscribers; and have succeeded in getting two new names, which please add to your subscription list for Companion. J. S. THOMAS.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Thank you, brother Thomas.—Your effort was a success: and the favor is duly appreciated.

Dear Brother Editor; By your permission and according to the request of the brethren at Waterloo, Iowa, I will say that I expect to arrive there, (the Lord willing,) on the second or third day of June; to remain with them until after the Yearly Meeting.

I will also say to the brethren at Cowansbannoc, Hillsdale, Red Bank, and Clarion that I can't visit them in June, as they have requested. I would be happy to meet with them, at their time; but have concluded to attend the Yearly Meeting.

JOHN NICHOLSON.

Kind Brother Henry; I seat my self to do what I have long thought of doing, but through weakness and not having much education, I did not; but as I can not longer quench the Spirit, I will write a few lines, hoping you will correct my mistakes. I must say, your paper is great comfort to me; and will be so long as it keeps within the limits of the Gospel. Through it I get a great deal of information—more especially it is comfort—since I have emigrated to the far west, where I have not the opportunity of hearing the brethren preach more than once a month, and sometimes not that. Here is a large field open. I pray the Lord to send laborers into his vineyard. I also, through its columns sometimes hear from my native state (Virginnia;) where I have spent many happy hours with my loving relatives, friends, brethren and sisters; had the privlege of meeting every Sabbath, somewhere for worship.—Oh! may the Lord bless their labors, their houses, and help them in time of need. May he help us all to hold out faithful to the end, is the sincere prayer of your unworthy sister. BETTIE V. MILLER.

Falls City, Neb.

Brother Henry; Will you, through the Companion, give directions to us Eastern delegates, going to the District Meeting to be held at Mingo, Montgomery Co., Pa.? R. HYDE.

You will take the Reading Rail Road; and stop off at Royer's Ford Station—the first station above Phoenixville.

A Request for Meeting.

We invite ministers on their way to the Annual Meeting to stop with us in the Dry Creek congregation, 8 miles North of Cedar Rapids, to hold a series of meetings and to set in order what we need. From Chicago take the North-Western Railroad, to Cedar Rapids: where you will be met, and conveyed to the place of meeting. Railway or private conveyance from this to the place of Annual Meeting. Brethren, who will stop with us can write to either of the following brethren giving notice of the time they expect to be at Cedar Rapids. J. O. Wallers, S. Strayer, Solomon Stamy, or Thomas G. Snyder. Their address is, Drycreek, Linn Co. Iowa.

THOMAS G. SNYDER.

Brother S. Z. Sharp, Maryville, Tenn.,—fills his quota, and adds: "I have put a Companion into every family of the brethren in our county. Who beats that?"

We do not think that can be beaten in that way, but some of our agents have sent a great many more subscribers without beating it, and perhaps with less effort than brother Sharp put forth. We accept the will for the deed. If a friend makes an effort to secure subscribers he has our thanks whether he succeeds or not, but an evidence of such efforts in the shape of a subscriber and the necessary amount of stamps is a little the most acceptable. All of which will no doubt be thought quite probable.

February the 14th, in Montgomery branch, Clearfield county Pa., JOHN BOUCH; aged 65 years, 1 month, and 9 days. Funeral services from John 5: 28, 29, by Mark Menser and the writer. The deceased's intention was to unite with the Brethren; but to-morrow robbed him of his intention. Hear "now is the accepted time."

P. BEER.

In the Antietam congregation, Washington county, Md., on the 25th of April, brother JOSEPH GARVER, ; aged 66 years, 10 months, and 13 days.

On last Sabbath brother Joseph was with us at meeting, about four miles from his home, in usual health: returned home in the afternoon, and at 7 o'clock in the evening was stricken down with paralysis, and on Monday morning at 3 o'clock was a corpse. Truly in the midst of life we are in death.

In the same branch on the 26th of April, brother JOHN MILLER; aged 81 years, 9 months, and 10 days. Brother Miller for the last year felt the infirmities of age very much and had a longing desire to depart and be at rest.

Both occasions improved by brethren H. Koontz, I Price and others; the first, from 1 Cor. 5: 1. the second 23: 10.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all excuse for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

My Companion.

BY JOS. W. BEER.

My Companion comes weekly, with tidings of cheer;
He waits not for sunshine, throughout the whole year;
And once, in each month, he brings with him a Youth,
That's highly commended for wisdom and truth.

My Companion I love, and I long for the day,
In which he's to come his kind visit to pay.
I know, when he comes, he will cheer my lone heart,
Which waits for the lessons, that he shall impart.

My Companion reminds me of what I should do;
And gives me direction I love to pursue;
I know they will lead me to mansions on high,
If, to his instructions, my heart I apply.

My Companion is pleasant, and cheerful, and wise,
In love and compassion, he points to the skies;
And when I am languid, and fainting, and weak,
My strength is renewed, when to me he doth speak.

My Companion, I hope you will ever be blest,
To come to me weekly to give my mind rest.
And bring that Youth with you oft as you can;
'Tis pleasant to me your bright faces to scan.

My Companion has told me his story of love;
My soul now looks upward to mansions above;
Where, soon, I shall meet with my brethren and friends,
Whose homes, like my own, the Companion attends.

Sin of Blasphemy.

Brother Holsinger I noticed in Companion present volume, page 126, that D. L. Fisher wishes to have some one to give his views on the passage of scripture found in Matthew 12: 31, 32, which alludes to the sin against the Holy Ghost. It is answered by W. H. Franklin, on page 147, which answer does not altogether meet my approbation, therefore I will try to give my views on the subject as I understand it.—Verse 32nd, reads: "And whosoever speaketh a word against the son of man it shall be forgiven him but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world neither in the world to come."

The querist seems to have formed the opinion that this sin was a sin differing from all others. Truly it is, from the fact that all others may be forgiven and this one not. Now let us review the Scriptures, and see if we can find any one act of man that is so horrible, and of such a heinous nature that would cause the Savior to say it shall not be forgiven.

We will in the first place examine Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, 6: 4, and see what he has to say on the subject. He says: "for it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the Heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again to repentance." He says above, it is impossible to renew them to repentance. In the 13: 3, of the Gospel by Luke, we read: "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." These characters are set forth by the Savior as sinners; hence the necessity of repentance.—Now we will go back to our text again. In the 31st verse we read: "wherefore I say unto you, all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men."—From this passage we learn there is but one sin that hath no forgiveness.

Now we think we have found that in Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, above referred to, and he tells us the subject that did commit that sin had tasted of the Heavenly Gift, and was made partaker of the Holy Ghost, before he committed that awful sin.

"In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established," says the Savior. I will next call your attention to the 10th chapter of Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews, and begin at the 26th verse which reads as follows: "For if we sin wilfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, (not before) there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of Judgment and fiery indigtion which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses, of how much sorer punishment suppose ye shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite to the spirit of grace." The pharisees persecuted and spake all manner of evil against the son of God, but they had not tasted of the Heavenly Gift, neither were they made partakers of the Holy Ghost, neither did they count the blood of the covenant, wherewith they were sanctified an unholy thing, for they were never sanctified. Taking this view of the case we come to the conclusion that they were not the characters referred to. And not only so, but we see many of them taking an active part in resisting the spread of his doctrine, and afterward becoming believers in him, and he rejected none that came unto him and confessed him to be the Christ, the son of God, and willing to obey him in all things. He says: "though their sin be as crimson, it shall be as white as snow; though it be as scarlet it shall become white like wool."

In conclusion I would say, out of pure love for the truth I have written this, hoping no offence will be taken. By blending our thoughts together we may the better arrive at the truth as it is set forth in the Gospel.

Self-Mortification.

"For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: But if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Rom. 8: 13.

The Apostle Paul so beautifully contrasts the law of life, and the law of death, that no one can fail to comprehend the line that is drawn. All must "live after the flesh" and "die;" or, "through the Spirit, mortify the deeds of the flesh, and live." There seems to be no neutral ground to occupy; for, when we apply the Golden Rule, we may readily see that our moral character, though applauded by men, will not save us. The Savior plainly taught his disciples that he that is not for us is against us.—Then we are either building up, or pulling down; living after the first "Adam," which is of the earth earthy; or living through the second "Adam," "who is the Lord from heaven," manifesting that new life in Christ Jesus.

They who spend all their talents, time, and means, to promote their worldly interests, are living "after the flesh," and not the "Spirit;" hence the interests must perish with the "flesh;" and they will sustain the loss of eternal life in the world to come. And not only by hoarding up property, do we manifest a worldly and depraved nature; but it is prominently set forth in every step of life; and alas! too often seen taking a prominent place in the Christian home, by the fireside, and in the every day intercourse of life, even of brethren and sisters; and especially in engaging in too much light talk, or "joking;" that is, telling falsehoods under the head of a "joke," to make sport. Oh! it is an abomination in the sight of Almighty God! Remember that God will require us to give an account of every idle word, as well as every deed done in the body. Then, is there one guilty that should be a light in the world? Let us examine ourselves and see, that we may "mortify the deeds of the body" and "live."

Nor does it stop here. Oh! shall I write it? shall I speak it? A voice seems to say as by inspiration "cry aloud and spare not." When brethren meet together in council, even our Elders, and leaders—see the divisions, strife, and hardness—instead of love that should flow as a mighty river.

Brethren let me admonish and entreat you as fathers in "Israel," that this state of things should not be as it has been for the past year or two. It throws a gloom over the Brotherhood, to see our Elders arrayed in strife against each other; and using such sharp criticisms, as have been used in our periodicals. Brethren does such conduct emanate from the "Spirit," or is it of the carnal mind which we are informed "is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be?" Then let us be admonished in the language of the text at the head of this article; and endeaver, by the help and grace of God, to "Mortify the deeds of the body," that we may live after the "Spirit;" that love may flow, and flow more abundantly in our lives; for "God is love" and union; and Jesus prayed that his disciples might be one as he and his Father were one. Shall there be divisions? Is this the desire of the Brethren? "God forbid." Then the question arises, where does the trouble come from? I apprehend, brethren, the truth is, to be short in telling it, the devil is trying to get up a little quarrel among us, to see if he cannot effect a division, or overthrow and carry down to eternal destruction some poor soul. For he well understands that "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Then where shall we look for a remedy? Go to the foot of the cross. Let us be found humble, sitting at the feet of Jesus; esteeming our brethren better than ourselves—there feasting on the fat things that God in his abundant love has prepared, without a price—if we are found there, where all is love, the adversary of our souls will never approach us; for he never had a desire to be where the Spirit of Jesus rules in the heart of the children of men.—He had much rather enter into the swine and plunge into the sea.

Finally brethren, in view of the fact that sin abounds in the world, let us take heed lest we fall by the way, and "come short of the glory of God," and fail to obtain eternal life in that world to come; for the death spoken of in the text evidently is not the dissolution of the body; for all alike must die a natural death, and pass from this stage of action to give an account of the life they have lived in the "flesh," whether they have lived after the carnal nature which leads to the second death, or in obedience to the spirit, through which we may obtain eternal life. JONATHAN MYERS.

The High School Movement.

This movement still finds opposition. At our District meeting it was strongly opposed; but finally a grant was made, (as the District meeting could not agree,) to refer it to the Standing Committee, to give such answers to the Resolutions as may be deemed right; and then submit the matter to the Annual Meeting.

Why there should be such stern opposition to a college, or school of learning among the Brethren I am unable to see. For it is evident that many of our brethren's children, when they grow up, will have education; and, because there is no such school under the exclusive care of the church, they go to these sectarian schools, where they receive a dose of moral poison more disastrous to the soul, than the poison of asps to the body.

And, because many of our brethren oppose such a school, many of their children become disgusted and learn to ridicule the Brethren rather than speak of them with praise.

Will some of the brethren tell us what was meant by Huldah the prophetess living in Jerusalem in the college? (2 Kings 22; 14.) What college was this? Or did indeed, the old prophets have colleges to educate young prophets? Brown, in his Bible Dictionary, says it was "a school for training up young prophets or teachers," and, "In Samuel's time we find a school at Najoth." So where is the wrong in our brethren establishing colleges in our brotherhood, for the education of our sons, that when they are called to the ministration of God's word they can hold forth God's truth with power and telling effect. A. LEEDY JR.

God-Forsaken.

Under the above caption we find the following item; which we feel to commend to the careful consideration of those, who are inclined to think their Christian friends should not urge them to become citizens of Christ's kingdom.

During a special religious interest, a young lady was about leaving her home to take a walk, at a time when her friends were on the way to a religious service. Her pastor met her, and expressed surprise that she was not to accompany her friends. Bursting into tears, she said, with much pent up feeling, "I am not to be driven into the kingdom of heaven." "Right," was the reply of the pastor, "and now go directly to your chamber and tell God to leave you alone." She returned immediately to her house and the pastor walked on. The services began; but hardly had the first hymn been sung, when in came the broken-hearted girl. To be God-forsaken was a thought too dreadful. She saw her lost condition if God should leave her alone, and quickly sought the place of prayer, which proved to her the gate of Heaven."

Whether "led" or "driven" it is the most dangerous of all experiments to set ourselves against God. Forsaken of God, hope departs forever. It is well for pastors to reveal to souls under their charge their exact condition. Many a one is fighting against God all unconsciously. Brought face to face with God, the fearful fact becomes patent.—Christian Mirror.

The May bloom is open. The trees bend with blossoms. The buds break out into rich groups of soft leaves. The hills grow green. The valleys stretch away in divine panorama. The air is full of fragrance and the hum of bees. The birds hold jubilee in the trees. The forest puts on the Summer foliage. And the vernal winds breathe a new life and liberty in all the earth. Bless God for Spring with its divine prophecies.

The Conscious Test of Saintship.

By C. H. Balsbaugh.

No one takes for granted that he sustains a relation or occupies a position. No sane person will, as a matter of course, regard himself as being chief magistrate, or as the child, or conjugal companion, of Louis Napoleon. No one takes for granted that he is in possession of even a single penny, or that he has in reserve an immense inheritance. In the sphere of sense such blunders are out of the question. Being matters of ocular demonstration, such unfounded claims would at once be attributed to mental aberration. We have as positive and reliable a test in relation to what concerns the soul and the future state. Here it is. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." We find many words in the Bible, each of which represents the whole. Love is one of them. The passage we have quoted sums up all that belongs to practical religion. "God is Love." Here a little monosyllable exhausts the vocabulary of Eternity. "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." Hatred is the parent of murder, and this is the very spirit of the Devil, for "he was a murderer from the beginning." To cherish feelings of bitterness against one in whose bosom the image of Deity is enshrined, is to unclasp the hand from the plough and turn the face hell-ward. Whoever harbors satanic feelings is on satan's territory. Nothing but love could open a way for our emancipation from the bondage of sin, nothing but love can draw us into the narrow path, and nothing but love can keep us in. It is a great mistake to suppose that we owe nothing to others until they have done something for us. We owe much to sinners, not because they have placed us under obligations by acts of kindness, but because Christ has done so much for us. We were sinners and enemies, and yet everlasting love constrained Him to die for us; therefore we are bound by the most imperative obligations to love and labor for the ungodly for His sake. Christ submitted to the penal consequences of sin because of his infinite hatred of it, and his love of the being so constituted that, having sinned, is capable of being redeemed. "God so loved the world." He suffered the most agonizing death for us, not willing that we should utterly perish without such interposition as the case admitted. He made bare his bosom to receive the death-wound we had deserved. He took upon him our sin and our hell, that we might escape both, and enjoy his holiness and his heaven. Here is a model for our fraternal affections. If he so humbled himself, we may well wash one another's feet, and live consonant with such a symbol. To see ourselves in the light of Christ's love, is to acknowledge the poorest and lowest saint worthy of better and stronger love than it is in our power to bestow. To the most unworthy being on earth we owe our best efforts, if providence gives opportunity, because Jesus gave us his all when he owed us nothing. It rends my inmost soul when I see hatred and discord in the church instead of love and harmony; and there is nothing that more deeply wounds the heart of Jesus than coldness, distrust, alienation, and back-biting in his family. "We love him because he first loved us," and if we have been filled from Love's Fountain-head, we will not despise the tiniest rill. If we have been laved out of the Crystal River, we would rather cut off our right hand than let its shadow fall on the least drop that has distilled from above. If our heart burns with ill-will, and our tongue is scattering fire-brands, how can we know that we have passed from death unto life? This consciousness can be preserved only when our souls are aglow with the love of Christ, and we forget everything but his inexpressible love for man, the ruin whence he delivered us, and "the joy set before us." Then we are best able to bear suffering, ready to do and to endure anything for Jesus sake. Then we do not poise our service on the cold calculation how much others love us, but how much we can accomplish for him whose love had no rest till it had stooped from the highest glory to the deepest humiliation, from the sweetest bliss to the bitterest agony. Love asks not payment for its labor. As soon as the calculating spirit prevails, love has lost its spontaneity. It ventures its all, even if it gets nothing in return. If we have really been born again, we know what Solomon means when he represents the bride as saying, "I am sick of love." For how many millions of souls did Jesus die who will never reach heaven! The thought is harrowing to our limited conceptions, but it shows what sacrifices love will make, "hoping for nothing again." Luke 6: 35.—

This mind must be in us, and this is so contrary to nature, or rather to sin, that if we are not constantly on our guard, and keep up an incessant warfare, our love will wax cold, our delight in God's service will abate, and we will hang on the body of Christ like a withered branch on a tree—having simply life enough to prevent utter decay, but not enough to be either a pillar or blessing, or ornament to the Church. When love is strong, pure, fervent, the church prospers, because then each esteems himself "the least of all saints," looks up to others instead of down upon them, and is forward to exercise self-denial for the good of others. In a private letter before me occur these words: "What a beautiful fraternity would be ours if the members were all actuated by the love of Christ." Yes, a Church around which the angels of God would visibly encamp day and night; a church in which Christ would perpetually walk as "amidst the seven golden candlesticks," with ravishing manifestations of his presence and power; a church which would in its character be as separate from the world as holiness from sin; a church on which the glory of God would always rest, and which would be so full of the life and love of the Holy Ghost, as to be the power of God unto salvation to many who will never enter the pearly gates of Love's Eternal Home. Let each reader resolve to do a large share towards supplying the church with the salt that keeps it from putrefaction. Begin at home, at the care of our own being, praying Christ to come with his "scourge of small cords," and cleanse the inner temple of all that is offensive to the Divine Guest. If we crucify ourselves, lay our body and soul on the altar of sacrifice, and burn self to ashes, we will be "a savor of life unto life" in the family, the church, and the neighborhood. In hot, sultry weather, the thirsty and weary soon discover where the green, shady tree stands, and the clear, fresh fountain flows. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." This is what Christ brought from Heaven, this is the element that reigns in his Kingdom, this is the bond that keeps the church together, and this is the passport, "signed in Calvary's blood," that gains admittance into the dear, blessed fellowship of the white-robed throng that forever draws its life and bliss out of the heart of the One Altogether Lovely.

Tact in Christian Work.

We use tact in business, why not use it, too, in leading others to Jesus? Many weary and careworn souls, hunger and thirst after righteousness and desire to be filled. A gentleman, once, asked a watchman in New York the way to a place in the city. After recieving the proper direction, he handed him a tract, entitled, "The Way to Heaven;" and with the kindest looks, a gentlemanly manner, and a heart full of that burning love for Jesus, the conversion of sinners, and the salvation of many precious souls, said: "You have kindly showed me the way in the city, now let me show you the way to a better land. We have but little time here, and must soon go there. I shall follow your directions—may you follow mine. Good evening!" and was gone. In the still, lone hours of night, the watchman stands by the lamp-post reading the directions to a better, and a happier land, left by the stranger. This land is not a place of toil, wickedness, or destruction; but a land of beauty; where all is peace, and happiness. A land that flows with milk and honey. Then encourage the pilgrim on his way to Zion; speak a word of consolation to the faint and weary traveller. Give, if it were, but a cup of cold water to the thirsty. Feed the hungry; clothe the naked; all, all for Christ. Thousands are waiting for this tract. Tell them Christ is "the way, the truth, and the life." You may rest assured, that the kind face, the gentle look, the word of encouragement, the burning love for Jesus, and the title of the tract, will all burn deep, though the book were torn to pieces, and scattered to the winds. "A word fitly spoken, is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

"What shall I do," said a teacher the other day, "to catch and hold the attention of my class?" "Be in earnest," was the answer. Earnestness always arrests attention and holds it. The man who cries "fire," or "murder," with the earnestness of conviction, does not fail to rouse every one that hears the cry. Let us utter the great truths of the Bible as though we believed in their realities, and no one then will be listless or indifferent.

Baptism.

A Letter to a Cousin, a Descendant of the Friends.

Dear Cousin; In thy letter to mother, thou saidst thou hadst a sweet dream about baptism; and that thou wast baptized in a clear stream, and the water looked so pure. Thou wast taught to believe there is no difference how a person is baptized; but thou art beginning to believe that the true way is immersion. Thou desirest some good advice concerning baptism. Thou believest that God is revealing unto thee thy duty.

Being somewhat interested about the welfare of thy soul, I now propose to present a few thoughts on the subject of baptism. My object will be in the first place to show that baptism was performed in the water: secondly, by immersion, and that persons are not subjects for sprinkling or pouring; thirdly, a threefold action in baptism; and fourthly, a forward motion, and the position of the candidate in the water for baptism.

"And Jesus when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water; and lo, the heavens were opened unto him; and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." Matt. 3:16. "And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee; and was baptized of John in Jordon. And straightway, coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him." Mark 1: 9, 10. "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordon, confessing their sins." Matt 3:6. "And John also was baptizing in Ænon, near to Salem, because there was much water there; and they came and were baptizsd." John 3: 23. "And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water; both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him." Acts 8: 38. There are many historical evidences that baptism was performed in the water; but the above quotations are sufficient proof, that baptism was performed by John,—by Christ and the apostles,—in the water This is sufficient evidence to convince any unprejudiced mind; and is worth more than all the evidence that man can bring; but here comes the critical point.

How was baptism performed when in the water? Some say by sprinkling, others by pouring; but we will see what the apostle Paul says. He calls baptism a burial. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that, like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Rom. 6: 3, 4. "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Col. 2: 12. Here now are two conclusive proofs that baptism is a burial. The apostle also calls it a washing: "But ye are washed." 1 Cor. 6: 11. Again he says, "But according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." Titus 3: 5. "Let us draw near with a true heart, and full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 10: 22. Now Paul says baptism is a burial; and he also says it is a washing; how can a person be baptized by sprinkling or by pouring? A person can be baptized by immersion, but not by sprinkling or by pouring; because baptism is a burial. A person is a subject for burial; but not for sprinkling or pouring. All that have an idea of what the word "bury" means, must agree that it means to deposit in a grave; to hide in surrounding matter; to inter; to conceal. We can sprinkle sand; and can sprinkle water; but a person we cannot sprinkle. "Sprinkle" means to scatter in drops or small particles. We cannot pour a person. The word "pour" means, to throw out, as a fluid; to send forth in abundance; to issue forth in a stream; to flow. The above quotations and the meaning of the words "bury," "sprinkle," and "pour," are sufficient testimonies to prove the two first propositions.

And now to the third—Baptism with a threefold action.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19. The baptism in the commision is evidently a matter to be performed by man; and to baptize in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost requires three burials, to constitute one baptism. The commission is a compound elliptical sentence; and I understand it to mean, that we are to be baptized in the name of the Father; then the conjunction "and" shows something else is to be done; it shows us that the ellipsis must be supplied, according to laws of the language:—baptized in the name of the Son; and baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost. There are three distinct persons in the Godhead; and each person has a work to perform in the regeneration of the human family. I say there is honor due to each person in the Godhead; for "it is the office of the Father to convict the sinner of his sins, which is the design of the Law; it is the office of the Son to save the sinner, which is the design of the Gospel; it is the office of the Spirit to sanctify the believer, which is the design of his operations."

I believe a forward motion, in baptism is required, instead of backward. The Apostle says, "know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Rom. 6: 3.

Now this has reference to Christ's death, and not to his burial as some may suppose. While Christ was upon the cross, there was a forward motion, "and he bowed his head and gave up the ghost." Jno. 19: 30. We find upon examination of the Scriptures that the ancient worshippers bowed when they worshipped. "And the people believed: and when they heard that the Lord had visited the children of Israel, and that he had looked upon their affliction, then they bowed their heads and worshipped," Ex. 4: 31. "And the people bowed down to their Gods." Num. 25: 2. "And all the congregation blessed the Lord God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads and worshipped the Lord." 1 Chron. 29: 20.

Baptism is an act of worship; and I believe the candidate should kneel before God in the water. This posture is certainly very commendable upon solemn occasions. Kneeling, and bowing with the face forward, was the posture of God's worshippers in all generations. Solomon knelt on his knees, with his hands spread up to heaven. 1 Kings 8: 54. "And kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel." 2 Chron. 6: 13. "Ezra fell upon his knees and spread out his hands unto the Lord his God." Ezra 9: 5. "Daniel knelt upon his knees." Dan. 6 : 10. "There came a certain man kneeling down to him". Matt. 17 : 14. "And there came a leper kneeling down to him." Mark 1 : 40. "And Jesus was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and knelt down and prayed." Luke 22 : 41. "And Stephen knelt down and cried Lord." Acts 7 : 60. "Every knee shall bow to me." Rom. 14 : 11.

I might refer to many more passages of Scripture; but think I have given sufficient to prove the above propositions; but before I close, I wish to say something in regard to the way thou wast taught. Those persons that instructed thee, I suppose are sincere; but they have omitted the weightier matters of the law; and have studied the error of man, until their minds have become interwoven in the error; and it has become a settled point in faith. Baptism is a fundamental principle in religion, of which they have made a fundamental error. They claim that the "Good Book" does not tell us how baptism is to be performed. Many false teachers too are gone out into the world, speaking great swelling words of vanity. "They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him." Titus 1 : 16. "They received not the love of the truth; and for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie." 2 Thess. 2 : 10, 11.

Pride.

We should all guard against pride; for it is a great evil. It is something every Christian should shun; for "pride goeth before destruction; and a haughty spirit before a fall." Better it is to be of an humble spirit, with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud. "For behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Then let us try and not be as stubble, but as gold, tried in the furnace, which will shine forth in that day. Just look for one moment, at "Mystery Babylon." How proud she is! Hear her say: "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." See her "arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand." Oh! how pleasing to the eye. But think of her destruction at the last. "It biteth like a serpent and stings like an adder." "But thou, O man of God! flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art called," and do not waste your precious time in vain amusements. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father: but is of the world." Then let us follow the meek and lowly Lamb of God and ever bear in mind his love, his meekness, and his humility: as long as we do this, there will be no contentions. For "Only by pride cometh contention; but with the well-advised is wisdom." I am nothing but a babe in Christ; and hardly meet to be called one. I have to say: "Are ye not yet carnal, and walk as men?" Oh! that we were all more spiritual, and not so carnally minded: "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither in deed can be." Pride is a sure evidence of a carnal mind; for it is very highly esteemed among men. But beware; "for that which is highly esteemed among men, is abomination in the sight of God." "Wherefore he saith: God resisteth the proud; but giveth grace to the humble." "When pride cometh, then cometh shame; but with the lowly, is wisdom. Is it possible, that pride will make us ashamed of the meek and lowly Lamb of God? Yes, it will; for it is the reverse of all good. Oh! that all would bear in mind the language of the prophet Jeremiah; concerning Judah's repentance! which reads as follows; "And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clothest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair: thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life." (Jer. 4 : 30.)

"Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us; and run with patience the race that is set before us; looking unto Jesus, "the author and finisher of our faith, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down on the right hand of the throne of God." "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

Are we Following Christ?

My dear young fellow pilgrims, who have vowed, with me, to keep the ordinances of the house of God, do we show by our walk and conversation that we have been with Christ, and learned of him? Or do we show daily, by the same, that we will not have him, Christ Jesus, to rule and reign over us? And are we meek and lowly in heart, as our blessed Redeemer's precepts would lead us? As for myself, I am but a babe in Christ, desiring the sincere milk of the word, and find that of myself I can do nothing good. When I would do good, evil is present. But let us not be weary in well doing, but press onward, not looking back; for he that looketh back is not fit for the kingdom. When we see the finger of scorn pointed at us, let us think of our blessed Savior. When he suffered all the maltreatment that wicked sinners could inflict upon him, he murmured not; but in all his agony said "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." Now let us go on, heart in heart, and hand in hand, and try, in the strength of the Lord, to be more like him; try to be more humble, and not think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think. If we walk in the day time we shall not stumble; but shall be able to follow him. I fear we are too easily led off. There are inducements on all sides, and if we yield to temptation, we will soon be in darkness, and the last state shall be worse than the first. But let us keep out of the way of temptation as much as possible; and press forward, trying to be more faithful, letting our light shine, as it were, in dark places. Christ says: "let your light so shine," &c. Now I think we should be very careful that we set the right kind of light, and let us put it on a candlestick, and not under a bushel.

Why are you not a Servant of Christ?

This question was brought to my mind while reading Brother Holsinger's response in No. 16 of present Volume of the Companion, to a friend who wished to read the columns of one of our Church periodicals. Although the words in the reply of brother H. did not occur in the form of the question heading this article. I think what he said, has brought the idea of this question very clearly to our minds. There is, and ever was, and I hope ever will be, great zeal manifested in the church of God, in behalf of the salvation of the human family. And why should not poor mortals, here in this world of sorrow, desire to see the kingdom of God enlarged, the noble cause of Christ advanced, when our Savior informs us that there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than our ninety and nine just persons. If the return of one forlorn being to his "Father's house," causes the angels in heaven to rejoice, why should not we, when we see in the immediate vicinity of the church, so many precious souls feeding upon the barren mountains of sin and folly, try to win their souls to Christ? Is it not to be feared that we instead of letting our light shine as we ought, sometimes cast a dim light around us, and thus cause many to procrastinate the day of grace, who might by christian influence be made to become partakers of the love of Jesus, and enjoy the blessings of his Holy Spirit? We know, by actual experience, that when the church manifests an interest in the salvation of souls, the zeal of believers and their prayers, are not bestowed in vain. Not long since, I heard one of God's chosen, while entreating sinners to make their peace with Jesus, say: "I would to God that all in this house were my brethren and sisters."—What a beautiful expression thought I, and how he reminded me of Paul when speaking to Felix of righteousness, temperance, and judgement to come:" and trying to persuade him to be a disciple of Jesus. The house was full of hearers and many of that large audience were as "Sheep without a shepherd," and knew nothing at all about the enjoyments of christian life. Such persuasions cannot fail to result in some good. To see the house of God full of hearers, and many of them who are our relatives and friends, in the service of satan, is a painful sight indeed.—And what makes the scene so appalling is, that such a division, separates the human family into two certain kingdoms. This fact may not be understood as true, by many of our readers, who claim to be friends of christian professers; but it cannot be otherwise. You either belong to the kingdom of God, or the kingdom of satan. You may despise the expression "satan's servant," if you do not come out on the side of the Lord and engage in his service, you are the enemy of righteousness, and the servant of sin. You can find no intermediate state between the two kingdoms. Then engage in the service of God at once; for, be assured, your service is needed. You may procrastinate the day of grace for sometime, and yet obtain its special benefit; but as life is so uncertain, that would be dangerous folly. Besides you should not look upon the favors of heaven, & the enjoyment of a new-born life, for no other purpose than to secure your own salvation. Christ died for all: hence he would not have you comply with his requirements for your benefit alone, but he would have you become obedient to his will, that you might, by your influence, win souls to Christ and his kingdom.—But perhaps some one who has not yet enlisted in the service of Christ may say "I never do anything to hinder the cause of Christ.- Neithe do you do anything to promote or advance it. And, in fact, it would be altogether folly for people while under the dominion of satan's power, to attempt to do anything for the cause of Christ; unless some trying circumstance would cause them to feel the need of a Savior's love: then their cries of despair and eager persuasions might result in some good. I know a young woman who once thought her time of departure to the unknown regions of eternity was near at hand. Death had already begun to stare her in the face. And, as she was not prepared to meet such a monster, she with much eagerness, did beseech her friends to become obedient to the requirements of heaven, and not put off the day of grace as she had done. Her earnest appeal resulted in some good. And he, who with tender mercy has often heard the prayers of the penitent in time of grief and sorrow saw fit to prolong her life, that she might yet have an oppurtunity to make her peace with Jesus. But lamentable to say, she is still living in sin. She thinks, perhaps, with many others, that while one is in good health, there is no need of accepting the plan of salvation.—But such persons seldom think of the uncertainty of life. And Oh! how can any one so highly favored, be so ungrateful to a kind Savior? To one who has borne our weight of guilt, and suffered the torments of wicked men, and died the painful deathof the cross, that we might, through his sufferings, become the happy recipients of his grace, and dwell forever with him in righteousness where pain and sickness can nevercome? O dear reader, you who have not yet engaged in the service of God, do you not see how ungrateful it is to slight the councils of a merciful Redeemer, who is now sitting at the right hand of God interceding for you? Do you not know that as long as you are not willing to serve him, you are in open rebellion against him? Then cease to serve satan. Crucify the Lord of glory no longer.

Mourners-Bench Religion.

Not long since I attended a revival meeting and as our friends were very generous they invited me to one of the front seats where I had a good opportunity to hear and see for myself.

The subject for the evening was, "The Christian Race." The preacher tried to point out the proper qualifications to enable us to run this race. Faith, hope, and charity, were the qualifications necessary. He tried his best to get up an excitement, but failed altogether. His co-laborer seeing the failure came to his assistance, and put forth his effort to arouse the assembly to a state of excitement; and, according to appearances, he succeeded; for at the close of his exhortation, not less than nine or ten of both sexes gave heed to his advice—came forward—and tried to find religion at the Mourners-bench. The last speaker put his whole force on the starting point. He said: "One main point is, to start right." Now as he got some started again, as he thinks, I hope he will tell them how to run in order to obtain the prize: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.'

But during the evening the question arose in my mind: can this be true Christianity? In solving this question I had to ask another—what constitutes a Christian? From the sermon that evening, a person, not well versed in Scripture, would have concluded that any person who prays is a Christian. But comparing this with Acts 10th Chapter, we find that this is not the case; for it says of Cornelius, that he "prayed to God always,' and we will all admit that he was no Christian until he had sent for Peter and complied with the gospel. So, we see, it requires more than prayer to make a person a Christian. The disciples were called Christians because they were followers of Christ; and, if we want to be Christians, we, too, must follow in his footsteps. But we cannot help asking the question: why is not the whole Gospel preached, instead of part of it? Why is it that persons are made to believe they are Christians and that all is right, while yet they have no gospel promise? We cannot answer these questions. Christ came into the world and made known neither more nor less than his Father's will; and who has a right to declare some of it unnecessary? How will those who preach only a part of the Gospel answer, for their doings, at the great day? Will they say they knew better than the Lord himself what it takes to save mankind? Or, will they say they did not understand the revelation of his will? They certainly ought to prepare a good answer; for we are taught that we will be held accountable for all our acts in this life.

But another question forced its way into my mind; it was this: would the conducting of this meeting meet with the approval of the Lord, in case he should make his appearance now—this very hour? Could he claim all for his own who are calling upon him to bless individually and collectively, or, would he exclaim: these people worship me with their lips, while their hearts are far from me?

But still another question presented itself to my mind, which was this: why do not the Brethren preach more at such places, and make clear their skirts? Brethren, the more I study this matter, the more I am convinced that our church is the Church of Christ; because we contend for the Gospel,—the whole Gospel—and nothing but the Gospel. Now I ask brethren, Ministers, whether you think you are doing justice to yourselves and your fellow-men, and discharging your duty to God, if you never go to preach at such places where the Gospel is wrested, so that the common hearer is satisfied with anything, so that it is a sermon. There are places of this kind in every neighborhood: places where you do your worldly dealing; but when you come to the dealings with the gospel you draw back. Are you afraid brethren? God forbid. Go as sheep among wolves. The Lord will help you: you cannot lose anything by it in this world: and look to the reward in heaven. One soul is of greater value than all the world; and how happy you will be when you have been the means of bringing one soul to Christ. But you answer: they have the Gospel; and refer to the answergiven by Abraham to the rich man: "They have Moses and the prophets." But I do not believe that Moses and the prophets were twisted, turned, and mixed—or perverted—like the Gospel is now; for we find that certain tried it and were punished for their daring, which served—and was accepted—as a warning. But now God gives us our entire life to prepare for heaven. I do believe if there were no preaching at all, and a copy of the Gospel should be put in the hands of every person, (provided all could read,) there would not be so many led astray. This is aimed against false teaching. As the false teacher labors to draw followers after him, why will not the Brethren labor more abundantly to win souls to Christ? Did not Christ command you to go "and preach the Gospel to every creature?" If you are weak, God will make you strong. Consider the importance and you will not find half the obstacles in the way. If the sectarian will not allow you to preach in his meeting-house, preach wherever you can; but I am glad to know that a majority af the common people will be glad to hear you.—And if you go, do not be afraid to preach the whole Gospel. Do all in your power for the Lord and his cause; and your reward will be great in heaven.

ONWARD!—Onward! The way may be rough, and every step be painful; but the destination can be reached if you only make the effort.

Onward! The hill you climb is high and precipitous, and it is fearful toil to rise it; but press on! The summit can be gained, and then the sense of victory is exquisite.

Onward! You battle with a thousand foes who maliciously hate you, and because of this, fight on! The triumph can be obtained, and among the fruits of victory is a throne in heaven.

Onward! God says walk, run, agonize, that you may win the prize and enter into the strait gate.

Onward! The saints on high, looking down from their rest and glory, seeing your faltering and lagging steps, are shouting their calls of love—Onward! come up higher to the throne!

Onward! The rich men, who have not a drop of water to cool their tongues, seeing you stopping, dallying, giving up, cry to you with all the bitterness of death—"Onward! It is death, it is hell to stop!"

An Exhortation to the Young.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them;" &c. Ecclesiastes 12. "Remember" implies that you have already learned to know your Creator, as—to keep in mind: to keep from being forgotten. The wise man Solomon took it for granted that your parents taught you as they are commanded in God's word, namely; "the Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." These, with other things, as we find in Deut. 6th, says God by Moses, "shall be in thy heart: And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." Again, in Prov. 22: 6, we read: "train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Again we read in Eph. 6: 4. "ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." And the youth should obey his parents in the Lord, and honor his father and mother, that it may be well with him, and that he may live long on the earth, and give heed to the instructions from the Bible, in order that he may be made wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Therefore if your parents, or teachers, have taught you God the Father, God the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom all things were created, it would be well for you all to remember him, now, in the days of your youth, "Now is the accepted time." "Now is the day of salvation." Oh! how many have not remembered, or kept in mind, their Creator, and according to the word of God, "God gave them over to a reprobate mind to do these things which are not convenient." "Quench not the Spirit," for it will always strive with the children of men." Remember him now, "in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Such days will come. It is appointed unto man once to die." Why put off your return to God until a convenient season," when you know that to be "now"? Hear the wise man Solomon: "While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened," that is, while your vision of sight is yet good, so that the beauty and glory of the sun, light, morn, and stars, are not obscured from you. "Nor the clouds return after the rain," that is, while you have not a continual gloom on your spirit.

"In the days when the keepers of the house shall tremble from old age; your hands and arms being the keepers of your house, or body; "And the strong men shall bow themselves,"—referring to the knees and legs; "And the grinders cease because they are few,"—referring to the teeth; "And those that look out of the windows be darkened,"—referring to the eyes; "And the doors be closed in the streets,"—the ears being deaf; "When the sound of the grinding is low,"—no mastication. "And he shall rise up at the voice of the bird,"—no rest in sleep, therefore, rises at the crow of the cock; "And all the daughters of music be brought low,"—the voice in singing being feeble; "Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high,"—not venturing high up, lest they fall; "And fear shall be in the young,"—fearing accidents. "And the almond tree shall flourish,"—like the almond tree flourishing with white flowers when in bloom, so the head blooms of age; "And the grasshopper shall be a burden,"—being too feeble to bear the least weight. "And desire shall fail,"—appetite, or desire for anything; "because man goeth to his home, and the mourners go about the streets: or over the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken,"—the spinal marrow, and the head with its organs,—especially the mind—being destroyed; "Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain,"—the vessel carrying the blood from the heart, the fountain of life; "Or the wheel be broken at the cistern,"—the blood ceasing to circulate, and life ceasing, and then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it. "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher; all is vanity."

THE POISONED TONGUE. The snake's poison is in its teeth; but there is something quite as dangerous, says an exchange, and much more common in communities, which has its poison in its tongue. Indeed, your chances of escape from a serpent are much greater. The worst snake usually glides away in fear at the approach of man, unless disturbed or attacked. But this creature, whose poison lurks in its tongue, attacks without provocation and follows up its victim with untiring perseverance. We will tell you its name, so you will always be able to shun it. It is called a SLANDERER. It poisons worse than a serpent. Often its venom strikes to the life of a whole family, or neighborhood, destroying all peace and confidence. We have known this evil tongue to work mischief in the hearts of a whole community, destoying the sweetest friendships, and causing life long bitterness. Ah! beware of this poisoned tongue. The evil speaker is most abhorrent in the sight of our Heavenly Father. They who do such things have no inheritance in the "many mansions," where all is joy, and love, and blessedness.

The Bible will not be less, but rather more, prized by our occasionally turning from it to open another and equally divine volume,—read some pages of the Book of Nature. Both are good books, and both are God's books; and he only looks on this great world aright, who, valuing it for something more valuable than the gold men draw from its rocky bowels, the flocks it pastures, the rich freights borne on its waves, and the harvests that wave on its fields, behold there, as in a glorious mirror, the wisdom and power of God—the goodness that shines in every sunbeam and falls in every shower,

Information.

TO THOSE WHO EXPECT TO ATTEND NEXT ANNUAL MEETING.

We can furnish orders for Excursion Tickets from Philadelphia to Chicago, or any intermediate station on Pennsylvania Central, and Pittsburg. Ft Wayne & Chicago Railroad, to all who wish to attend our next Annual Meeting for the sake of the Meeting.

Enclose ten cents for postage, &c.

Take particular notice. You get these orders before you leave home, and present them to your ticket agent, where you take the cars, at any station on either of the above Railroads.

He, the agent, will sell you a ticket to Chicago and return. They can be used from the first of June until the 6th of June; that is, you may buy a ticket between those days. Your ticket will return you over the Pittsburg, Ft Wayne & Chicago R. R. until the 16th, and over P. R. R. until the 20th, Brother Davy also announces in the Visitor that arrangements have been made with the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis R. R., to return free all the brethren and sisters who have passed over their road and have paid full fare going to Annual Meeting.

Those who pass over that line will receive their return tickets at Annual Meeting. This route is called the Pan Handle Route. The principal stations are Pittsburg, Stubenville, Coshocton, Newark, Columbus. At Columbus you change cars for Chicago by way of Urbana, Piqua, Covington, Union, and Logansport. You can start at any time, but must return within five days after the meeting

From Chicago westward we have not yet had any information.

Our Assistant.

Our readers will remember our advertisement several weeks ago, for a clerk or assistant. We have had a number of applicants, each of whom has had due attention in the way of considering his merits, but few, perhaps, have had the deference they may have expected, in response to their letters. Nevertheless there is none that has occasion for complaint, and therefore, we hope for an easy pardon.

We have made a selection, and, we believe, a good one. We have long desired to add editorial ability to our paper, having had a conviction that in this department we were above all others remiss; and we believe we have good reasons for hoping, that, under the blessing of God, we shall realize our desires.

Brother Beer has been known to us as one of the warm supporters of the Companion from its infancy, and as a contributor to its columns who was always welcomed by those who, in the discharge of their duties, had occasion to come in contact with his manuscript. We now introduce him to our readers, and allow freely to speak for himself.

——:o:——

Introductory.

Kind readers; having now been introduced to you as assistant in the Companion office I feel at liberty to make a few introductory remarks.

My duties and responsibilities are clearly stated in No. 14, P. 218; but, for the benefit of those who have subscribed since that time; I will here insert that part which relates particularly to this subject.

"In our absence he is expected to take charge of the office, editorially. He will have the copy to select and correct. In doing this he must exercise a considerable degree of judgment as a critic, moral and intellectual. He will have the letters to read—good, bad and indifferent—to answer them, and to attend to their business; the books to keep, &c. And last of all—and as much as all the rest—he will have the proof to read which requires a good practical knowledge of the English language."

In view of all this—considering the relation in which I stand to the subscribers and readers of the Companion and Youth, and those who transact business with this office—the important duties which I owe to them and to God, and my personal accountability to God for the manner in which I perform my various duties—and above all my own weakness—I feel that I need Divine assistance. I therefore humbly crave an interest in the petitions of all our praying readers.

In conclusion I will say to all: I will do the best I can; and I hope all who are interested will feel disposed to regard what failures I may make, with as much leniency as they can.

Hoping that we may be enabled to discharge the many and various duties devolving upon us, in an acceptable manner, I subscribe myself—

Your servant and brother,

JOS. W. BEER.

Answer to Correspondents.

We have several letters asking us to change the address of papers They tell us where to send to, but they do not tell us to what office their papers are now sent A little care on the part of those who wish to have the address changed, would be an advantage both to themselves and to us. Here is a sample.

Please change my address from Milton, Pike county, Ill., to Pana, Shelby county, Ill. Yours, &c.,

J. M.

SUSANNAH HESS. In No. 19, page 303, you have credit for $1 00 for which the Companion is sent to Barbara Robertson. The $1 50 for the Companion and Youth for Eve Caufman, according to our books, has not been received; but we will send the papers, hoping that all may come right yet.

JESSE MILLER. Most cheerfully will we send your paper to your address. Will you be so kind as to tell us to what office we are sending it now?

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

LAWRENCE, Kansas,
April 23rd, 1870.

Brother Henry: I have been engaged in perusing the pages of the Companion, during the day. I see news from many dear brethren and sisters,—but found none from this State. Perhaps some may think the brethren are becoming dilatory. I have spent several weeks with the members of this State, and find that many of them are zealous in the cause: showing by their conversation, that they have been in the school of Christ. It is true some appear somewhat discontented with their lot; being cast among a gainsaying world, with no one to assist them in their conflicts with satan. They do not even enjoy the privilege of hearing the wholesome truths of God, preached in public. Dearly beloved, rembmber your brethren and sisters in their solitary condition, while you are blessed with many good things: enjoying the privilege of assembling yourselves with the children of God, to hear the friendly admonitions of the brethren. I fear that many of us do not fully appreciate the rich blessings bestowed upon us, until we are deprived of them.

I left Holt Co., Mo., March 30th, and arrived at the house of our beloved brother, Jacob P. Crumpacker on the 31st. They are living near Whiting station, Jackson Co., Kan., 30 miles West of Atchison. They are the only members living in that community: the nearest live about twenty miles north. Brother Jacob is living in a beautiful and healthy country. He desires the brethren passing that way to stop and preach for them. I left Jackson county on the 14th of April, and arrived at Osawkee, Jefferson county, on the 15th. There is quite a number of Brethren living in the vicinity of the above named place. They have erected a commodious meeting-house in Osawkee. The brethren held meeting there on Saturday, and Sunday night, the 17th. The brethren met in State Council on Monday, the 18th. The sub-districts were all represented, except one or two. The queries were presented, read and disposed of in the best of order. We never witnessed such unanimity on such an occasion. No exciting discussions occurred; (as we sometimes witness on such occasions.) Nothing but love and union prevailed. We were made to believe that we were with the children of God. Each appeared to esteem his brother better than himself. After the disposal of the queries, Elders William Gish, and Isaac Hershy, were appointed as delegates to the Annual Meeting. The brethren convened again in the evening, to preach the word. The meetings were well attended and good order observed. We hope the good counsels given by the brethren will be heeded, that they may redound to the honor and glory of God. I conversed with many brethren that I never met with before. We were strangers in the flesh; but were made partakers of the same spirit. The brethren are still calling for help;—help to preach the Gospel to the dying sons of Adam. I will here give one of the many circumstances of the Western brethren. Brother Jacob Buck, of Lyon county Kansas, informs us, that he has been living in that county about five years, and has received but a few visits by the ministering brethren; (except on communion and council occasions.) Now, dear brethren, think of the condition of your brother—placed on the frontier alone—appealing for aid. Well, says one, what will we do? We will not decide; but will tell you what the Apostles did on similar occasions.

"Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas that he should go as far as Antioch." Acts 11: 22. Brethren, perhaps some of you have assayed to go into Bithynia, (the far South,) but here stand some praying, and saying, "come over into Macedonia and help us." Now you have the appeal from brother Buck, and others who are alone. When Christ sent out the disciples, he sent them "two and two," not alone. What brothner will volunteer to come to Macedonia?

I will here say to the brethren, (especially the young,) when you come West don't disrobe yourselves of your plain and unpopular garb; and array yourselves with costly attire and fine apparel. Don't visit the public theatres, the ball-rooms, and all places of pulic amusement. "Mind not high things; but condescend to men of low estate." Here is where the true light is needed. We profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus; so let us live up to our profession. Let us remember our baptismal vow—to hear the church—and to renounce satan and all his allurements. We have many creeds and doctrines to contend against in this Western country; so we would say with the Apostle: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts, and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope within you, with meekness not fear." 1 Peter 3: 15. The Brethren are anxious for members to move West, and share their beautiful country; which is now divesting itself of its wintry mantle, and drawing on its garb of verdure. I will append the names and addresses of a number of brethren: any one desiring further information will please apply to them. Harrison Sawyer, Claytonville, Brown county, Kansas, J. P. Crumpacker, Whiting, Jackson county. Christian Holler, Osawkee, Jefferson county. James E. Hilkep, Holling, Douglas county. Peter Brubaker, Centropolis, Franklin county. Jacob Buck, Plymouth, Lyon county. Isaac Hershey, Neosho Falls, Woodson county.

I will again appeal to all, to remember your brethren on the frontier. "Pray the Lord of the harvest" to send more laborers into the field.

Yours in brotherly love,

J. F, SANGER.

For the Companion.

A Friendly Warning.

Dear young sisters and brethren. As a weak instrument in the hands of God, I for the first time pen a few thoughts to you, through the Companion. I am young, but have had many trials and temptations since I have set out to serve God, and sometimes have almost been led to give way under the fiery darts of the enemy of souls; but thank God who has at all times made a way for me to escape when assailed by the foe.

Dear sisters and brethren, let us confide in him who is able to save to the uttermost. He is willing if we but trust in him through implicit obedience to his will. Let us also try and do our duty towards our fellowbeings. We are not justifiable before God, unless we try to the best of our ability to induce others to join in with the children of God, that his name may receive that honor and glory which justly belongs to him. Our time is short, we are fast hastening to eternity. Oh! then let us not spend one idle moment. Recollect that we must all appear before the great Judge of all the earth. How can we meet him in peace, if we have not done our duty towards our fellow creatures. We should lend a helping hand to all; we should be closely knit together in bonds of love; we should bear one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of God. Let me refer you to what Paul says in the 4th chapter to the Ephesians; "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love, endeavor to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

And in the beginning of the 5th chapter he makes use of this Language: "Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children, and walk in love as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet smelling savor." Let us examine ourselves: is there any among us who would be willing to be sacrificed for the sake of another? I believe that this is the feeling we should have toward one another.

Dear Sisters, do you ever feel ashamed when the finger of scorn is pointed at you, or when you are vulgarly called "Old Dunkards?" If so, do not be discouraged. The enemy has his agents at work, and it is against these that we must struggle, and try to persuade them to leave their master, who will eventually bring them lower than the grave, if they persist in his service. But let us rejoice that we are found worthy to suffer for Jesus' sake, who suffered so much for our sake, and is now seated at the right hand of the majesty on high, interceding for us. Your sister.

CHRISTIANA K. CAMERER.

Sarton, Pa.

Brother Henry: I notice in Companion, present Vol. Page 128 a question, "what are you doing brethren & sisters?" which has been bearing somewhat on my mind. Here then we will say, idleness is wasting time. Time is the most precious of all things; not a moment of it should be lost. We should improve time while young, that we may be useful in life, and happy in eternity. We should seek knowledge whilst young; for if neglected, our minds will be inactive. Seek religion while young; Oh! how important. Our time in this world is short, compared with that of eternity; therefore our object in life should be to prepare for an approaching eternity. "All flesh is as grass, and the glory of man as the flower of the grass."

Time how Short.

Swift the moments fly away'—
First the hour and then the day,
Next the week, the month, the year,
Steal away, and disappear.

Time is ever on the wing,
While I speak, or think, or sing!
Whether working, or at play,
Time is rolling fast away!

Think, my soul! awake and see
What will soon become of thee!
Whither tending, canst thou tell,—
Up to heaven, or down to hell?

Jesus, I would humbly pray,
Guide and keep me in the way;
Every gift and grace bestow;
Wean my heart from things below."

To Whom it may Concern.

Dear Brother; Our late interview has given me much concern for you, for I dearly love you, and fondly hoped that you would one day be a bright ornament in the household of faith, and I shall yet cherish that hope, for I know—positively know—that your whole soul is drawn out for the cause of your Redeemer, and the redemption of mankind; but may I say without offending you, that your zeal is not always according to knowledge? Your hostility against all that you interpret "old brethren's notions," leads you to many improprieties; and though you may be lauded by some as a bold champion of reform, time will divulge that you are no better reformer than many others that have started out to reform the church. True, you may not have the least idea now, that you bring yourself into any trouble, but you have already wounded the feelings of many a sincere brother, by your unguarded expressions, and if you should continue to carry out those items, for which you think there is more scripture than the church hath for her mode, you will produce schisms. And now it is impossible that schisms can be retained in the body for any length of time; it must be ejected. Love, Union, and Harmony, is the essence of the Christian religion, and you are about suffering shipwreck on all three of those principles, when you denounce unsparingly all of us that are weak and shortsighted, and assume to yourself the prerogative to deviate and change if it be ever so trifling a matter. Union and harmony is lost. Now suppose each of the many hundreds of teachers of our fraternity would follow your example, and act independently of each other, could it be reasonably expected that when you should bring your improvements together that all would harmonize and fit together? Impossible! Don't you believe, dear brother, that we—I say we, the church—are as sincere as yourself, and we have tried to cultivate Union, Love, and Harmony, though we have tried to be of one mind, yet we have not come to one understanding; and that for very good reasons; namely, our imperfections: but we always strove to maintain a good understanding. It is too true, however, there were always such that would or could not yield their own convictions as they held them and consequently caused disturbances and disunion. But upon the whole, the Church hath stood all triumphantly, and hath come forth in all her splendor, and some "Worship at her feet and confess that she is beloved." If a system hath, and yet doth work well is it prudent to denounce it, because there may be a few screws loose or a few spars out of place, or in other words a few of the members of that body too assuming, or while they have to adapt matters and things to present circumstances they failed? Is that cause to withdraw and denounce? I say never! But to stand closer and to correct.

For further illustration let us propose the Church under the figure of a woman, and consequently a family. Now suppose this woman hath certain rules and regulations to be guided by, in her housekeeping. Every member of the house is under obligations to attend to those rules. But in the course of events something comes up for which there is no specific rule, and no precedent, but an understanding is had about the matter, how and what to do; but some of the members denounce and speak evil of the family, make it a practice to expose their doings, will they gain any credit? Are they not speaking in verity evil of themselves? Are they not part and parcel of that family? Doth not the language of the Savior come in here? "A house divided against itself can not stand"?

Finally I would say to you and all that may read these imperfect lines, cultivate a forbearing disposition, meekness, and be easily entreated.

Your devoted friend and brother
F. P. Loehr.

Brother H. R. Holsinger; On page 268 I saw information wanted in reference to a man by the name of Naugle who claims to have been a member of the church of the Brethren.

In answer we will say: We once knew a brother Naugle. He was baptized in Seneca Co., Ohio. He lived North of Melmore, Seneca Co., and joined lands on the South of Mr. Cline. He was a stone-mason: his given name we forget. He sold out, and moved off, which was the last we knew of him. The statement in regard to Naugle's baptism is about correct. John P. Ebersole is the only one living of those he had named from whom to get information.

We saw no answer to "Information Wanted," and we can do no better than the above as it is so long since.

In love we have written.
S. Fink.
Wm. Fink.

Brother Henry; I saw your request so often in the Companion, for the subscribers to try and get more: so I thought I would try; and the first one I asked subscribed for it. I will try and get you some more; for I think the Companion ought to be in every family of the Brethren.—This is the first year I have taken it; and as long as it pleases me as well as it does now, I will continue taking it.

Your Brother in the Lord.
A. E. Harp.

Note. It is an old saying, and a true one, that "we do not know what we can do, until we try." No doubt some of our patrons think it would be useless for them to try to get subscribers. There is only one way to decide that matter; and that is, to try it.

We have built a nice little meeting-house here; and we are in want of English preachers: so we would be very glad if the brethren would give us a call sometimes when they pass this way. All you need to do is to inquire for me and you will find me. Your brother.

Wm. N. Clemner.

Brother Holsinger; Last evening brother Jacob Beaghly gave me the Christian Family Companion to read; and after perusing it I feel that I can not do without it, as it contains a great deal of useful reading matter, and expounds the true doctrine taught by Christ. I enclose $1.00. You will please send me the Companion.

Yours truly, J. P. Barnes.

Schaefferstown, Pa.

Brother Holsinger I have received a contract from Asst. Gen'l. Pass agent of the Illinois Central R. R. Co., for reduced passenger rates of Delegates attending the conference to be held at Waterloo, Iowa, on the 7th to 9th of June Those who attend will pay full fare in going, and in returning they will get a certificate from the authorities of the conference, signed by some one appointed for that purpose; and by presenting said certificate to the Ticket Agent at Waterloo properly signed—He (Agent) will sell a return ticket at one-fifth regular fare. Said contract is valid from any point from Cairo, Ill., to Waterloo, Iowa, of said Ills. Cent. R. R. At the meeting I will assist in distributing the certificates to all who will apply, and are entitled to the same.

Brother Holsinger; Permit me to request some of the brethren to inform me, through the Companion if any brethren are living in or near, Lalette county, Kansas. A minister desires a situation in that county. J. M.

I feel grateful to brother D. M. Holsinger for the satisfactory and scriptural answer to my question how we know God. Now the next is, is that the only possible way that we can know him? In the Scripture we read: "Blessed are the the dead who die in the Lord." Now the question is, how can we get in the Lord? Will some one please answer? We ask for the sake of information, as we have here a variety of answers to the above questions. Is feeling a sure criterion by which we can know God?

Christian Wyand.

Brother Holsinger; In No. 16 of the Companion, you say one dollar will pay for the Companion from any time in April to the end of the year. Inclosed please find one dollar for another copy of the Companion. It seems to me we are doing so little in the advancement of the cause of Christ. I have a two-fold object in view; I want a copy of the Companion to hand round, and thereby get some to read some of the glad tidings of great joy that the angels proclaimed to the shepherds; and also to throw in another mite to support the Press.

J. H. Garman.

Brother H. R. Holsinger; You would confer a kindness to the few scattering members to publish that we intend holding a communion at brother David Rothrocks in Cumberland Congregation, Cumberland Co., Ill., near Hazel Dell, on the 18th and 19th of June; and we would be happy to have as many of the brethren and sisters, and particularly ministering brethren to be with us, as can come. No doubt some can stop with us on their way home from Annual Meeting. Laborers are needed, and their labor will be highly appreciated by us all. Please brethren, come and stop with us and help the needy.

By order of the church.

How is it when a woman is married to a man, and he leaves her and marries another, and she also marries another man ; this done in a state of mind and heart entirely sinful and wicked ; she has since been converted, and is now a humble penitent at the foot of the cross, and prays the Brethren to be united with them as a member of Christ's body. Now I understand the Brethren, that if a person is not "born of water and of the spirit," he or she can in no wise "enter into the kingdom of God." Can she now be received into membership, by being baptized ? I wish some brother would give me a satisfactory answer to the above question. AARON, E. BACHMAN.

Will some brother or sister give an explanation through the Companion, on Philippians 4 : 3, which reads thus : "And I entreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other of my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life." THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

For further particulars send for a specimen number, enclosing a stamp.

Encouraging Reflections.

BY F. P. LOEHR

Now another year is numbered,
Never to return again.
Wings of time are not encumbered:
Nothing can its flight detain.
Many years have now expired—
Of those granted to the bride—
Since the wrath of man inspired
Her to cross the foaming tide.

Hundred * * * fifty years of freedom
Has the church enjoyed in peace;
And the Savior's blessed Kingdom
Hath obtained a great increase.
Look ye back—how small the number—
That had crossed the watery deep!
And what troubles did encumber
Them by day, and in their sleep!

Yet the King who was their leader
Did sustain them in their life;
And did bless those humble Brueder
In their troubles and their strife.
Now we turn our thoughts, with pleasure,
To the place where they did land;
And behold the glorious treasure,
Which they had at their command.

It is blooming, it is yielding,
Still its fruits an hundred fold;
It's protecting, it is shielding,
Numbers that cannot be told.
Then look up beyond the mountain,
To the western prairies wide;
And behold the thousand fountains,
Where the pilgrims now resid

Way beyond the Rocky Mountains—
In those regions far away—
There are opened the true fountains,
Which no earthly power can stay
Free they flow, and free they're given—
Freely give it back again,
Till you're taken up to heaven
There forever to remain.

Oh! ye gospel heralds! linger
Not so long, upon your way,
Go ye fast, and go still swifter;
Go ye on without delay.
How we love to hear the tidings,
Of our fellow-men restored!
By the hundred, and the thousands,
Re-created by God's word!

Let us all unite in labor;—
More industrous,—with more zeal—
Brethren, sisters, hear the Savior:
How he doth to you appeal!
Labor while the day is closing,
Night shall come without delay;
Why are ye in slumber dozing?
Be ye active—"watch and pray."

Hear the mighty angel crying!
See him stand on land and sea!
Think how swift the time is flying!
Time shall never—never be.
But we'll cross the mystic river—
Meet again on yon bright shore;
Then when time has flown forever,
Still our Savior we'll adore.

Avarice.

The temptation to dishonesty is often plausible and powerful. He, whose ruling passion is the love of money, will be strongly impelled, especially if secrecy can be maintained, to embezzle or defraud. In the absence of religious principles which condemn avarice and deter from fraudulent designs, a man who has the opportunity of being dishonest, will be, by times, powerfully tempted. If he yields to the allurements of the tempter, disgrace is sure to follow. Many young men have had the qualifications of procuring and retaining a good reputation, had they only never yielded to avarice. Reputation once forfeited, character is gone; and his hopes for this world are forever blasted. He may fly to the remotest climes, and elude the claims of justice, (though seldom is he successful in this,) but he can never erase from his character the foul blots; nor remove from his conscience the intolerable load. It will clothe every prospect with gloom, turn every pleasure into bitterness, and make the miserable victim of dishonesty an object of suspicion, scorn, and abhorrence. The commission of such a deed is easy. It is a deliberate abandonment of all that is desirable on earth. It is the death blow to hope, and the fore-runner to dissipation. For an exemplification of these remarks, go to our prisons, and you will see many there whose early life dawned as fair and as promising as yours. They indulged high hopes, and looked forward to the possession of influence and respectability. But the love of money became their ruin. One compliance with temptations blighted their prospects and shut them up in those gloomy prison walls. If you are placed in circumstances to need this friendly warning, you will not, I trust, consider me as questioning your honesty, while feeling it my duty to administer it. The temptation to defraud, in order to be successfully resisted, must not be tampered with—not for an instant—like every other temptation, it must be regarded as a suggestion of satan, and be met by an abhorrence proportionate to the blackness of the crime, and the danger to which it exposes. It is death to entertain it for a moment. There is an eye which rests upon you wherever you go, and whatever you do. Sin, ever so long concealed from man, lies open to that omniscient eye. If you would have a safeguard from temptation, you must act under the abiding impression of the sentiment, "Thou, God, seest me." You must shape your conduct by that rule, which teaches you to render unto all their due. You must commit the keeping of your soul, your character, and your hopes, to a faithful creator; and ever pray with David: "Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe." C. P. L. ROBERTS.

Hudson, Iowa.

"Ye are the Light of the World."

When our Savior, the true light, was in the world, he said to his disciples: "Ye are the light of the world." It is the same to day, and it will be so to the end of time. There may be bad characters in the church—there may be hypocrites—but that does not change the fact. Our Savior chose twelve, one of which had a devil; but still he said: "Ye are the light." Let Christians, then, be careful to disseminate the light, so that those who live and walk in darkness may behold it, and be induced to follow it to the true source of light—to our Redeemer and Savior—who "is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world." We invite special attention to the following selection. E.

Though Christ says emphatically of himself, "I am the light of the world," he also says, with equal force, of his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world." He meant to teach that there is no contradiction whatever in these expressions, for Jesus is primarily and his followers are secondarily "the light of the world." He meant to teach that though he was "that light," yet the world would know him, and from their impressions of him and the doctrines he taught, in a large measure from the way in which he was exhibited in the lives of his disciples. Hence the command, "Let your light so shine before men that others seeing your good works may glorify your Father which is in heaven." The Christian has no innate light, but is only "the light," inasmuch as he reflects the Lord Jesus. Every true Christian is a mirror which reflects Christ's glory, his power and love; and a consistent Christian example is a means of leading men to honor God, and of promoting their highest good. It would be far better for both the church and the world if Christians felt this more keenly, and were more careful in their example. A recent address says, "Christians are too careless about separation from the evil that is in the world. They may get far enough away from popery, and from most other forms of evil, without being separated from the world. It must be a separation not merely of person, but of character and life. I may have to spend hours every day with an ungodly man; it may be torture to do so, and I might get away from him without violating duty, but remaining in his society affords opportunity for showing the character and temper of the Christian. Moreover, the light of the Christian life may show what salvation is. Salvation is not to be kept as spikenard in an alabaster box. The salvation provided for us is a salvation from sin, and for the practice holiness. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?" The Christian's light makes Christ manifest. "When they saw them they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." The pupil of any eminent master of painting, sculpture, or architecture, makes manifest the competency and skill of his professor,—that is, if he be an apt learner. In like manner the Christian makes manifest the glory of his Lord. Further, the consistent Christian as an unobstructed light reveals especially the Father which is in heaven. The candle is not put under a bushel. The Christian's light may be obstructed by such things as these, "fellowship with the works of darknes;" silence when he should speak out; intentional concealment of his relation to Christ; absence from the post of duty, &c., &c. Conduct which is the reverse of this gives light, and it is light that can not be hid. By our good works we should glorify our Father. We are made for this. We are saved for this. We are redeemed unto God. We are to think of ourselve as redeemed not so much from hell as unto God. We should think of Christ's redemption as bringing us back to the Father. And to glorify God is for his sons and daughters to make mention of his name, to cause him to be praised through his children. Have light in yourselves. Don't let it be only in your Bible, or hymn-book, or any other thing. Be a light, and take heed lest the light that is in you be darkness. Be a light in the right place. Home is a right place for the Christian to shine. How unhappy it is when a man is all brightness in a religious service and all darkness at home. The shop, the counting-house, the circle of friends, the bed of sickness, the chamber of death, are all right places for the Christian's light to shine; and so is the place of enjoyment and pure recreation, as well as the church and the Lord's table.—Make your light shine. There need be no ostentation. Some people put out their candle by ever much snuffing. Remember, too, that ye are the light of the world. You may be called to some dark place to be a light there, and you are to go. If the worlds light is not with the Christian it is nowhere. It is not with men of science. Their power is in showing us God's works; the cry is, "Show us the Father." The light the world needs is not with statesmen, not with scholars, though they have some light to give—The light that is essential to the world is with the Christian. It is the light of life. "Ye are the light of the world."—Religious Intelligencer.

Sorrow.

Christ says: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light;" yet we often feel sorrowful, if we are followers of him. In the first place, because we must so often feel our weakness, and must often say with Paul, Rom. 7; 23. "But I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in members;" and second, because we who know the goodness of the Lord, must see so many yet traveling on the broad road of sin; and what makes us still more sorrowful, is, to think that one soul should be lost, and once be cast "into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." But such is the word of God, and we know it; therefore we try to flee from the wrath to come

Dear brethren, you, who have parents, brethren or children in the flesh, who still travel the broad road of sin,—perhaps aged parents, who have but few days yet before they will be called to answer before the great Judge, and yet they think it is good so too, and perhaps say yet, "If there is no way for us, a great many will be lost," oh! to such I would say, if it would be "good so too." Christ would not have come into this sinful world, and have gone through all the tribulations even to death upon the cross, and taught us, that "wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat."

Oh brethren! how often must we feel for such! How many a tear will it cost, how many a time will it bring us on our knees to pray with sorrowful hearts, for those who watched over us when we were helpless infants, who carried us on their arms and bore with our faults, and were kind and patient with us in our childish ways? Yet now we must see them infirm with age, and not as yet prepared to enter into one of those mansions prepared to receive them. Is it not sorrowful, dear brethren, that such too often is the case? We must say with Paul, "I have great heaviness, and continual sorrow in my heart; for I could wish myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." But since we have a Good Master, I mean to pray that such, too, may yet come to Christ, have their sins forgiven, and live according to his will, be saved by his grace, and called to meet each other in heaven, where no more sorrow can come.

On Pilgrimage.

TO A HEAVY-HEARTED BELIEVER.

It seems amazingly easy to sit at my desk and preach faith and patience to you and to others. Still, all the lessons I try to teach, were born of suffering, mental and physical. I am no theorizer on the subject of religious discipline. I love to recall the heated furnaces in which God has so often placed me through years of suffering, for therein is revealed the wisdom and compassion and love of God. We discover the depth and intensity of the Divine feeling only in the suffering of the Godman; and it is in "the fellowship of his sufferings" that we are made partakers of his purity and joy and strength. But this is not to be my present theme. You have made an exodus from the land of bondage, have passed through the red sea, and are following the pillar of fire and cloud through the desert. You have set out for a far country, passing along a road beset with trials and dangers. You are on pilgrimage to the land that floweth with milk and honey. Your feet are in the narrow way that leads from the city of destruction to the Heavenly Jerusalem. You are in "a new and living way," in which you have never traveled before, and every step you take brings you on new ground. Millions have passed over this way, and have left the print of their feet behind them, to guide and encourage those that come after. How sublime and inspiring the thought that we are traveling home to God—home to the dear one's who have already gained the haven of eternal rest—home to the ineffable and unending joys that Jesus has stored up in his exhaustless garner for his ransomed. Countless feet now walking the golden streets of the Celestial City, were once "strangers and pilgrims" in a world of woe. The path in which you journey has been hallowed from end to end with the tears and blood of Emmanual. Every inch is holy ground. You cannot make a step Heavenward but you set your foot on a spot that has been made sacred by the precious blood of a precious Savior. Whenever you weep, and your tears fall at your feet, oh what bliss to know that the same dust has been saturated with the tears of God's only-begotten Son. The living way is the way of tears, the way of blood, but every drop has God's image in it, and is luminous with "the excellent glory." The blood of the holy martyrs has flowed so freely, that the King's highway is purpled with it. But for all this it is a glorious way. It not only terminates gloriously, but is full of Divine effulgence from the "narrow gate" to the "gate of pearl." It is lined with Angels all along, serving as sentries of the Lord's host. It is a way where God is all in all, and "the loss of all things" is infinite gain.

On the thoroughfares leading to our large cities are placed milestones, to show the distance, and assure us that we are nearing our desired destination. God has also set milestones along the way that leads to the great and glorious Capital of his Kingdom. They are not so far apart as on our public roads, but we meet them at every step. These way-marks designate our moral status, and, if rightly appreciated, confirm our faith, and quicken our footsteps in the direction of the goal. In repentance we arrive at the first milestone that has "the name of the City of my God" conspicuously printed on it.—In genuine repentance our faces are already Heavenward. This milestone is enveloped with the dread gloom and terror of Sinai, but the voice and presence of Jehovah are in the midst thereof. When faith dawns in the heart, like the rising of Eternity's Sun, we meet another milestone, with letters of living light, beaming with Divine love. Here thousands are very apt to forget themselves, and feast awhile on their blissful emotions instead of "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Sometimes when on a journey and reaching "a place where two ways meet." we approach the fingerboard to ascertain the right direction. Not unfrequently the print is so dim that we must stop our course and strain our eyes to decipher the inscription. Thus we lose time, and not a few have, on this account, lost the object of their journey. But on the way to heaven there are no such causes of loss. Every milestone and fingerboard is so plainly inscribed, in letters so large and distinct, that we need not slacken our pace in order to find out what to do or whither to go. This is what is meant by the prophet Habakkuk 2: 2. The commandments of God are written so clearly, "that he may run that readeth them." When you came to baptism, you found another fingerboard pointing Zion-ward. You did not need to call in learned counsel to ascertain the mind of God. Some walk around this milestone for years, trying to spell out some meaning contrary to the plain requirement of the Gospel. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." This is the handwriting of Gob, and is as plain as our own name. Were I to attempt to persuade you that G–e–o–r–g–e spells Benjamin, or Valentine, I think I could employ no arguments that would gain your mind to coincide with my assertion. Baptism is as free from ambiguity as the case supposed. And not only so: it is equally evident that we are to be baptized as soon as we believe. Many of our own members contend that when we have passed from repentance to faith, we must defer baptism until we have had a most wonderful experience, such as makes our ears tingle to hear it related. This is folly, and evinces a want of faith in the word of God. A person who claims to believe in Christ, and yet hesitates to be baptized, as though repentance and faith were not due qualifications for the ordinance, declares that God has set up at least one fingerboard on his Highway which is so indistinct that it requires weeks and months to make out the direction. Many hang for years around this spot, as though God had left a perfect blank there, necessitating them to cut in the inscription themselves. Indeed multitudes do this very thing. Those that sprinkle, or pour, or baptize only once or twice, or backward, put a heavy coat of white-wash on the large, clear letter of Revelation, and then overlay it with a black inscription to suit their rebellious hearts and perverse inclinations. But you did not so. You left that milestone behind agreeably to Divine directions, and went on your way rejoicing. Then come others along your course, which are placed in a circle, and repeat themselves, and these also you attended to in the proper manner. We are to run with patience the race set before us, and Infinite Goodness and Wisdom has not revealed his will so carelessly as to arrest our progress in order to unravel the intricacies of his most positive behests. His word is a "word of faith," and does not ask the understanding to compass its measures Godward, but receive it as would a little child the simplest injunction of its mother, not balancing obedience on our comprehension of all the reasons and relations of the act. This latter is not faith, but skepticism. It is the distinction of faith that it can receive all that God can reveal, and live in the enjoyment of it, without gauging its depths or stumbling at its mysteries.

These outward milestones all direct one way, and keep the whole family of God in fellowship. Walking by faith in all that is pre-eminently given to faith, they are "of the same mind," "keeping the ordinances as they have been delivered unto them." But there are others, more interior, that we bear always with us. Sometimes the way is so clouded and our path seems so obstructed, that we feel as if we had utterly lost ourselves. You have no doubt found out, in your short pilgrimage, what this means. You have passed through hours and days of desertion in which the heavens were draped in sackcloth, and the sun seemed to have vanished from the sky. You have had times since your baptism when satan filled your mind with doubts and rent your hearts with fears, as though all your communion with God had been a dreamy delusion. In such an experience you are not alone. Christ has passed through it before you. He had his hours and days and weeks of loneliness. What did satan want with him in the wilderness immediately after baptism? To taunt him with doubts of his Divinity. "If thou be the Son of God." "If." A world of meaning centres in this brief word. It is an epitome of the devil's gospel. Could this monosyllable have been realized in the experience of Christ, hell would harvest us all. By the cruel, diabolical "if," he mocked the claims of Jesus as a Divine Person. All who deny his Divinity, have the devil for their head and elder brother. It was as much as to say, you pretend to be the Son of God, but it is all delusion. The arch-foe knew that he was confronting very God, and maliciously called his Divinity in question only in hope of urging him to some act that would compromise his dignity and the object of his mission. What he failed to accomplish in Christ, he does not fail to attempt again and again on his followers. How often does he show up our defections in a light that turns everything into hideousness. When he has access to cast his baleful shadow over us, we feel as though his very nature were in it.—Infinite disgust at ourselves is the supreme feeling. We are ready to doubt the reality of our former comfort in the Divine relationship. But what answer did Christ return to the insinuations of his satanic majesty? Oh what sweet encouragement to his followers! He invariably repelled the adversary with the sword of the Spirit: "it is written." Do we know what consolations flow from these words for the tempted children of God? It matters not what objections the devil brought against Christ, our Savior was willing to abide by what is written. Here, ye harrassed, doubting saints, is a fingerboard by which you may always know "the grace of God wherein ye stand." When you feel that you are in a bleak, barren waste, in utter loneliness of spirit, satan tempting you mightily with his wiles, trying his utmost to create in your heart distrust of the love of God, and your filial relation to him, only ask your inmost soul this question: is it my purpose, my desire, or inclination, to allow any direction to my course contrary to what is writ, ten? Is it not my habitual, sincere, governing purpose and effort to conform my life, in all its details to what is written? When you feel deserted, as though Christ had withdrawn his loving presence, and satan darkens your heart with the fear that you are none of God's children, can you not say, in all sincerity, that you are as willing now as ever to direct your steps and mould your life according to what God has written on the milestones along the way that Jesus trod to Eternity? I believe, and am sure, that you can reply with a sincere, and fervent amen. You are in the way to "the tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man." Your "feet are turned to his testimonies." His mark is in your forehead. The dark places you meet with are not so dark that you cannot discern the footprints of Jesus. The lower you are down at the feet of your Redeemer, the more light and comfort you will have. The way is narrow, but broad enough to enjoy all the liberty that a child of God wants. We are not straitened in the way, but in ourselves. We are weak and helpless, but this is the condition that Christ needs for the exhibition of his Almighty strength in us. He is in us by faith, and we carry with his shoulders, wield the weapons of our warfare with his hands, see with his eyes. Jesus had to travel a rougher road to reach us, than we need to go to find him. When the way seems long, the aspect dreary, and the yoke heavy, let us turn our gaze to Calvary and contemplate our suffering, bleeding, dying Savior. He is the way. The fingerboards are his. By walking as he directs, we become "the righteousness of God in him. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God"—as many, no more.

Non-conformity

"And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Rom. 12: 2.

In this language of Paul to his Roman brethren, he conveys the idea that we must deny ourselves of this world;—our self-will must be subdued—not alone in dress—but in many other things. We must not go with the world, and talk and act like the world. Christ says we must give an account in the day of Judgment for every idle word we speak; and when I see so many brethren talk and sport with the world, I think, they don't consider.

Again the Gospel teaches that we must be a light to the world, that others may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

To be transformed we must deal honestly with our fellow men; if we do not, we fail to comply with the Gospel order. We must give no offence to Jew or gentile: we must try to do good to all men, to come out from the world and be a separate people. "Mind not high things but condescend to men of low estate." "What is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

Again; "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." We must deny ourselves of "worldly lusts;" and "walk in the light as he is in the light," and the blood of his Son will cleanse us from all sin

Again, the Gospel teaches us to be of one mind. If we be of one mind, we will walk together on the Gospel road, and conform to the Gospel order. Paul tells us that rather than offend any of his brethren, he would "eat no meat while the world standeth." Let us be of the same mind, "and so fulfil the law of Christ."

Peter says: "as ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless." We must strive to be blameless in all the commands of the Lord Jesus Christ. We must not think that we can hide ourselves from God. He knows all things. So let us direct our minds heavenward; and look to God for help in time of need, is the prayer of your poor, weak brother in Christ.

Chatfield, O.

The Passions and the New Birth.

BY C. WORTMAN.

Divine grace takes hold upon man as it finds him—depraved, sinful, and ungodly—and re-models his moral nature and spiritual tendencies, without touching his identity, converting his darkness into light, his hatred into love, his disobedience into obedience, his affections from earth and sin to Christ and heaven, or his sensuality into spirituality, so that his desires lead in a different direction, his resolves prompt to a different course of action, and his delights are in different themes of thought and sources of gratification. In the new birth none of the faculties of the mind are destroyed, nor is any new faculty added. In conversion our mental powers are employed in religious uses, and exercised in the service of, and in the noble work of doing good to, ourselves and others. In this rational state our motive-powers direct and prompt us in a holy and heavenly course, while before the change these same powers were prostituted to the debasing service of sin and satan, and these same energies urged us on in the work of death and ruin. Religion, in all its demands, prohibitions, reasons, and influences, is compatible with the existence and exercise of all the faculties of our intellectuality, and takes hold upon every element of our souls, not to destroy, but to harmonize and press them into the work of our personal salvation.

Reason is exercised in weighing and acknowledging the evidences and obligations of Christianity; imagination in surveying the wisdom, goodness, and power of Deity in the works of nature and the moral government of the universe, in beholding also the stupendous love of God in man's redemption, and in contemplating the thrilling prospects of a holy soul in the heavenly world; and memory is employed in sorrowfully recalling to mind the sins of life, and in gratefully reviewing the numerous mercies and wonderful goodness of God to us. In a word, every intellectual power, as above said, however divided and denominated by philosophers, finds harmonious and delightful exercise in doctrinal, experimental, and practical Christianity, and is sanctified to a sublime and joyous development and a worthy end. Revelation also appeals to our fear and feeling of self-interest, as negative motives to move us to, and keep us in, a position of innocence and safety, and addresses consideration to our ambition—a noble element when rightly used—to urge us to excellence in the gifts, graces, and practices of religion, and arouses our sense of honor—an exalting feeling when properly aimed—to "quit ourselves like men," redeemed as we are, and destined to a changeless immortality. Neither firmness, courage, emulation, nor any one of the heroic passions are annihilated, but are pressed into the magnanimous struggle of the soul for victory over sin and death, and ultimate triumph in glory. Hence we are exhorted to "stand fast," "strive to excel," "endure hardness as good soldiers."

Then the milder passions or emotions are all taxed and sanctified for the same grand and important purpose. Hence our gratitude, benevolence, patience, meekness, and imitation are employed, along with the more ardent feelings, to gain the same great end of our calling. Even covetousness, so debasing when sordid gain is its object, is used as an ability, under grace, to acquire good, and we are told to "covet the best gifts;" and that fierce and vicious passion—hate—when turned against our Maker and spiritual good, is powerful, under divine influence, in enabling us to despise wickedness of all kinds. It is, therefore, the corruption and perversion of our faculties and passions that constitute us vile and sinful, and the purification and conversion to a scriptural use and end of these faculties and passions which constitute us righteous. This purification and conversion is not by nature or education, but by the grace of God through faith. —Religious Telescope.

Our Heavenly Treasures.

"But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt; and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Matt. 6 : 20, 21. Here our Master tells his followers where they are to lay up their treasures, They are not to be earthly treasures; but heavenly treasures, that are lasting. Now let us pause, and see where we are laying our treasures; whether we are laying up our treasures on earth or in heaven; for we may easily see, by comparing our lives with God's Word. Man is so constituted that he will cling to some particular object—whatever is nearest to his affections.—There is a secret, silent influence going out from it, that tends to make him something like it. If our treasures be of an heavenly nature, and we are following the admonition of the apostles, and have our "affections set on things above," and have "Christ formed within us the hope of glory," then it tends to make us more Christ-like. Then we are going on to perfection. Do we love to think, to talk, to read, and write about our heavenly treasure? Can we say it is our "meat and drink to do" our Masters will? Are we striving to do all we can to advance Christ's cause on earth? Can we say with Paul: "To live is Christ, and to die is gain?" Do we love the Lord our God with all our "heart, mind, soul, and strength;" and our neighbor as ourselves? If we do those things, then, we have a clear title to that treasure that fadeth not away:—or treasures as it is not in the singular, but in the plural number. So we see it is not all laid up at once; as earthly treasures are often accumulated little by little; so with our heavenly treasures; we should be continually adding to them; and, in fact, if we are not, I fear we have no treasure there but but that our treasures are of an earthly nature. If so be, that we have no heavenly treasures, may God help us to begin to lay up our "treasures where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal" if upon examination we find we have treasures in heaven, then let us center our affections upon them and strive, daily, to add to them, so that when we come to put off this mortal, we can put on immortality and have everlasting treasures. Let us strive to live more Christ-like, in time to come, than we have in the past. May we forget the things that are behind, and press forward toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. May we so live, that we may finally reach that haven of repose, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest," is the prayer of your unworthy writer.

Beginning the Day with God.

There are many toiling ones whose time is not their own to command, but there is no one who cannot hold converse with God. His ear can hear amid the clang and roar of machinery, or the hum of hundreds of voices. The heart can go to him no matter what the surroundings. Whenever Abraham pitched his tent, there he raised up an altar to the Lord.—So, wherever the Christian heart is there is also an acceptable altar from which the incense of prayer and praise may ascend.

Yet there are a few who may not, if they will, find time and place for private communion with God before entering on the morning's duties.

General Havelock would rise at four, if the hour for marching was at six, rather than lose the precious privilege of communing with his God before setting out.

Luther, in his busiest season, felt that praying-time was never lost.—When remarkably pressed with labors he would say, "I have so much to do that I cannot get on without three hours a day of praying."

Sir Matthew Hale also bears testimony, "If I omit praying and reading God's word in the morning, nothing goes well all day."

PRAYER.—Kneeling means adoration; standing means reverence, attention, waiting; but what does sitting at one's prayers mean, save listlessness, coldness, disrespect?

Never be sorry for a generous thing that you have done, even if betrayed.

Written for the Companion.

The Old Order of the Old Brethren.

Dear brethren and sisters, we are often referred to the Order of the Brethren, as an example which we should follow in faith and practice. While some may put too much confidence in the old order ; others esteem the order of the church, as the old Brethren established it, as not binding on them : especially are we in danger of so judging of the old order, when it forbids things that are according to the fashions, and belong to the customs and practices of this world ; and which are not forbidden by the Gospel under the names by which they are at this time called. Now, we think, the Gospel should be our highest law ; and secondly, the old Order of the Brethren should be submitted to, where it does not conflict with the Gospel. But in this each individual member should not assume the right to judge for himself. We should try to be of one mind ; and labor with one another to come to a union in faith and practice. For this reason we have our Church, District, and Yearly meetings. It is evident, that no number of men and women, however small that number may be, can be and remain in a church capacity, in union of faith and practice, unless they have an order or rule of practice, which they unitedly believe to be as near the Gospel as can be made ; and all who are not willing to adopt such rules, cannot enjoy themselves in that church as they should and could if united with the church in sentiment. We often hear it said : "I believe the Gospel ; I take it for my rule of faith and practice ; and am not willing to be ruled by the old Order of the Brethren and the minutes of the Yearly Meeting." But it never takes many years to prove that such are not led by the Spirit of Christ; and though in outward appearance they may be humble, yet such are proud, and self-willed, not willing to submit their own judgment to the council of many Brethren. A few years ago, we had among us a man who called himself a brother, and a preacher. He was somewhat out of order in dress, and his hair and beard ; and also differed from the Brethren in observing the ordinances of the Gospel, as understood and practiced by the Brethren. When brought before the church he was very bold ; saying he would not submit to the Order of the Brethren as given by the Yearly Meeting ; that it was the work of men : and that he would take the Gospel only, and preach it as long as he lived. He was disowned. But mark what followed. In a few days he met with a man from another part of the state, who had been disowned for the same reason. They sat in council, comparing sentiments, came to an agreement, organized themselves as a church, and set out to preach. Some time after, these two men, and a number of others from different states who did not believe in the Order of the Brethren met in Northern Indiana. They sat in council to effect a union ; and to understand, what they collectively understood, or wanted to understand, the Gospel to teach. They came to an agreement ; all but two, who probably would not yield any of their own notions. Now these two meetings, the first by two men of one state, and then a greater number from the different states, were so much like the Brethren's District and Annual Meetings, that any one can see it. Thus, dear brethren let us never suppose that we can get along without order in the church. Now we think this Order of the Brethren is in union with the general tenor and spirit of the Gospel. It would take too much space to write on all the different parts of this old Order ; so we will try to say something on the outward appearance of the members in dress, the hair, and the beard. The Gospel teaches us to be humble ; and pride is always opposed to humility. "God resisteth the proud ; but giveth grace to the humble. Pride, like every other passion, is made know by acts ; and may be manifested in a great many different ways ; such as lands, houses, furniture, carriages, horses, harness, and a great many other things of a temporal nature, which are all right, if used and not abused. Paul says: "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused if it be received with thanksgiving." And where the heart is full of devotion and thanksgiving to God, there will not be much room for pride. The proper medium, then, in all these creature gifts is to use them for health and comfort, to the honor and glory of God. But a proud heart desires a great deal more than this rule will allow. Thus we see men and women indulge in unnecessary adornings of the body ; such as hoops, ruffles, ribbons, laces, atificials, earrings, fingerrings, and the different dashy colors on dress, which please the eyes of the wearer, and attract the notice and applause of other proud people. This John calls "the lust of the flesh, & the lust of the eye, and the pride of life ;" and these things are not of God, but "of the world ; and the world passeth away and the lust thereof." To love these things is natural—is carnal—and "the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Just think of the time and money that are foolishly spent, yea worse than cast away ; we must needs say:

> "How proud we are, how fond to shew
> Our clothes, and call them rich and new,
> When the poor sheep and silkworms wore
> That very clothing long before."

All sincere Christians acknowledge pride in clothing to be sinful : and several denominations have restrictions on dress. We quote from the Methodist discipline, page 36. "Should we insist on the rules concerning dress. "Ans. By all means ; this is no time to encourage superfluity of dress ; therefore, let all our people be exhorted to conform to the spirit of the apostolic precept, not to adorn, themselves with gold, or pearl, or costly array." Now to the Order of the Brethren which has always been, plainness in all things, and the Brethren have had more labor in exhorting to this duty than any other. In fact plainness in all temporaol things, is characteristic of the Brethren, and is an outward sign by which they are known by others, as well as among themselves. So deep seated and so perfectly ingrafted is this Order in the minds and hearts of the old brethren and sisters, that all the opposition of the world, could never overcome it; but the most trouble is in the church, by such members as cannot (or will not) see the use in being so strict. Read Rom. 12 2 . It appears we are to offer our bodies a living sacrifice" unto God and this seems to be our "reasonable service." "And be ye not conformed to this world ; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." This may be the reason why some do not see the use in this old Order ; for, if the mind be not renewed, we cannot see and understand the will of God concerning us. But we, (that is our bodies,) must be changed; and this is the result of a change of mind; for the mind acts through or by means of the body. So where the proud mind is changed, the proud body will also be changed, but men cannot, and are not required to change the literal body, (for that is God's own work, and is right,) we must then understand, the works of the body must be changed by the power of the mind, (which is now subject to the will of God,) being brought to bear upon it. We all promised to conform to the Order of the church when we were received by baptism. This is a solemn covenant which we made with brethren and sisters, to become like them in outward appearance; and unless we do so, we are not as good as our word: we break the covenant we have made. All of us who were acquainted with the Brethren before baptism, knew what we promised to do; and that the church expected we would do as we promised. The fashions of the world are ever changing—in dress—the hair, and beard Then let us wear our hair after the Order; it takes less labor and care, than the way the world wears it. There was a time when the world did not wear the beard, and many of the brethren were not willing to bear that cross; but now, men have what is called a full beard, and a good many of the brethren would like to wear it, and some do. It has ceased to be a cross, to wear what is called a beard; but it is still a cross to wear it according to the Order, which is to cut off the beard above the mouth, and some below. Paul says; "let every thing be done decently and in order." It is nearly impossible for a man having a strong, full beard, to keep it always clean and decent. We have saluted such brethren; and it is almost always wet with spittle; or, at least, damp with breath. But some claim to wear the full beard for conscience sake; but we should gauge our conscience by the word. There are two kinds of conscience; the one is good, being according to the word; the other evil, not having the word for it. We will be judged by the word, and not by our conscience. The Gospel says not one word about the beard; but in Lev. 18: 27, we read: "Ye shall not round the corners of your heads; neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard." The German reading would be, ye shall not cut the hair of your head all around; nor cut your beard all off, "Thus we see in the prohibition a plain permission to cut part of it off. We say, without fear of successful contradiction, there is nothing in the Bible to justify the wearing of the full beard; and it there is not, what is a conscience worth in support of it. But it says "God made man in his own image;" and it is wrong to deface the image. "But we do not know that man had a beard before he became a sinner, but even if it were so, it would prove too much; for man was made upright, but he is now in a condition that he must deny himself of many things that are just as natural as the full beard. Our passions are just as natural as the full beard; but they must be brought into subjection to the Gospel. Among these are love, hatred, fear, and pride which may also be called a passion It is not wrong to love, but we must not love world; hatred is right, if directed against all that is sinful; "fear God, and keep his commandments; so a Godly fear brings us to obey God; and we should have pride or self-esteem enough to keep ourselves cleanly and in order; so the beard must also be kept in order; for "God is a God of order, and not of confusion."

We now come to the last part of our subject—the Minutes of our Y. M. Much as we esteem them, as being the result of the labor of our old brethren whom we love and esteem; still we do not hold the minutes as of equal authority with the Gospel. Now let us see whether the minutes agree with the Order and practice of the old brethren: for we are contending to bring the minutes to the above Order, and not the Order to the minutes. We then see they do not agree with what we have shown above to be the old Order of wearing the beard; for the minutes give a brother a right to have a full beard for conscience' sake. Now if one has the right, all have. Can any one desire such a change? Just imagine all the brethren brought together, and all having full beards, what a sight it would be! We think nine-tenths of the brethren do not desire such a result. Then if we would dry up the stream, we must begin at the fountain; that is, the minutes should be so changed or amended, as to agree with the Order of the brethren, and with the practice of nearly all of the brethren present when the privilege was given for the full beard. We have often been astonished that such a grant came from the Y. M., when so many brethren were present who were opposed to its practice. Was it the fear of a few brethren present, who were out of order? We fear it was too much the case; and the fruits of it have not been good. Brethren have rested on that grant, and have refused to come into the church Order. The brethren in three adjoining churches here, have, with much hard labor, so far succeeded that all but two of the brethren have come to Order. We feel much rejoiced for this willingness to die for one another. But the brethren are all the time met with the minutes. The Y. M. never intended to make it a duty to have a full beard, yet we heard an elder who had been advised by the old brethren to come into Order say, that the reason why he could not obey the council was, the Y. M. had said brethren should bear with one another in these things; and he must keep house according to that, or render himself liable to have the Y. M. send a committee to set things in order. So we say again, we earnestly hope the Y. M. will so amend the reading of the minutes as to make them agree with the old order of the old brethren. We hope the dear brethren who are yet out of order, will not take offence at these plain remarks, for none is intended. Let us all labor for a union in faith and practice, so the world may see we are one in Christ Jesus.

To the Annual Meeting.

We expect to start for Annual Meeting on Wednesday morning, June 1st, in company with father. Our first stopping place will be at West Branch, Ogle County, Ill., where we expect to attend a Love-feast on the 4th and 5th, and on Monday morning, set forth for place of meeting.

The Brethren in Buffalo Valley congregation, Union Co., Pa., extend an invitation to their Love-feast, appointed to be on the 1st and 2nd of June.

The Middle Pa., District Meeting.

On Thursday 12th inst we set out for Gettysburg, Pa., where we landed in the evening in company with brethren Graybill Myers, Daniel Snowberger and Isaac Replogle. Met at the station by brethren Joseph Sherfy, Utz, and Peter Boblitz, with whom we divided our company, ourself accompanying the latter, living in town. Next morning brother B. accompanied us to the National Cemetery, where sleep the remains of many thousands of those who died in the defense of their kingdom. Thence we visited the Katalysine Springs, and the Gettysburg Springs a Hotel, famous Summer Resort. These springs obtained their renown in rather an incidental manner. The rebels being fatigued and exhausted drank rather freely of their waters, and some of them sickened and died; whereupon it was asserted that the Yankees had poisoned the water. To ascertain the truth of the matter the water was analyzed, and instead of poisonous medicinal properties were discovered. Since then many thousands of barrels have been sent all over the country. It was recommended by the brethren who accompanied us, as having performed wonders by restoring persons who had been afflicted with kidney diseases. We drank several glasses and in a few days thereafter we certainly felt very good, but whether the virtue was in the water, or in the pure, healthful air we breathed, and the relaxation from the cares and perplexities of business, and the attention received from kind Christian friends, may be a question. We incline to the latter, without however disparaging the good qualities of the water at the springs. Brother B. and his kind lady have our thanks for undeserved attention.

After dinner our host conveyed us to the house of brother Joseph Sherfy, where we remained until next day noon. Brother Sherfy's farm is near the centre of the great Gettysburg battle field, and standing in the beautiful yard by the house we are in sight of the Round Top, Little Round Top, Kulps Hill, Peach orchard, Seminary Hill, and other places of note. The Peach Orchard is on the farm. Brother Sherfy had two barns burned, one by the ravages of war, and another by an incendiary. He also suffered severely by the loss of fences, stock, household goods, &c., but by industry and the blessing of heaven the family is again pleasantly situated, as they highly deserve to be. Three sons and three daughters compose the family of our brother and sister, four of whom have been teachers. If they were all as obedient to their heavenly Father as we are led to believe they are to their parents, a happier family would be hard to find. If many prayers will be answered we confidently hope ere long to hear expressions of great joy from them.

Brother Sherfy pays special attention to the culture of Peaches, and they serve up some of the finest canned fruit that we have ever had the pleasure to taste. Those of our readers who want such an article would do well to remember the address of Joseph Sherfy, Gettysburg, Pa., until the season of that luxury again arrives.

On Saturday afternoon and evening attended the Lovefeast at Marsh Creek meeting-house. Had the pleasure of seeing eight converts rising out of the watery grave, and go forth in newness of life. Had very good order and an interesting meeting. Also meeting next day, with a full house, and apparently serious reflections.

We lodged at the house of brother Pfoutz, but on account of the crowd we did not make the acquaintance of the family.

On Sunday afternoon brother David Bosserman, the elder of the Marsh Creek branch conveyed us to the house of brother Saml. B. Miller, near Hampton, where we were cared for for the night, and next morning in good time were taken to the place of meeting, and found already a number of brethren and sisters assembled.

The meeting was opened in the usual order, and at about 10 o'clock the roll was called and responded to by the following delegates:

Antietam	Jacob Price, J. F. Rohrer.
Aughwick	John Glock, Jas. R. Lane.
Back Creek	John Shank, George Mourer.
Buffalo	Isaac Myers, Charles Royer.
Clover Creek	J. W. Brumbaugh, J. L. Wineland.

A Request.

The Editor of the Companion and Yonth has frequently solicited his contributors to favor him by sending their best thoughts. We hope our brethren and sisters will think of this; and not only think of it, but carry it into effect. Remember that we have a great work to perform. We have positions to defend, doctrines to disseminate, and many dangerous errors to to refute. Come, then, with your whole force. We do not invite you to send us long essays, merely to fill up the columns of our papers, regardless of the ideas contained in them; but we ask you to write on important subject—themes that are dear to your hearts—and give us your richest thoughts, expressed in the fewest possible words. But in your effort to do this you must guard against the opposite extreme—that of being so brief as to cripple your ideas. Be sure you have something of importance to say, and then say it distinctly, forcibly, and fully: when said in this way it is well said, and should be left without repetition.

In this way we hope you will come to our aid immediately, as we expect the Editor to be absent a good part of the time during the coming month, and we wish still to send you good papers. If you have any interesting church news, (and most church news is of interest,) send it on. The busy portion of the year is now begun, and it may be burdensome to many to write; but we feel like giving you all the encouragement we can. When you labor with a weary hand, we regard it as an evidence that you have a willing heart. Æ.

A Correction.

In the last No. of the Companion, page 319, we say the Lovefeast will be in the Yellow creek congregation on the 15th of June. This is a mistake. It was correctly published in No. 19, page 303. It will be on the 26th and 27th of May; commencing at 4 o'clock P. M. of the 26th. Æ.

Back Numbers.

We are still getting in new sudscribers who call for the April Nos. of the Companion. We are sorry that we cannot furnish them. Several numbers are entirely exhausted. We are doing the best we can, and hope our patrons will bear with us. Æ

Answer to Correspondents.

John W. Ellis. According to our books the money and order never came to hand. We cannot tell what is wrong. We will send the Companion.

Rail Road Privileges

We have received communications from several brethren in the West, in reference to Railroad privileges for those wishing to attend the Annual Meeting. From these we give the following.

We secured the privilege on the Chicago & Galena Division, as far as Freeport, where that road meets the Ill. C. R. R.; & also the N. Wn. to Dixon; or as far as brethren wish to travel. At Dixon, the N. Wn. crosses the Ill. Central.

Brethren wishing the benefit of the privilege granted must call at the General Ticket Office, S. East corner Clark & Lake sts, Chicago Ill. and make themselves known as members of the German Baptist church; and that they are going to their conference in Iowa, near Waterloo, and procure their tickets. The Ill. Central R. R. Company will carry members attending the Annual Meeting at the following rates: Pay full fare going; return for one-fifth. They will get a certificate at the meeting to return; this they must show when they buy their return tickets, which they get at one-fifth of the regular rates.

E. K. Buechley
Enoch Eby.

We invite the attention of those who think of attending the Annual Meeting to the following invitation.

Brethren and Sisters: As we have been trying to make all necessary preparations in order to accommodate all those who may wish to pay us a visit at the coming A. M. We hope the brethren will avail themselves of the opportunity, and try and be with us.

E. K. Buechley,
Cor. Sec'y.

We intend having a Lovefeast in the Montgomery branch, Ind, co, Pa. on the 11th of June; meeting to commence at 3 o'clock P. M. at bro. J. W. Spichers, 20 m's, N. E. of Ind. The usual invitation is extended.

By order of the brethren.

H. Stichler.

CORRESPONDENCE

Correspondence of church news solicited from all parts of the Brotherhood. Writer's name and address required on every communication as guarantee of good faith. Rejected communications or manuscript used, not returned. All communications for publication should be written upon one side of the sheet only.

For the Companion.

Brother Samuel Lutz, on the 27th of January last, met with a severe accident; being thrown from the railroad track by an engine. From the description he gives us he suffered intensely; but through the mercy of God and the care of kind friends he was again restored. His near approach to death, and his almost miraculous preservation, brought him to serious reflections and induced him to compose the following for our columns.

"Thou hast granted me life and favor and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit." Job 10: 12.

By my late visitation, and miraculous escape from instant death by divine interposition, I am made to exclaim in the language above quoted.

Notwithstanding my impression that death was nigh at hand, and go I must from time, I found sustenance and consolation in the happy-making thought, that I, for a long while, had striven to serve the Lord in his own appointed way; and that my hope for eternal felicity was anchored in the Savior's love and mercy. I felt entirely resigned to the will of the Lord —be it life or death—having my assurance grounded in the hope of a happy resurrection, through redeeming mercy, and the shed blood of Christ our Redeemer applied to my soul.

Dear friends and brethren in the Lord, we are taught by the Apostle Paul, in substance, that hope is the "anchor of the soul"; so in like manner prayer is the Christian's life. Through prayer we can commune with God; and it is thereby that we can make our wants known to him; therefore, let us be steadfast in prayer, and pray without ceasing. It is alone through fervent and earnest prayer, that our souls will be sealed and blessed with God's Holy Spirit. We are taught to ask and we shall recieve; to seek and we shall find; to knock and it shall be opened unto us. To be ashamed to pray, or to perform any of God's requirements, is exceedingly sinful; and of such, Christ says, he will also be ashamed. All disobedience is sin; "and the wages of sin is death." 'If a man love me' says Christ, "he will keep my commandments."

It is an uncertain time to call upon the Lord, at the instant of death; therefore let us look to "the shepherd and bishop of our souls," and strive to have our names written in the Lamb's book of life, ere death snatches us from time, or our senses are distracted by disease.

God made man but a little lower than angels; and crowned him with honor and glory far above any other of his earthly creatures. The purpose of man's exalted station was, to magnify and glorify his Creator, God; and to be capacitated to the enjoyment of heaven and eternal blessedness after death. To those who fulfil the purpose of their creation, God has said "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Yea, "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," for all them that love him and do his commandments.

Death, through sin, has entered the world, and all flesh must die; and after death the judgment. The Bible teaches that "man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble; he cometh forth like a flower and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not." The Christian would not that the hours were slow that keep him from his God.

Let us therefore be "steadfast in the faith," putting on "the whole armor of God," pressing onward to the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus; by which means we can at all times, under all circumstances and trials, withstand the wiles of the devil who "goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour" by his worldly and glittering delusions.

The Lord deals with these he loves, and those who love him, as with children, by afflictions—visitations—and reproofs innumerable; and ofttimes severe, but always for good. Herein, dear brethren, let us consider the patience of Job; and strive to imitate his example to the will of God, so that when we are made to endure affliction, like that of your feeble brother, and many others, we can joyfully exclaim "Thou, O God, hast granted me life and favor, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit," by the humbling of our flesh, and making us heirs and joint heirs with our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; which is the sincere prayer of your unworthy brother in the Lord.

SAMUEL LUTZ.

Shirleysburg, Pa.

NOTE. As we abridged the foregoing article, it is due to brother Lutz to say that he expressed his gratefulness to friend Peter M. and sister Catharine Bare, for their kindness to him during his sufferings.

Brother Henry; Inasmuch as church news seems to be very interesting to the readers of the Companion, and also edifying to the church, I will give a report of a trip, that I and brother Jeremiah Foust made to Jefferson Co., Pa., a distance of 80 or 90 miles. While we hear of brethren objecting sometimes, to brethren giving in their reports of travel, the stopping places, and the little incidents pertaining thereto, I shall therefore omit all these, and give what we think might be of interest, and general edification. In doing so I will in the first place say that we left home on the morning of the 28th of April, and arrived at the house of our friends, Thomas Nedrow and Francis Baker, (now brethren) on Saturday evening; and on that evening we commenced our labors, partly among a strange people, and in a strange land.

We went there by invitation, and although we had no members there, but two boys, the kind people opened to us their house to preach in, which was large and convenient for the occasion. We commenced the worship of God by singing and prayer; and then made a few remarks in relation of our coming among them; and in doing so we told them that we did not come there to preach anything new; only that which was preached eighteen hundred years ago by Jesus Christ and his apostles: and this we intended to do, God being our helper. We told them that our object was to take them away from the discipline and doctrine, and traditions of men; and to bring them back to the days of the apostles.—We hoped therefore they would bear with us, and not be hasty in condemning us: pointing them to the law and testimony, telling them that if they at the conclusion of our meeting could point out unto us a way that was more apostolic, we were willing to surrender our opinions and take up that which was more in accordance with God's word. During our short stay with them, from Saturday evening until Thursday, we tried to preach to them in the simplicity of the gospel seven discourses; showing what we believed to be the teachings of the Savior and his apostles.—While laboring among them, we had good order; and good attention to the word preached; and generally good attendance. I take the liberty to remark (not that we want to eulogize but think in justice to the people there I must express the feelings and the convictions of my mind,) no where can I in all my travels, recollect where the people received us more courteously and kindly entertained us than there; and for tnis they have our thanks, and our prayers. While we had many pressing invitations we tried to make ourselves as useful as we could, and visited a few of them, among whom were Samuel and Jacob Sufalls, (formerly from Somerset Co., Pa.,) and others whose names we have forgotten. But we repeat again, that we thank them, and especially our friend Lundon, who at the water showed us great kindness that we could more conveniently get our candidates to the water. We hope the Lord will reward him. We baptized six persons and two were there which makes eight members, principally young persons. We therefore ask for the prayers of God's people in their behalf, that they may hold out faithful; and would earnestly urge upon the laboring brethren in Indiana and Armstrong Cos. to pay them frequent visits. I think much good could be done there, in the name of the holy child Jesus. How forcibly the Savior's language came to my mind where he says: "The harvest is great but the laborers are few."

As my article is getting rather, lengthy, I will bring it to a close; and in conclusion say with Paul: May the grace of God, and communion and fellowship of the Holy Ghost, rest and abide with all the Israel of God, henceforth and forever.—AMEN.

DAVID D. HORNER.

Dear Editor: Our District Meeting of Northern Ind., came off on the 5th and 6th inst. to general satisfaction: perhaps more so, than any held prior to this. The fact is, every thing must be learned, before it can be carried out with success. Knowledge, therefore, stands preeminent: practice and experience give perfection. It will be interesting to the friends of the spreading of the Gospel, to hear that this meeting appointed a Committee of three, to see to it that the calls for preaching outside of organized churches are filled; and, for this purpose, five hundred dollars shall be raised within the year, to defray the expenses. Last year, two brethren had been chosen to fill the calls: this being an experiment, of course, it could not well be perfect; and, therefore, an other plan has been adopted. But my conviction is, little can be effected, unless brethren hold a series of meetings in a place. The one meeting practice, in our times, is of the same effect as the one plowing practice—especially where the ground has been overrun for many years by the wild beasts—or, if cultivated at all, has been sown with tares, and obnoxious weeds.

The friends of education will be pleased to learn, also, that an offer has been made by the town of Bourbon, in Marshall Co., Ind., on the Pittsburgh and Chicago R. R. of a house, built for a college at a cost of $8.000, with an obligation of $2.500 to finish the same, ready for occupation as a school, to be the property of the Church of the Brethren; if they will teach said school. D. M. has appointed three brethren to look after this offer. and, if all right, to accept the same.

The readers of the Companion, are aware of the late action of the of the brethren at Antioch, Ind., in regard to a "high school;" (as it is termed.) Now, among the many obstacles that presented themselves, that of—How shall the money be raised for said project? was not the least. By the above offer, said difficulty is at once removed; for nothing more is required than to accept and occupy; and I trust the A. M. will not hesitate to improve this opportunity to give it its sanction, for I think the matter has been long enough before the Brotherhood for consideration. Now let a trial be made, and see what brethren can do in imparting more than common education; since there is no holding back any longer: the force of experience rushes along like a mighty stream of water.

It is impossible to bring the Church back into the "Wilderness," (or make it unknown before the world,) since God in his providence decreed that 1200 days, (years,) should be the number of her exile; and the late war has closed that number, when the principles of the Church had to be declared before Governors and Magistrates. Then why should we not embrace every opportunity that may present itself, to become more useful to our fellow men?

It is true, that there is here and there a brother yet, that glorious in his want of education; and yet makes no conscience to pick up knowledge from those who have paid for it, either by dear experience, or direct schooling. The best that can be said of such is, that they are inconsistent, and time may bring them all right.

There are two principles in man that can not be annihilated or destroyed while man is in a sane mind—a desire for knowledge—and a desire for riches, the one is intellectual possession, and the other temporal possession. Knowledge is primary or first; for without it, even the things of this world, termed riches, can not be obtained. Now if it is not wrong to gain knowledge for that purpose, it can not be wrong to have knowledge in the arts and sciences; as this gives intellectual enjoyment, whereas the things of this world only give carnal enjoyment: that of the former may be lasting as eternity, and the latter only serves for time.

For the benefit of those who honestly oppose education, if they will permit me to reason with them, I would say: if a man makes good use of his education, you can have no objection; and, if an educated brother preaches a good gospel sermon, you like it better than if one uses up the time to little purpose, as is sometimes the case. Now, to gain the object, you make choice of the most intelligent, as well as the most devout brother for a speaker; and when he is chosen, he must study himself to become an approved workman, and if he does not do it, you will soon say when he gets up to speak: "if he only will make it short." Now this makes it evident that education is necessary, in which you agree with me, only in the amount of it we perhaps differ. I say: prosecute your study, until you arrive at that pitch that you can look down on yourself, and see how little you know, comparatively, to what yet is beyond your reach, for which you have to wait until this mortal shall have put on immortality; and humility will be the result, instead of exaltation, which it is feared education will produce. The Gospel speaks perhaps as much of the danger of the riches of this world, as it does of the wisdom of this world; yet there is but very little conscientiousness shown about the first, while there are perhaps more brethren in danger of losing their eternal all by riches than by their high education: not, however, by the possession of riches, for they are the gift of God, but by not making use of the same for the benefit of mankind, both for their temporal and spiritual wants. To make myself better understood, and that my brother's blood may not be required at my hands for not warning him when in danger, I will ask, for instance, if fifty or a hundred dollars are to be raised in a church for its use, and brethren whose property is worth three or four thousand dollars pay 50 cents or a dollar, and the brother that is worth from ten to fifty thousand pays a dime, or even a dollar, does this brother come up to Paul's direction, "according as the Lord hath prospered him"? and if not, does not the word of the Lord stand against him? And such brethren there are everywhere, as far as my knowledge and observation extend. And even some of these seem to be afraid that a high-school will be the downfall of the church; whereas, they themselves are the heaviest weight that the church has to bear. But now charity demands of me to say "Father forgive them; for they know not what they do." And if they repent, and make use of the means as those did for whom Christ prayed, their sins also shall be forgiven; and the Spirit shall lead them into all truth; and without it the case of Ananias stands open for them.

Now I have placed two things side by side, (though imperfectly), and if one can prove to be a curse, so can the other by abuse, or an improper use thereof. And if the riches of this world can be made a blessing to thousands, so can knowledge and education if imparted to others, and not hoarded up for selfish purposes.

F. P. LŒHR.

Brother Henry: Please notice that we, the Brethren composing the Boon river branch, Guthrie county, Iowa, intend, the Lord willing, to hold a lovefeast at my house, on the 28th and 29th of May: 1½ a mile North of Panora. We extend a hearty invitation to the brethren and sisters generally, and especially to the min istering brethren.

Brethren desiring to be with us, and coming from a distance by public conveyance, will come to Dexter on the Chicago & R. Island Road. By letting me know in time, they will be conveyed to place of meeting, as there is no staging across at this time. By order of the church.

B. E. PLAINE.

Queries.

Brother Henry: We intend having our lovefeast in the Berlin branch, Somerset Co., Pa., on the 19th of June, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. The usual invitation is given. By request. F. FORNEY.

Will some Brother or sister, give an explanation, on the 20th verse 3th chapter of Mark's gospel, which reads thus: "And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom hehath chosen, he hath shortened the days."

DIED.

We admit no poetry under any circumstances in connection with obituary notices. We wish to use all alike, and we could not insert verses with all.

April 29th at his father's residence, in Liberty Township, Adams Co., Ill., of Lung and Spinal disease, JOSEPH RHOADS, Jun., the youngest son of brother Joseph and sister Susan Rhoads; aged 20 years and nearly 5 months. The subject of this notice was afflicted three months; and little did the bereaved family think that the icy hand of death was so soon to lay the object of their fondest hopes low in the dust. We deeply sympathize with the afflicted family in their distress; but they mourn not as those who have no hope. We tried to improve the occasion by using 2nd Cor. 1: 3, 4, to the consolation of the afflicted family and a large congregation of sympathizing friends. May the good Lord season this sore affliction to their and our good.

DAVID WOLF.

April 4th MARY ANN SNIVELY, daughter of Carl and Gottlob Wilhelm, of Defiance Co., Ohio; age 21 years, 11 months, and 6 days.

DAVID SHONG.

Near Dwight, Livingston Co., Ill., April 27th, with spasms. JAMES SCOTT, son of D. and A. E. RILING; aged 18 years, 4 months, and 27 days. He was found dead in his bed in the morning, supposed to have died with one of those spells to which he was subject for 8 years. He was unusually well for three or four weeks before his death; planted a great many fruit trees &c a few days before he died and went home to rest. By request.

J. S. BURKHART.

In Sulpehocken, April 16th, EMMA, twin child of George and Anna BUCHER; aged 3 years, 3 months, and 5 days.

GEO. BUCHER.

In Waterloo Iowa, April 23rd, JOHN J. BOYER, (son-in-law of brother John, and Bar Speicher;) aged 35 years. Disease, Consumption. Left without any preparations for that solemn event.

MARTIN BUEGHLY.

(Visitor Please copy.)

January 4th in Newton Township, Miami Co., Ohio, brother JOSEPH LONGANECKER, aged 74 years, 10 months and 9 days.—Funeral services by brothers Jesse Studabaker and——Mohler, from Rev. 22: 12.

G, W. WHITMER.

Of Palsy, March 11th, at the residence of his son-in-law Christian Dovenbarger in Baileyville, Ogle Co., Ill., STEPHEN PUTTERBAUGH, (formely of Washington Co., Md.) aged 75 years, 5 months and 5 days.—When taken sick he said "I do not want to get well, I want to die and go to Jesus."

Buried March 14th. Funeral sermon by elder Henry M. Martin from Rev. 22. 12 and 14.

JOHN H. MIDDLEKAUFF.

In Boston Co., Iowa, March 18th, MINNIE LUCINDA, infant daughter of brother W. J. H. and sister Amelia BAUMAN, aged 1 year, 9 months and 6 days. Funeral services by S. Johnson and the writer from Fuke 18; 15, 16.

JOHN RIDENOUR.

In the Grasshopper Valley congregation, Kansas, April 11th, ALBERT ELMER, son of brother Reuben and sister Lydia MICHEAL; aged 1 month and 8 days. Disease, Lung fever. Funeral attended by brother Christian Hollar, from John 5: 25.

May the 4th, at the residence of his son-in-law, in the Middle Creek branch, Somerset Co., Pa., brother JACOB GOOD; aged 82 years, 11 months, and 6 days. His remains were brought to his old home in the Berlin branch, where he had been a consistent member and faithful deacon for many years; and was buried in the presence of a large concourse of people. Funeral discourse on Rev. 14: 13. (Visitor please copy.)

Ephraim Cober.

In the North Fork Wild Cat congregation, Tippecanoe Co., Ind., April 27th, ELIZABETH, daughter, of John and Elizabeth FELIX; aged 8 years, 4 months, 5 days. Disease, Measles and Typhoid fever. Many friends followed the lamented to the grave. The parents are both members of the church of the Brethren. Funeral services by Isaac Cripe from Isa. 40: 6, 7.

In the same district, May 8th, ESTHER, daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth WAGNER; aged 15 years, 8 months, and 13 days. Disease, Measles. Funeral services by Jacob Wagner and Isaac Cripe.

Sarah Anderson.

In the Nettle Creek congregation, Wayne Co., Ind., on the 13th of April, at the house of his brother-in-law, John Werking, brother JOSEPH DELL; aged 47 years, 6 months, and 28 days. Brother Joseph was a worthy member. He leaves several children; none, however, small. His wife died some 10 or 12 years ago, and, most of the time since, he was in poor health. Consumption finally closed his earthly career; and with it, we hope, all his sufferings ended. Funeral services by the Brethren, from Amos 4: 12.

In the same congregation, on the 3rd day of May, brother FREDERICK DILLING; aged 56 years, 6 months, and 14 days. He, too, died of Consumption; and for a long time previous to his death had poor health. Brother Dilling's walk and conduct in life was that of a deeply devoted Christian; honest and upright in all his dealings; kind and affectionate as a husband and father; and as a deacon in the church, and superintendent of our Sabbath school, his labors were such as to gain for him the confidence of the entire church. But in the midst of his usefulness, God, who does all things well, called him home. The church is required to give up one of its brightest ornaments: and our dear sister and her two little daughters are required to surrender him on whom they had hitherto reclined for support; but God has promised not to forsake them in their affliction. Funeral services by the brethren from Rev. 14: 13. David Bowman.

THE

Christian Family Companion,

Is published every Tuesday, at $1.50 a year, by Henry R. Holsinger, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren, sometimes known by the name of "German Baptists," and vulgarly or maliciously called "Dunkards."

The design of the work is to advocate truth, expose error, and encourage the true Christian on his way to Zion.

It assumes that the New Testament is the Will of God, and that no one can have the promise of salvation without observing all its requirements; that among these are Faith, Repentance, Prayer, Baptism by trine immersion, Feet Washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Communion, Charity, Non-conformity to the world, and a full resignation to the whole will of God as he has revealed it through his Son Jesus Christ.

So much of the affairs of this world as may be thought necessary to the proper observance of the signs of the times, or such as may tend to the moral, mental, or physical benefit of the Christian, will be published, thus removing all occasion for coming into contact with the so called Literary or Political journals.

Subscriptions may begin at any time.

"I am the Door."

"I am the door;" come in, come in,
And leave without thy load of sin.
The night is dark, the storm is wild;
O venture in, thou stranger child.

"I am the door;" come, gently knock,
And I will loose the heavy lock
That guards thy Father's precious fold;
Come in from darkness and from cold.

"I am the door;" no longer roam;
Here are thy treasures, here thy home;
I purchased them for thee and thine,
And paid the price in blood divine.

"I am the door;" my father waits
To make thee heir of rich estates;
Come, dwell with him and dwell with me,
And thou my Father's child shalt be.

"I am the door;" come in, come in,
And everlasting treasures win;
My Father's house was built for thee,
And thou shalt share that home with me.

Passing Away.

Nothing should engage the human mind more than these two little words, "passing away." It is astonishing with what rapidity life passes. How the seconds, minutes, hours, days, months and years follow each other in rapid succession: carrying with them the life, the beauties of nature, and the hopes of this world, into the dreamless land of forgetfulness. When we look over the rough and rugged earth, we behold the beauties of nature approaching—the earth clothed in a vesture of green—the trees of the forest are holding forth their beautiful green leaves—the orchards teeming with silvery flowers—vegetation revives—flowers expand—and nature becomes clothed in a garb of verdure. The feathery tribes are warbling their sweetest anthems of praise over the beauties of nature. All these charming amusements would seem to speak as though they were of a lasting and durable nature; but alas! how fickle are these entertainments. How soon does the frosty hand of death sweep along with a silvery snow and cover over our fading existence! Yea, everything that mortal eye can gaze upon must pass away. The bright sky, with all the glittering array of stars—the golden sun that daily rolls through the cloudless ether, casting its refulgent rays over hill and dale, will soon sink beneath the horizon, never more to rise. Oh! how strange! how unutterably strange that all these bright things must cease to exist! All this does but teach us, in glowing characters, that we, too, must pass away. This we have already learned by observation.

When we take a retrospective view of the past few years, how many do we thus remember, who then were with us but are with us no more. They have passed from earth away, to witness the revelations of eternity. Their smiling countenances that we so oft beheld in public places, or in the sanctuary, are now asleep in death's cold embrace. It seems, indeed, but a short time since we all felt the buoyancy of youth—the influence of paternal love—the sweet counsels of friends and relations—who now sleep in the narrow confines of the tomb. Fearful mortality! Man is truly compared to the summer flowers that snap in the morning breeze; and his life to "a vapor that appeareth for a little season and then vanisheth away." Oh! then if all external things must perish, and heaven and earth pass away, is there anything that the mind reflects upon, that will not pass away? Methinks there is a voice that whispers so gently to the ear—the soul—yes, the soul, the immortal part of man, will never die. It must live through all the ceaseless ages of eternity, either in the habitation of bliss, or in that place of torment where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

Oh! happy, thrice happy are we, if we have obeyed the holy mandates of king Jesus—when we can but entertain the glorious and happy thought, that our names are inscribed in the Lamb's book of life, and that we shall dwell amongst the happy throng, who are replenishing themselves with the bread of life, surrounding the throne of the majesty on high, with the perpetual "song of Moses and of the Lamb." Well might inspiration say: "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the mind of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Oh! then, fellow pilgrims, you who have vowed allegiance with me to king Emmanuel, let us not get weary in well doing, because trials and temptations intercept our pathway; but let us be "abounding in the works of the Lord:" ever "looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith." Oh! ye who are neglecting precious moments to come to Jesus, let me kindly entreat you to meditate upon these words—"passing away." Do you really mean to pursue a rebellious life against your Savior, thus squandering your precious time for the sake of gratifying your lusts?

Pause, and reflect upon the fearful malediction that is pronounced against the ungodly and sinners. How terrible must the approach of death be to those who are careless and unconcerned! Reader, you may not wish to reflect upon such a dark and gloomy picture. You may be anticipating long years of worldly pleasure. But alas! how soon may death issue his irresistible summons! and if unprepared for an inheritance with the righteous, you will have to hear the dreadful declaration: "Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." How can you bear this horrible declaration from the lips of him who died the ignominious death, that you and I might become the happy recipients of his kingdom. Oh! then, make haste and come to Jesus. Secure a mansion at the right hand of the Father's throne; so that, when the judge comes he may bear the book of life, with your name enrolled on its fair pages. Such is the desire of your young writer.

God's Word about Wealth.

1. The Bible warns men against seeking to be rich. "Labor not to be rich." "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth."

2. It shows us the danger of striving to be rich. "But they that will be rich fall into a temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition."

3. It declares that it is almost impossible for a rich man to be a Christian. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." "A rich man shall hardly enter the kingdom of heaven."

4. It instructs us to pray against riches.—"Give me neither poverty nor riches."

5. It avers that it is impossible to serve both God and riches. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

6. It pronounces a woe upon the rich. "But woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation."

7. The Scriptures assert that covetousness is idolatry, and that the covetous and idolaters are excluded from heaven. "For this ye know, that no * * covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." "Mortify, therefore, your members, which are upon the earth, * * and covetousness, which is idolatry."

8. And it predicts the miserable end of men who persist in attempts to serve God and mammon. "Go to, now, ye rich men! Weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your silver and gold is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire."

With these averments and scripture quotations before us, we are prepared for the statement of some definite principles in regard to the acquisition and use of property.

1. We are to be diligent, unwasteful, hospitable, and ready to distribute.

2. We may use for ourselves and families such dwellings, clothing, food, help, recreations, &c., as are necessary for health, education, useful occupation, and ability to serve most effectually our Maker and our fellow-men.

3. We are to give as the Lord prospers us, for the aid of the poor and the needy, the support of civil and religious institutions, the establishment and support of churches, schools, hospitals, asylums, &c., the circulation of Bibles and tracts, the spread of the gospel, and the conversion of men.

4. But we are not permitted to amass and hoard property, with the view of becoming or being esteemed rich. If the texts quoted do not show this, they do not seem to mean anything.

It will be asked, what constitutes wealth or riches? It may be defined as an abundance beyond what our employment or necessities, and the necessities of those dependent upon us, require in the community where our lot is cast.—Such an abundance is a superfluity, which is another word for riches. It is against such selfish accumulation and such unreasonable possessions that our Savior uttered the malediction, "Woe unto you who are rich."—L. Tappan.

Destructive Fire.

We copy the following from the Pilgrim for the information of our readers. Æ.

Bonsack Botetourt Co. Va.

I here record one of the most distressing disasters that it has ever fallen to my lot to notice. The destruction by fire of the capital of our county. The fearful and devouring element was first communicated to a stable—the work of the vile incendiary—in the west end of the town. A fine gale in the West rapidly increased the conflagration, taking in its course some of the public buildings, then house after house, and street after street, fell before its raging and destructive power, till every store and every hotel, and the private residences of forty or fifty families were laid in ashes, thus reducing, in the space of a few hours, to penury and want, those who were in independent and comfortable circumstances. Now instead of the enjoyment of the comfortable mansions, and the comforts and luxuries of affluence, we see hundreds of suffering and destressed beings without food, and with little raiment, standing guard over what little household goods they were able to rescue from the disastrous flames, to protect them from those around who were there for the purpose of rapine and plunder—modern Neroes who could rejoice, and sport with the tortures of suffering humanity.—In scenes like these, we have in miniature form, what is anticipated when the "Heavens shall be on fire," and the earth issuing from every pore the devouring fluid. How suddenly and how surely, the condition of these poor, suffering creatures changed from the hights of the world's enjoyment, to the extremity of suffering and want.

So in that day shall those who are not looking for it, while cheerfully and pleasantly pursuing their several avocations of life, be plunged into the depths of anguish and despair. "Two shall be grinding in the mill, one shall be taken and the other left, two shall be in the field, one shall be taken and the other left."

"This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy, the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow;
There's nothing true but Heaven."

B. F. MOOMAW.

Truth.

Truth presents everything just as it is It is an evangelical sense, and all important. It alone, will give character to an individual, more than all other qualities put together. It is of itself a rich inheritance, of more value than mines of silver and gold. It discovers opening mines of richest knowledge.

Every person wishing to be respected, must be known; and he only can be known, who speaks the truth from his heart, and acts it through life. We scarcely know what to believe or whom to trust. We may guess at others, but as we do not know, we cannot respect them; for, oftentimes, like pirates, they sail under false colors. Nothing is beautiful except truth exists in it. Truth is glorious wherever found. It is altogether the lovliest and fairest among all qualities. It is the glory of youth and the diadem of the aged.

It is essential to happiness both in this world and in the world to come. How much hard feeling and trouble could be avoided, if we would all trample the mask of hypocrisy beneath our feet; and reject with scorn, all feelings which might induce us to speak, or act a falsehood.—The temple of truth should be resting within our bosoms, and every person knows that if we have our tongues guided so as to speak the truth at all times, we will be happy, and will not disgrace those by whom we are surrounded, by talking about them, and telling what is not true.

Maggie Waldsmith.

Resurrection of Christ.—M. de Pressense says: "The empty tomb of Christ has been the cradle of the Church; and if in this foundation of her faith the church has been mistaken, she must needs lay herself down by the side of the mortal remains, I say, not of a man, but of a religion." A prettily poetic way of saying what Paul long ago uttered none the less forcibly.—Read it in 1 Cor. 15: 17, 18.

For the Companion.

To a Company of Young Believers.

I wrote to you a fortnight ago, because then it was one year that you broke away from the bondage of sin, annulled your covenant with hell and opened the inner temple of your being to the incoming of the All-holy. I write to you to-day, because this afternoon it will be one year that you were buried with Christ in baptism by the hands of our beloved brother A.——B——. I deem it expedient to commemorate that eventful day by sending you an epistle that will bring the past into the present, and quicken your hearts with that sense of obligation and love which was so pervasive and influential a year ago. To be rightly baptized is to make a great stride heavenward, for it is no less than to be dead to sin and alive to holiness, and being, characteristically and symbolically, in the likeness of Christ's death and resurrection. To be baptized evangelically is to be sealed with the signature of Heaven; & to exemplify, constantly & consistently, what is signified by such a seal, is to be finally and eternally saved. The baptism that allows an unregenerate heart to sink in the sacred laver, putting no restriction on the dominating worldward inclinations, is like uniting in wedlock two hearts that have all their life-time been at bitter enmity and open strife. Hateful and malicious as were the Jews, they were not diabolical enough to decree Christ's interment while he was yet alive. They wanted his death to glut their envy and revenge, and God wanted the same as an expression of his hatred to sin and love to sinners, and that so heinous a crime as the murder of the world's Redeemer might be forgiven. In his death they saw no prophecy fulfilled, nor import as to the future of the church. God saw in what was as essential to his purpose, and the sinners weal, as his death. Christ was slain for sin by sin, thus preparing him for his grace, that we may have a type of our relation to sin when qualified for his grave, that we may have a type of our recollection to sin when qualified for burial into his death by baptism. I thought it meet to review the solemn ceremony that planted you in Christ's "garden of spices," and its import retrospective and prospective, interspersing such reflections as may aid you in realizing the grand significance of your covenant.

I saw you descend into the stream, that day more than usually full and musical, and saw you kneel before the great God to utter your vows of love and unchanging fidelity. I heard you most solemnly and deliberately declare your purpose to live for the glory of God only, and be a consistent, uncompromising witness to the Truth while life continues. That was truly a most eventful epoch in your history, around which gathered interests which the eldest born of heaven cannot comprehend. The principalities and powers of the spiritual realm "desire to look" into the dread mysteries of sin, and the blessed mysteries of peace, which are shadowed forth in baptism. Not only were there many witnesses on the shore beholding your consecration, but "an innumerable company of angels" were looking down from the sunny heights of glory, rejoicing that another little band of precious souls, in the bloom of life, were "added to the church," If it awakens a jubilee with the citizens of the New Jerusalem, when "one sinner repenteth," how much more when the penitent is "sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession." Eph. 11: 13, 14. Yea, more. One party to the covenant made and sealed that day, is the Triune Jehovah.—When an agreement is made, two parties at least are required. One year ago you ratified an agreement in your baptism, with the everlasting God, which may never be violated. The most tremendous penalties are attached to the infringement of our initial vows. It was made for Eternity, and to break it, is to break favor with Eternal Love, and open up a sevenfold depth of condemnation and woe. The vows under which we pass through the first vail into the Holy Place, are most sacred, and to trifle with them, or dally with what they forbid, is fearfully profane. What Christ's burial and resurrection had in them for the race, baptism has in it, figuratively, for the individual. Jesus passed through the grave to the life in which he is to abide forever, and so we pass through baptism into that communion with God and the saints, which is to be our joy and our glory through eternity.—Christ was the Son of God and the underived Life before his burial, but he could not be the life of the world unless he break the bars of his prison and rise from the dead. So we, although the life of Christ be in us before baptism, and prompt us to union with the church, we have not that relation to God, and that conformity to Christ's history, which is required in order to be saved. Christ was not the world's Redeemer, in the fullest sense, until he rose again, so we are not reconciled, in the complete sense of the term, until we have in our religious history what accords with Christ's descent into the tomb and emergence from it. I saw you sink down into your watery grave, the liquid element burying you out of sight, and my whole soul went up to God in prayer, as did many others beside, for your preservation and growth in the new life in which you so solemnly vowed henceforth to walk. Then your names were written in "the Lamb's Book of Life," and I hope will never be blotted out. Your repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, having been the product of the Holy Spirit, you were baptized into the "one body," which is vitalized by the one Unoriginated Life, and gave yourself so wholly to him into whose death you were buried, that the innate pride and selfishness of the heart is prevailing as though it were not. As did Noah, you trod a new earth after baptism, looking upon the countless corpses of bloated, death-smitten sins, from which you turn away with loathing, offering sacrifices of thanksgiving of that which God has reserved from the deluge. While the water was applied, the blood of Christ was all-prevailing to secure what was conditioned by the external ordinance Divine veracity failed not to obliterate the first transgressor's name from the records of holiness and filial relationship, when the forbidden fruit was plucked, and he will not fail to reverse the primal procedure, which sin necessitated, and give us a name in the records of redemption, when through faith in Christ we yield to the commandment given to test our allegiance, and bring into its observance what Christ brought to his burial—a nature wholly crucified, and therefore wholly under the will of God. Adam was thrust out of Eden because he brought unbelief and rebellion to an act in which God has suspended his curse. We are admitted into the Restored Paradise by baptism because we bring to it a holy faith and submissive will, and because it is an ordinance on which God has suspended his blessing.

One year since, two weeks ago, you began in earnest to consider your way, to sink down helpless under your burden of sin, to hate the character that made Jesus bleed, and to turn your face toward the cross. Your wretchedness was such as a proper sense of sin only can beget. All that you had ever suffered, or saw others suffer, was forgotten in the insupportable agony that seemed to flame from above and beneath. You just felt as a sinner ought to feel who has slain the Lord of Life and Glory. You were whelmed in the inward abysses of damnation, too deep in the sense of guilt to hope for favor even from the All-merciful. Thus you wrestled and prayed and wished and doubted until the day-break of grace, and he, "who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shone in your hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4 : 6. Gradually the perception of the great truth of salvation by faith settled your souls in "the place that passeth all understanding."—Faith lulled your souls to rest in the merits of Christ. But the very sinews of that faith were determination to forsake all, and an unfaltering resolution to render obedience to all the commandments of the Gospel In proportion as you hated sin with perfect hatred, you loved him who died for sin, and who is able and willing to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by him. And love always prompts to subjection and sacrifice in such form as may be most pleasing to the person loved. So it was with you a year ago, and so, I am confident, it is still. Your sins crushed you like a mountain, they burned like a quenchless fire, and stung like an ever-biting viper. While at work during the day, you shed many a tear, heaved many a sigh, and many an earnest, burdened petition went up to the Throne of Grace for some token of Divine recognition. Sin was the fearful gloom that enveloped you wherever you went. You felt sin to be yourself, and guilt and retribution a righteous and necessary accompaniment. It was the last you thought of when you fell asleep, and the first to confront and appall you when you awoke. You knew not that Jesus is as ready to reveal himself to the truly penitent, sin-loathing, holiness-craving soul instantly, as after a course of deepest self-searching and humiliation extending through years. The grace needed for baptism is giveen at the moment we believe, and nothing but our sin and blindness and stupidity prevent our believing in the same hour that we repent. Coming to Jesus contravenes not the laws of mind, but allows the dark shadow that rests upon the soul to dispel in conformity with natural mental processes. The work is Divine, fundamentally, but is accommodated, in its inception and progress, to our individuality. That some believe sooner than others is not owing to the arbitrary operations of the Spirit, but to the original and contracted idiosyncracies of the subject of converting grace. Your sins came rolling upon you, and surging around you, in countless numbers and forms, and each one flamed with Divine wrath. They seemed so numerous and so heinous, that you were terrified, and your fear kept Jesus at a distance because it kept you from believing. At last, you knew not how, the shadows vanished, the star of hope grew bright, and you could discern a smile of love on the stern features of Divine Justice. Your consuming desire to see Jesus was consummated in the blessed sense of a new creation within. Faith in him that "died for our sins, was buried, and rose again," also fitted you for that typical burial wherein we obtain the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. Then you vowed eternal fealty to Jesus, and hasted to unite yourself sacramentally to him, through the wedding-institution which he has authorized. After believing on Christ with all the heart, there is nothing gained by deferring baptism. To claim having faith of such quality and measure as will suffice to take us to heaven, and yet postpone baptism under pretence of becoming more worthy of so holy an ordinance, is a glaring absurdity. Such persons need instruction in "the just principles of the oracles of God." He that believeth is fit to be baptized, because he takes the life of Christ into the act, and this connects the ordinance with the concomitants of his own baptism, namely, the opening of heaven and the descent of the Holy Ghost. Christ was endowed with the Spirit after he was baptized, and it is folly to expect that God will do more for us than for his Son.

One year ago, while kneeling in the Mamela, you promised great things to God, and God promised great things to you. With the trusting love of a bride, you confessed your faith in Jesus as the Son of God. Acts 8 : 37. You confessed your confidence in the Gospel of Christ as the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. Rom. 1 : 16. You promised henceforth to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather, by a godly life, to reprove them. Eph. 5 : 11. Translated out of darkness into the marvelous light of grace, you can no longer have fellowship with devils. 1 Cor. 10 : 20. You promised unswerving fidelity to Jesus, in the face of all forms of opposition and seduction, to the close of life. Rev. 2 : 10., latter part of the verse. And to bear witness to the truth at all times, at the cost of friends, and property, and reputation, and life itself, as your Lord and Master has given you an example. John 18 : 37. Matt. 10 : 37—39. You were "baptized for the dead," you were baptized for the living, and the millions in heaven and the millions in hell, call upon you to live worthy of your high calling. You were baptized into all that Christ purchased for us by his life and death and resurrection, and assumed the solemn obligation to task your utmost powers to make his work the power of salvation to the souls of perishing sinners. In baptism you consented to join heart and hand with him in the diffusion of his Life, and burden yourselves with his concern to consummate "the travail of his soul" in the rescue of the devil's captives. When you went down with Christ in his burial, you promised, on his dear bleeding corpse, that you would press him to your heart evermore, and make it the grand aim of life to multiply the copies of his character in those whom your influence can reach. You have bound yourself to Jesus by an oath as solemn and inviolable as was ever registered in the court of heaven. And if you renounce it, there will be "a great cloud of witnesses" to testify against you. Glory be to God in the highest, that the Incarnate Jehovah has become the life of your life, and that nothing is farther from your mind than to undo the momentous transaction of a year ago. The Divine solicitation for your heart was responded to, and complemented by the cordial surrender of your body ; and the ravishing spiritual joys and dear reciprocities into which your baptismal nuptials introduced you, are deeper, fuller sweeter, to-day than when first tasted. This is as it should be, you have not been so watchful as not to make a misstep now and then, but this, instead of weakening your purpose to live unto God, has bowed you down to bathe your Savior's feet afresh with penetential tears, not unmixed with joy too holy and sweet for the coarse palate of the world. Christ sees his image in your tears, and breathes into your heart of hearts the comforting promise that at no distant day he will, with his own hand, wipe them all away. An evil thought, a hasty word, coldness of heart, has often taken you to the secret closet, to find God ready to forgive, and relume your sky with the hues of the emerald rainbow that environs his Throne Rev. 4 : 3- Satan has not been idle in the first year of your Christian life; but so absorbed in Divine things have you often been, as you lay in the embrace of Divine love, that not unfrequently the tempter came, and found "nothing in you." But his sleepless malice also knew every unguarded moment, and well did he use his opportunity. His arrows have been many and fiery but they touched not the citadel. While your various trials have been sharp, and temptations most invitingly baited and adroitly plied, your purpose never wavered. "Jesus only," in every possible emergency, has been the watch-ward of your soul in every conflict ; and more of Jesus, is still the invocation of every heart-throb. To follow on to know the Lord, and to cleave to him despite all hindrances, is still the reigning impulse of you all.

And what are the promises which God obligated himself to fulfill in baptism ? Not only did you bind yourself to him : he equally bound himself to you. As you had to promise him all—your soul, your body, your time your talents, your possessions, your influence—so he has promised you all in his power to bestow. Oh dear fellow-pilgrims, beloved in Christ, burns not your heart within you, that the Eternal Majesty has not only made an inventory of the illimitable riches of his glory, and ofiered it to your acceptance, but has "confirmed his promise by an oath, that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Heb. 6 : 17, 18. It is matter for profound astonishment, to men and angels, that God should condescend to take cognizance of us at all, save to punish us for our sins ; but where shall we find words to express our amazement and gratitude at the "exceeding great and precious promises" in which his faithful word abounds ? 2 Peter 1 : 4. The greatest evil in the universe is sin. It has raised insurrection in heaven, depopulated its blessed mansions, dug hell and gorged its flaming caverns with deathless spirits, closed the gates of Paradise on earth and in heaven, wrought confusion and suffering and woe which God alone can measure, and concentrated all its venom and horror and darkness and agony on the Person of the dear Son of God. Oh who can fathom the malignity and hatefulness of sin ! This was the dreadful element that ruled your nature. In repentance and faith this dominating power was broken up, and in baptism God promised to remit, or cancel, whatever his book of remembrance contained against you. The highest, most august Agent in the realms of God—even a fellow-Deity—was promised you as an abiding gift in baptism. The Third Person in the Holy Trinity was sealed over to you in the water, to be your Light, your guide, your comforter, and the inward appropriating power of the fullness and beatitude of Jesus. Can you believe your eyes when you read these words ! Does it not seem a promise too great and precious for a sinful worm ! And yet this Gift of gifts God bestowed upon you when you were "buried with Christ in baptism. Acts 2 : 38. He has promised, moreover, to make you an accredited heir of heaven, in being "born of water and of the spirit." Having given you Christ as a ransom, and the spirit as the Dispenser of his bounty, he has bound himself "freely to give us all things." Rom. 8 : 32. His most costly treasures he has already emptied at our feet ; will he withhold minor blessings ? Having revealed himself outwardly in his Son, drawn you by his grace, and re-established his government within you by his Spirit, will he not also carry on the work, so that it will be complete at his glorious advent ? Phil. 1 : 6. If he so loved you as to shroud his Divinity in clay, commit himself to a course of unexampled devotedness and humiliation, and face the scorn and persecutions of earth, the opposition and buffetings of hell, in order to remove every obstacle that lay between you and Divine righteousness, and open wide the door and heart of heaven for your entrance; having done all this, will he not also make good all the pledges connected with your baptism, without which his death would be in vain, and your service naught? As certainly as his name is Jesus, will he save you from your sins, work into the core of your being more and more of his goodness and purity, and at last lift you into such a state of Divine likeness, into such nearness to his Throne, into such possession of his royal wealth and grandeur, that you will wonder through eternity at the significance and compass of the ceremony in which you "put on Christ." He has promised to take you into fellowship with himself, and the other Persons of the Godhead, and eternally maintain the most close, personal, and blissful intimacy with you John 14: 23, 17: 21—23, 1 John 1: 3, Rev. 3: 20. Such companionship as God has promised, and the unspeakable joys that flow from it, has in it the height and depth, the length and breadth, the exhaustless fullness and sweetness of his unbroken, ever blissful eternity! The pillars of his Throne must give way before his promises fail. If you will be lost in the end, it must be that with your own hands you have torn your title deed to heaven. God will overlook your infirmities, because you are finite, and only partially sanctified. He could not overlook the failure of the least jot or tittle in his engagements, for he is God, and must needs be without "variableness or shadow of turning." If you feel lonely in your journey Zionward, open Christ's love-letter at Matt. 28; 20, and comfort your drooping heart with his gracious promise to be with you always, even unto the end. Every step you take he is with you.—The sense of desertion proves not that Jesus has forgotten his promise. In every sorrow he offers you his sympathy. Under every cross his Almighty arm is ready for your support. Your sighs bring his seal on your foreheads, Ezekiel 9: 4, your tears he gathers into his bottle. Ps. 56: 8, your hairs are all numbered. You are the Lord's and he has bound himself with an oath to do all for you that eternal love and power can do. And when you are done toiling, and struggling, and praying, and weeping, you are to "inherit all things." Rev. 21: 7. There is no end to the promises he has engaged to fulfill, if you are true to your baptismal vows.

"He Riseth from Supper."

John 13: 4.

As it is said, "He riseth from supper," we naturally conclude it was upon the table at the time he rose to perform the great act of humility. If the meal had not been placed upon the table, we would suppose that he arose from the table only.

Feet-washing is an act performed by true believers—not for the purpose of removing filth—but as an act of humility and obedience; and as John says: "He riseth from supper" we think the supper should be on the table at the time of feet-washing, so that we can obey his precepts in following the example given us.

As we are commended to be 'as wise as serpents and as harmless as doves," we ought to be very careful, so as to show that we are united. If we shoud have a different order in different places, in traveling to and fro people will notice the discrepancy, and will say we profess one thing and practice another; therefore we should be "perfectly joined together in the same judgment."

Rejoice.

"Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice." Philip. 4: 4.

Brethren, we have reason to rejoice that we can worship God without molestation or hindrance, and that there is none to make us afraid; and that we still have the good will of the world. Therefore, I say, Rejoice. But we should not only rejoice in this; but, that Jesus has made a way possible that we may be saved; and that we have access to the same, for we read that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Oh! what love, what joy, what consolation to the believer. Then we should rejoice in his love. But sinners can't rejoice in the Lord: they can only rejoice in their sports, which will shortly have an end. There are no smiles of a Heavenly Father on the sinner. Then turn, sinner, turn from your evil ways. Seek salvation while it is yet to be found, and while there is mercy to be given. O, sinner! there is no joy in hell, whither thou art going as fast as the unlocked wheels of time can hurry you along! Oh! flee, flee to Jesus; and he will save you—take away all your sins—and then you will become a new creature. Then you can say with the language of the Apostle, "Rejoice in the Lord always, again I say rejoice." Feeling myself very lonesome this evening, I thought I would write a few lines for the Companion. I think they will not be amiss. Brethren pray for me. Yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

Dancing.—I neverknew a decidedly pious Christian—I mean one that lived in the enjoyment of religion—who, at any time advocated or practiced the sinful amusement of dancing. I have seen many who, in their sinful days, passionately loved the sin of dancing, but after their conversion could not look upon it with the least degree of allowance. To my mind the strongest evidence of the sinfulness of dancing—outside of the Bible, which condemns "all ungodliness and worldly lusts," together with all kinds of revelings—is, that it is so popular with the fashionable world & formal, backslidden Christians, and that it is one of the chief means by which the enemy of souls succeeds, in so many instances, in enticing young and unwary Christians from the strait and narrow way that leads to heaven.—Boswell,
